

COCKLE'S
CASES AND STATUTES ON EVIDENCE

S. L. PHIPSON

FOURTH EDITION

جامعة بيرزيت

Birzeit University

معهد الحقوق

INSTITUTE OF LAW

Donated by :

عائلة المرحوم زهدي حشوة

00-00-2009

Acc: 262282

J. Hashwa

المجلد
زمن في عشرة

166388

SPC

KD

7498

.C63

1938

RBK

	PAGE
MATTERS OF WHICH PROOF IS NOT ALLOWED— continued.
(a) MATTERS WHICH PARTIES ARE ESTOPPED FROM ALLEGING— continued.
(2) Estoppel by Deed	49
Even in respect of Recitals	49
(3) Estoppel by Conduct	50
As in Case of Tenants	53
(b) MATTERS STATED WITHOUT PREJUDICE	54
In Course of attempted Compromise	54
The whole Correspondence covered	56
Such Matters admissible for certain Purposes	57
(c) MATTERS WHICH ARE IRRELEVANT	58
Being neither Facts in Issue nor relevant thereto	58
MATTERS OF WHICH PROOF IS ALLOWED	58
(a) FACTS IN ISSUE	58
Those alleged and denied on the Pleadings	58
Direct Evidence	58
(b) FACTS RELEVANT TO THE FACTS IN ISSUE	58
Relevancy generally	58
Facts sufficiently connected with Facts in Issue	58
Circumstantial Evidence	61
(1) Motive, Preparation, Subsequent Conduct, etc.	61
Relevant as to Act or Conduct alleged	61
Circumstances and Position of the Parties	64
Relevant as to Act or Conduct alleged	64
Although no direct Evidence given	64
(2) Parts of the Transaction, or "Res Gestæ"	66
Relevant to other Parts of the same Transaction	66
Acts done in same Transaction	66
Must be at same Time substantially	67
Words or Statements accompanying such Acts	67
Must be at same Time substantially	68
May be the last Item of Transaction	69
During Continuous Transactions	70
Showing State of Health, etc.	72
Documents may be Part of Transaction	75
Explaining Acts done respecting them	75
Acts and Statements of Persons acting jointly	79
In Execution or Furtherance of Common Purpose	79
(3) Statements made after the Transaction	80
Irrelevant generally	80
Complaints relevant in Cases of Rape, etc.	80
Only admissible to Corroborate Prosecutrix	82

MATTERS OF WHICH PROOF IS ALLOWED—continued.(b) FACTS RELEVANT TO THE FACTS IN ISSUE—continued.

(3) Statements made after the Transaction— continued.
Whether her Consent material or not	83
Even when in Answer to simple Question	83
Not admissible in other Cases	83
(4) Course of Business	88
Relevant as to private Business Transactions	88
But no Presumption of Regularity therein	88
(5) Possession of Property	89
Relevant as to Ownership of Land or Goods	89
Evidence of Seisin in Fee Simple	90
Even of Adjoining Land	91
Relevant as to Larceny or Receiving	92
In case of Things recently stolen	92
Relevant as to Knowledge of Larceny	94
On Charge of Receiving Stolen Property	94
(6) Cohabitation and Reputation of Marriage	95
Relevant as to Marriage generally	95
Even in Case of Living Persons	95
But not to Establish Case for Bigamy or Divorce	96
(7) Conduct of Parties on other Occasions	98
Conduct, Character and Convictions generally	98
Conduct generally irrelevant to Act in Question	102
Unless actually connected therewith	103
Relevant generally as to State of Mind	104
Although subsequent to Transaction in Issue	106
Relevant to Fact charged in Rape, etc.	108
(8) Character of Parties	109
In Civil Cases, irrelevant generally	110
Relevant when Character is in Issue	111
As in Cases of Defamation	111
Relevant as to Damages sometimes	113
As in Cases of Seduction and Breach of Promise	113
In Criminal Cases, Prisoner's Character relevant... ..	114
But only if he gives Evidence thereof	114
General "Reputation" only is admissible... ..	114
Not Disposition or particular Facts	114
In Cases of Rape, etc. Prosecutrix's Character relevant	118
(9) Convictions of Parties	119
Relevant as to Commission of the Crime	119
In Proceedings by Convict or his Representative	119
(10) Opinion of Witnesses	120
Irrelevant generally	122
Relevant as to Matters of Science or Art	123
If Witness a skilled "Expert"	123

	PAGE
MATTERS OF WHICH PROOF IS ALLOWED— continued.
(b) FACTS RELEVANT TO THE FACTS IN ISSUE— continued.
(10) Opinion of Witnesses— continued.
Judge to decide whether Witness competent	124
Relevant as to Identification, Condition, etc.	127
Although Witness not an "Expert"	127
THE BURDEN OF PROOF	129
Burden of Proof and Right to Begin generally	129
(a) AFFIRMATIVE AVERMENTS	131
Burden on Party alleging	131
The "Affirmative in Substance"	132
Not the "Grammatical Affirmative"	132
A Question of Substance, not of Words	132
(b) NEGATIVE AVERMENTS	133
Burden on Party alleging, generally	133
Until shifted by Evidence	133
Burden sometimes on other Party	136
As when Facts, peculiarly within his Knowledge	136
Or when Exemption, Qualification, etc., in Question	139
THE RIGHT TO BEGIN—
Plaintiff generally Entitled to Begin	139
If Burden of Proof of any Facts is on him	139
Or if Damages he Claims are Unliquidated	139
Position is Settled by Pleadings	140
It cannot be altered by Admissions at Trial	140
In Criminal Cases Prosecution begins	140
THE QUANTUM OF PROOF	141
In Civil and Criminal Cases generally	141
Differences between such Cases	142
Cogency and Weight of Evidence	144
Pre-appointed Evidence	144
Corroborative Evidence	146
(a) CORROBORATION REQUIRED BY LAW	146
Required by Statute, in Twelve Cases	146
Not necessarily by Two Witnesses	147
Except in Four Cases	147
May be by Admissions or Documents generally	147
(b) CORROBORATION REQUIRED BY PRACTICE	148
(1) Evidence of Accomplices	149
(2) Claims against deceased Persons' Estates	148
(3) Divorce Cases	148
Written Evidence	148
Required by Statute in a few Cases	148

	PAGE
THE NATURE OF EVIDENCE REQUIRED FOR PROOF...	154
(a) DIRECT EVIDENCE	154
Evidence of Facts perceived by Witness himself ...	154
With any of his Five Senses	154
Such Evidence generally required	155
Hearsay Evidence inadmissible generally	155
Even when Witness of Fact Dead	155
Or when he made Statement on Oath	157
Statement on Oath must be at Trial	159
(b) HEARSAY EVIDENCE	160
Facts which Witness heard from Others	160
Admissible only in Exceptional Cases	160
Where there is Special Necessity	160
And special Guarantee of Credibility	160
(1) Admissions	161
Informally or unintentionally made by Parties ...	162
By Words	162
Even of Narrative or descriptive Nature	163
By Silence	163
Where natural to expect a Reply	163
By Conduct	166
Even as to whole Case	166
By Prisoners	167
As by Words, Silence or Conduct when accused ...	167
By Agents	181
If made within Scope of Authority, only	182
By Privies	186
As by previous Owner of Plaintiff's Land	186
Admissions may be made to any Person	187
Admissions are Primary Evidence	187
Provable without Notice to produce Document ...	187
(2) Confessions	188
Admission of whole Offence charged... ..	188
Must be "free and voluntary"	190
Without Threat or Promise by Person in Authority	190
Prosecution must prove it to be so	190
Otherwise it is inadmissible	193
But Facts discovered in consequence provable ...	197
"Threat or Promise"	193
Of Temporal, not Moral, Nature	194
Connected with Result of Prosecution	193
Not of mere Collateral Convenience	195
"Person in Authority"	196
Must be connected with Prosecution... ..	196
Medical man attending Prisoner is not such	196

PAGE

THE NATURE OF EVIDENCE REQUIRED FOR PROOF
—continued.

(b) HEARSAY EVIDENCE—continued.

(3) Declarations in Course of Duty	200
Admissible after Declarant's Death	200
If made by Person in Regular Course of Duty	200
May be in Duty temporarily assumed	201
Must be Contemporaneous	202
Without Interest to Misrepresent	202
Admissible only as to Declarant's own Acts	202
And as to Facts it was his Duty to Record... ..	203
Not Evidence of Collateral Facts stated	203
Although customary to state such Facts	204
May be written or verbal	204
(4) Declarations against Interest	205
Admissible after Declarant's Death	205
If against "Pecuniary" Interest	205
As Entry that Debt due to Declarant was paid	205
Whole Statement is admissible	205
Even as to Collateral Facts	205
Although they may be in Declarant's Interest	207
If against "Proprietary Interest"	209
As Statement by Landholder that he was a Tenant	209
Admissible against Privies in Estate only	210
Not Evidence against Reversioner	210
(5) Declarations as to Pedigree	211
Admissible after Declarant's Death	211
If made by Family Relations	211
As to Relationship, or Facts on which it depends	211
And if made "ante litem motam"	211
That is before Controversy, though no Lawsuit	215
Only admissible in "Pedigree Cases"	217
That is where Pedigree or Relationship in Issue	217
Only Statements by Relations admissible	218
Not Statements by Confidential Servants	218
May be mere Family Tradition or Hearsay	219
Or even of Absence of Family Information	220
May be by Words, Conduct, or Inscriptions	220
As by Treating Child as Legitimate	220
Or by Inscriptions on Tombstones or Portraits	220
Although actually inscribed by Strangers	221
If made with Family Approval	221
(6) Declarations as to Public or General Rights	221
Admissible after Declarant's Death	221
If made by Persons of Competent Knowledge	221
As to Existence of Reputation of such Rights	221

	PAGE
THE NATURE OF EVIDENCE REQUIRED FOR PROOF
—continued.
(b) HEARSAY EVIDENCE—continued.
(6) Declarations as to Public or General Rights—
continued.
Only where Right is Public or General	224
Not in Case of multiplied Private Rights	224
Only where Statement is as to Right itself	227
Not as to Facts supporting or negating it... ..	227
Not necessarily by Residents	228
But must be by "Competent Declarants"	228
As Justices having Jurisdiction in Place	228
(7) Dying Declarations	232
Admissible after Declarant's Death	232
If made by Person killed	232
In Trials for Homicide of Declarant	232
If no Hope of Recovery at Time of Declaration	232
Not admissible in other Cases... ..	234
Hopelessness of Recovery may be inferred	234
Deceased must have been competent as Living
Witness	237
So, Infancy of Deceased might exclude Declaration	238
(8) Declaration as to Contents of Wills	238
Admissible after Declarant's Death	238
If made by Testator himself	238
As to his Testamentary Intentions	238
As to his previous Testamentary Acts	238
In proof of Contents, Identity, etc., of Will	238
But not to prove Execution, etc., of Will	242
(9) Evidence given in former Proceedings	243
Admissible after Witness's Death	243
Or in certain other Events	243
If both Proceedings between the same Parties	243
And involve the same Issues	243
Admissible if Parties are Privies of former Parties	244
Present Parties must claim under former Parties... ..	246
Not sufficient that they claim in same Right	246
(10) Statements in Public Documents	247
Admissible generally	247
As Proof of Facts stated	247
If made under Legal Duty by proper Officers	247
Statements therein Evidence against all Persons	247
Even mere Recitals admissible	247
Including those in Public Acts of Parliament	251
But not in Private Acts of Parliament	253

	PAGE
THE MODE OF PROOF	255
(a) ORAL EVIDENCE	256
The General Rule stated	256
(1) Witnesses	256
Their Competency	258
Their Compellability	258
Competency and Compellability not always identical	258
Husbands and Wives as Witnesses	260
Competency depends on Understanding or Intelli- gence	264
Generally on Capacity to understand Oath... ..	264
No fixed Limit for Age of Witnesses	264
Children may give Unsworn Evidence	264
If they do not understand Oath	265
But understand Duty of Speaking Truth	265
Insane Persons not necessarily incompetent	265
Character and Extent of Insanity the Test	265
At Common Law, Husbands and Wives incom- petent	267
Except in Cases of Violence, etc., to one another	267
Even then not indispensable Witnesses	268
By Statute, they are in some Cases competent	268
Even then not compellable unless so provided	268
(2) Swearing of Witnesses	271
Oath or Affirmation	271
Generally required	271
Children may give Unsworn Evidence	271
Prisoners may make Unsworn Statements	271
Oath not a peculiarly Christian Ceremony	271
Taken in accordance with Religious Belief	271
Affirmation allowed if no Religious Belief	271
Or if Oath contrary thereto	271
Forms of Oath and Affirmation	276
(3) Examination of Witnesses	278
(a) Examination-in-chief	278
Questions must be on relevant Facts	278
Leading Questions generally inadmissible	278
But necessary and admissible to some Extent	279
As on Matters introductory or undisputed	279
Witness may refresh Memory by Documents	279
By Documents made by himself	280
Although he has no independent Recollection	280
This does not make a Document Evidence	280
But Opponent may inspect, and cross-examine on it	280
By Documents made by other Persons	281

THE MODE OF PROOF—continued.(a) ORAL EVIDENCE—continued.(3) Examination of Witnesses—continued.(a) Examination-in-chief—continued.

If made under Witness's Observation	281
“ Experts ” may refresh Memory from Books, etc.	282

(b) Cross-examination 282

Questions need not be on strictly relevant Facts	282
--	-----

Leading Questions generally admissible	282
---	-----

Questions may be as to the Credibility of Wit- nesses	282
---	-----

Their Conduct, Character, and Convictions	283
--	-----

Opposite Party entitled to cross-examine Wit- ness	284
--	-----

But not if merely called to produce Document	285
--	-----

Nor if called by Mistake	285
---------------------------------	-----

Leading Questions admissible	285
-------------------------------------	-----

Even if Witness apparently favourable	285
--	-----

Attention should be called to discrediting Facts	286
--	-----

To afford Opportunity of Explanation... ..	286
--	-----

Party calling Witness not entitled to cross- examine	288
--	-----

Or to Discredit his own Witness	288
--	-----

Even if Witness a hostile Litigant	289
---	-----

Unless allowed by Judge to cross-examine	288
---	-----

But never to discredit generally	289
---	-----

(c) Re-examination 289

Confined to Matter of Cross-examination	290
--	-----

Unless further Questions allowed by Judge	290
--	-----

Leading Questions inadmissible	290
---------------------------------------	-----

(4) Contradiction of Witnesses 292

(a) Of Parties' own Witnesses 292

By other Evidence of same Facts	292
--	-----

Not by General Evidence to Discredit	292
---	-----

(b) Of Opponent's Witnesses 292

By Cross-examination as to Credit	292
--	-----

Not generally by Evidence to Discredit	293
---	-----

(5) Discredit of Witnesses 295

Evidence to Discredit sometimes allowed 296

(a) To prove Previous inconsistent Statements 296

In Case of Opponent's Witness	296
--------------------------------------	-----

Such Evidence admissible without Leave	296
---	-----

Attention must be called to the Occasion	299
---	-----

In Case of Party's own Witness	299
---------------------------------------	-----

By Leave of Judge if Witness “ hostile ”	299
---	-----

Attention must be called to the Occasion	299
---	-----

THE MODE OF PROOF—continued.

PAGE

(a) ORAL EVIDENCE—continued.

(5) Discredit of Witnesses—continued.

- (b) To prove Prejudice or Bias 301
 As, in Case of Relationship to Party 301

- (c) To prove general Bad Character for Veracity 302 Evidence of general Reputation, not specific Acts 302

- (d) To prove Previous Convictions 302

(6) Matters Excluded by Public Policy or Privilege ... 303

- Public Policy 304

- (a) Affairs of State 304

- (b) Information for Detection of Crime 308

- (c) Statements Bastardising Offspring 309

- Privilege of Witnesses 312

- (a) Criminating Questions and Documents ... 312

- Danger of Prosecution must be substantial ... 312

- Witness sometimes compellable to answer ... 314

- But generally protected from Proceedings ... 314

- Questions tending to show Forfeiture privileged 314

- (b) Professional Communications and Documents 315

- Only privileged in Case of Legal Profession ... 316

- But Communications by other Persons privileged 316

- If made to Legal Adviser for Purposes of Litigation 316

- Privilege is that of Client, who can waive it 319

- Communications for illegal Purpose not privileged 319

- (c) State Communications and Documents ... 304

- Privileged when Disclosure injurious to Public 304

- Judge guided by Head of Department

- interested 304

- No other Evidence thereof allowed 305

- (d) Documents relating solely to Party's own Case 322

- Privileged only if not helping Opponent ... 323

- No real Case of Privilege 323

- (e) Documents of Title of Witness not a Party ... 324

- Privileged whether helping Party or not ... 324

- (f) Communications between Husband and Wife 325, 443

- Privileged by Statute 325, 401, 443

- (g) Questions tending to show Adultery of Witness 325, 419

- Privileged by Statute 325, 419

	PAGE
THE MODE OF PROOF— continued.
(b) DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE	326
(1) Production of Documents	326
The "Best Evidence" Rule	326
The Original must generally be produced	327
As "Primary" Evidence of its Contents	327
Whenever its Contents are in Question	329
But not where it is treated merely as a Chattel	329
Nor where Position created only in Question	331
Production on Notice may make Document Evidence	332
Refusal of Production prevents subsequent Production	332
Writings other than Documents need not be pro- duced	333
Parol Evidence thereof may be given... ..	333
Production of Original sometimes dispensed with And "Secondary" Evidence allowed	335
(a) When Original in Possession of Opponent	335
Who refuses to produce it after Notice	335
Notice to produce must give sufficient Oppor- tunity	335
(b) When Original in Possession of Stranger	337
Who lawfully refuses Production	337
But not when he is compellable to produce	338
(c) When Original lost or destroyed	339
After proper Search according to Circum- stances	339
(d) When Original cannot be brought into Court... ..	341
Because it is physically impossible	342
As in Case of Writings on Walls or Tomb- stones	342
Or because the Law does not allow it	342
As in Case of Public Documents	342
As Books of the Bank of England	342
Various kinds of Copies allowed	344
No degrees of Secondary Evidence	345
Parol Evidence admissible though Copy exists	345
(2) Proof of documents	346
Execution must be proved unless admitted	346
(a) Proof of Signature or Handwriting	347
By Person who saw Document signed	348
By Person acquainted with the Handwriting... ..	348
By Comparison with other Writing	350

	PAGE
THE MODE OF PROOF— continued.
(b) DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE— continued.
(2) Proof of documents— continued.
(b) Proof of Sealing and Delivery	351
Presumption if Document purports to be Deed	351
(c) Proof of Attestation	352
Witness must be called if Attestation requisite	352
(d) Proof of date	353
Presumption that Date on Document correct	353
Proof of Execution sometimes unnecessary	353
(a) Ancient Documents	353
If Thirty Years old prove themselves	353
On Production from "Proper Custody"	354
That is any Custody consistent with
Genuineness	355
(b) Documents produced by Opponent	356
If he claims any Interest thereunder	356
Alterations in Documents	357
In Deeds presumed prior to Execution	357
In Wills presumed subsequent to Execution	357
(3) Oral (or Parol) Evidence respecting Documents	358
Not admissible to vary Written "Transaction"	361
If whole Transaction reduced into Writing	361
Parol Evidence admissible for following Purposes	362
(a) To add to mere Note or Memorandum	362
Where verbal Transaction not reduced into Writing	362
As in Case of a written Receipt	362
By showing the other verbal Terms	362
(b) To prove Writing not the true Transaction	363
By showing Matter affecting its Validity	363
As in Case of Fraud or Illegality	363
(c) To prove Collateral Transactions	365
If distinct and not inconsistent	365
But not so as to add additional Terms	369
(d) To prove Writing not yet operative	370
As in case of Conditions Precedent	370
Suspending the Commencement of the Obligation	372
(e) To prove Rescission or Modification	372
Unless Writing requisite to modify	372
As in case of Contracts under Statute of Frauds	372
(f) To prove Customs of general Application	374
Unless inconsistent with the Writing	374
Such as Local or Agricultural Customs... ..	374
Or Trade or Mercantile Customs	375
Either as to Obligations or Terms used	375

	PAGE
THE MODE OF PROOF— continued.
(b) DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE— continued.
(3) Oral (or Parol) Evidence respecting Documents— continued.
(g) To explain the Subject-matter	377
As, to explain "Latent" Ambiguities	377
By Evidence of Circumstances or Statements	377
And to explain "Patent" Ambiguities	379
If not explainable by Construction	379
But not to explain total Blanks	384
Or defective or meaningless Expressions	384
(h) To translate or explain Terms	385
If used with special or unusual Meaning	385
Unless Term has definite Statutory Meaning... ..	385
Private Marks, Symbols, Nicknames, etc., explainable	386
Although not used by other Persons	386
Various Expressions held explainable	386
Evidence inadmissible for certain Purposes	389
(c) REAL EVIDENCE	390
Production in Court of Physical Objects	390
For Inspection by Court	390
Inspection may be ordered out of Court	392
Production never legally necessary	393
Non-production a Matter of Comment	393
But secondary Evidence admissible without Production	393
Although its Weight may be affected	393
Non-production may raise strong Presumption	395
THE ADDUCTION OF PROOF	396
(a) EVIDENCE BEFORE TRIAL	396
(1) In Civil Cases	396
By Affidavits, Commissions, Interrogatories, etc.	396
Agreement or Order necessary	396
(2) In Criminal Cases	397
By depositions before Justices	397
Always taken in Cases of Indictable Offences	397
In accordance with various Statutes	397
The usual Procedure stated	398
(b) EVIDENCE AT TRIAL	399
(1) In Civil Cases	399
Witnesses generally called by Parties	399
They may be called by Judge	399
But apparently only with Consent of Parties	399
Attendance compelled by subpoena	399

THE ADDUCTION OF PROOF—continued.

(b) EVIDENCE AT TRIAL—continued.

(2) In Criminal Cases	400
Witnesses generally called by Parties	400
They may be called by Judge	400
Apparently without Consent of Parties	400
Attendance compelled by Recognisances	400
If witnesses so bound over by Justices	400
Other Witnesses compelled by Subpœna	400

(c) EVIDENCE ON APPEAL ... 401

(1) In Civil Cases	401
Before the Court of Appeal	401
As regards Evidence in Court below	401
By Copies of Affidavits or Judge's Notes	401
Or other Materials Court deems expedient	401
As regards further Evidence	401
By Oral Examination, Affidavit or Deposition	401
On Interlocutory Applications without Leave	401
On Appeals with Leave only	401
Before the Divisional Court	401
By Copies of Judge's Notes	401
Or other Evidence Court deems sufficient	401
(2) In Criminal Cases	401
Before the Court of Criminal Appeal	401
As regards Evidence in Court below	401
By Judge's Notes and Report	401
And Transcript of Shorthand Notes...	401
As regards further Evidence	401
By Examination of Witnesses before Court, etc.	401
By Production of Documents or Things	401
By reference of Accounts, etc., to Commissioners	401

Depositions in Criminal Cases	401
Admissible at Trial in certain Events	401
As when Witness dead or too ill to travel	401
Or if kept away by Prisoner	401
And probably in certain other Events	403
If Witness unable to attend Trial	403
A Party may subpoena Witness without Leave	403
But Court may set aside Subpœna	403
If used for indirect or improper Objects	403
Objection to Competency of Witness	405
May be taken whenever Incompetency appears	405
Even after Witness sworn and questioned	405

PART II.

STATUTES.

	PAGE
ACT OF SUPREMACY, 1558. 1 Eliz. c. 1	409
s. 21. Two witnesses required on charges thereunder ...	409
SHOP BOOK DEBTS ACT, 1609. 7 Jac. 1, c. 12	409
Shop books not to be given in evidence in action for money due above one year, except between merchants and tradesmen	410
STATUTE OF FRAUDS, 1677. 29 Car. 2, c. 3	411
s. 4. Certain contracts to be evidenced by writing	411
7. Creations of trusts of land to be evidenced by writing	411
9. Assignments of all trusts to be likewise in writing ...	411
TREASON ACT, 1695. 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 3	412
s. 2. Two witnesses required on charge of treason	412
BLASPHEMY ACT, 1697. 9 Will. 3, c. 35	412
Two witnesses required on charges thereunder	413
TREASON ACT, 1795. 36 Geo. 3, c. 7	413
s. 1. Two witnesses required on charges thereunder	413
WITNESSES ACT, 1806. 46 Geo. 3, c. 37	414
Witness cannot refuse to answer question tending to show his liability to civil suit only	414
JURIES ACT, 1825. 6 Geo. 4, c. 50	414
s. 23. Court may order that jurors shall have view of place in question in any case	414
24. Men who had the view shall be first sworn as jurors	414
STATUTE OF FRAUDS AMENDMENT ACT, 1828. 9 Geo. 4, c. 14	415
s. 1. Acknowledgment of debt, or claim on simple contract, not sufficient evidence to take case out of Statute of Limitation, unless in writing signed	415
3. Indorsement of payment on note, bill, or other writing, by or on behalf of payee, not sufficient proof to take case out of Statute of Limitation	415
6. No action to be brought on representation as to charac- ter, etc., of any person unless it is in writing signed	415

	PAGE
PREVIOUS CONVICTION ACT, 1836. 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 111...	416
Jury not to inquire into previous conviction until after verdict of guilty; unless person charged gives evidence of good character	416
OATHS ACT, 1838. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105	417
Oath binding if administered in form declared binding by person taking same	417
PARLIAMENTARY REGISTRATION ACT, 1843. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18	417
s. 88. Two witnesses required on charge of personation at elections	417
EVIDENCE BY COMMISSION ACT, 1843. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82	418
s. 5. Order may be made for attendance and examination of witnesses under commissions in parts of realm subject to different laws from that in which com- missions issued	418
7. Privilege as to production of documents	418
EVIDENCE ACT, 1843. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85	419
No witness to be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime or interest	419
BASTARDY ACT, 1845. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10	419
s. 6. Corroboration required on appeals against bastardy orders	419
EVIDENCE ACT, 1845. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113	420
s. 1. Public documents, etc., purporting to be sealed, signed, etc., as directed, to be evidence, without further proof	420
2. Judicial notice to be taken of signature of judges of superior courts	420
3. Copies of private statutes, proclamations, etc., pur- porting to be printed by official printers to be evi- dence without further proof	420
INDICTABLE OFFENCES ACT, 1848. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42...	421
s. 17. Justices to take depositions when indictable offence charged; the same to be read in certain events and conditions at trial	421
18. Justices to read depositions to accused, and, after specified warning, to ask whether he wishes to say anything, and to take down what he says in writing; the same to be given in evidence if neces- sary at trial	422

INDICTABLE OFFENCES ACT, 1848— continued .
s. 20. Justices to have power to bind prosecutor and witnesses by recognizance to prosecute and give evidence, and on refusal to enter into recognizance to commit to prison until trial of accused	422
SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACT, 1848. 11 & 12 Vict.
c. 43	423
s. 9. In summary proceedings any variance between information and evidence, as to time, parish or township, not material if within time or jurisdiction ...	423
14. In summary proceedings burden of proof of certain negatives to be on defendant	424
EVIDENCE ACT, 1851. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99		424
s. 2. Parties to proceedings to be competent and compellable to give evidence generally	424
3. Act not to make husband or wife competent witness nor to compel answer to incriminating question; nor to make husband or wife competent witness in criminal proceedings	424
4. Act not to apply to proceedings in consequence of adultery or for breach of promise of marriage ...	425
7. Acts of State, judicial proceedings, etc., of foreign State or British Colony may be proved by examined or authenticated copies, without further proof ...	425
13. Conviction or acquittal of indictable offence may be proved by certified copy of record	426
14. Public documents admissible in evidence on production from proper custody to be provable by examined or certified copies	426
16. Every person having authority to hear evidence, empowered to administer oath	426
EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT, 1853. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83... ..		427
s. 1. Husbands and wives of parties to proceedings to be competent and compellable to give evidence generally	427
2. Act not to make husband or wife competent witness in criminal proceedings, or in proceedings in consequence of adultery	427
3. Husband or wife not compelled to disclose communication made during marriage	427
ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES ACT, 1854. 17 & 18 Vict.
c. 34	428
s. 1. Writs of subpoena in special form may be issued by Superior Courts to witnesses not within their jurisdiction, but within United Kingdom	428

	PAGE
ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES ACT, 1854—continued.
s. 2. Special order required for such writs	428
5. Act not to affect power to issue commissions	428
6. Act not to affect admissibility of evidence	428
 FOREIGN TRIBUNALS EVIDENCE ACT, 1856. 19 & 20
Vict. c. 113	429
s. 1. Order may be made by Superior Courts for examination of witnesses, etc., in relation to proceedings in foreign courts	429
2. Certificate of ambassador, etc., sufficient evidence on application for order	429
3. Examination to be on oath or affirmation	430
5. Witnesses to have right to refuse to answer or produce documents, as at trial	430
6. Courts having authority under the Act	430
 MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1857. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 ...
s. 13. Decrees and orders or sealed copies of Divorce Court to be received in evidence	430
43. Court may order examination of petitioner, but petitioner not bound to answer question tending to show his or her adultery	431
 EVIDENCE BY COMMISSION ACT, 1859. 22 Vict. c. 20 ...
s. 1. Order may be made by Superior Courts for examination of witnesses, etc., out of jurisdiction of such courts, in relation to proceedings in such courts ...	431
4. Witnesses to have right to refuse to answer or produce documents, as at trial	432
5. Courts having authority under the Act... ..	432
 MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1859. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61 ...
s. 6. On petition of wife for divorce, husband and wife competent and compellable to give evidence of cruelty or desertion	432
 BRITISH LAW ASCERTAINMENT ACT, 1859. 22 & 23 Vict.
c. 63	433
s. 1. Courts within dominions may remit case to court in other part of dominions, for opinion on law applicable therein	433
2. Certified copy of opinion to be deemed correct ...	434

	PAGE
FOREIGN LAW ASCERTAINMENT ACT, 1861. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 11	434
s. 1. Superior Courts within dominions may remit case to foreign court of State with which convention made for such purpose, for opinion on law applicable therein; certified copy of opinion to be deemed correct	434
LARCENY ACT, 1861. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96	435
s. 29. No person liable to be convicted of certain offences if he disclosed same under compulsory process ...	435
85. No person to refuse to make full disclosure as to certain offences; but no person liable to be con- victed thereof if he first disclosed same under com- pulsory process	436
116. On indictment for offence under the Act, jury not to inquire into previous conviction until after verdict of guilty; unless person charged gives evidence of good character	436
COINAGE OFFENCES ACT, 1861. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 ...	437
s. 37. On indictment for offence under the Act, jury not to inquire into previous conviction until after verdict of guilty; unless person charged gives evidence of good character	437
CRIMINAL PROCEDURE ACT, 1865. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18	438
s. 1. Sections 3-8 of the Act to apply to all courts, criminal and others	438
2. If prisoner defended by counsel does not adduce evidence, prosecution allowed to sum up evidence; every prisoner entitled to open case, examine wit- nesses and sum up evidence; but right of reply and proceedings otherwise unaltered	438
3. Party calling witness may not discredit him generally, but, if he prove adverse, may contradict him by evidence or, by leave, prove previous inconsistent statement, the circumstances being mentioned ...	439
4. If witness on cross-examination does not admit previous inconsistent statement, proof may be given thereof, the circumstances being mentioned ...	439
5. Witness may be cross-examined as to previous state- ment in writing without its being shown to him; but his attention must be called thereto before contradic- tion; and judge can require production thereof at any time	439

	PAGE
CRIMINAL PROCEDURE ACT, 1865— continued.
s. 6. Witness may be questioned as to his conviction of felony or misdemeanour, and if he does not admit same it may be proved; certificate thereof being sufficient evidence	439
7. Not necessary to prove by attesting witness any instrument not requiring attestation	440
8. Writing in dispute may be proved by comparison with other proved writing	440
CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1867. 30 & 31
Vict. c. 35	441
s. 3. Justices to ask person accused of indictable offence whether he desires to call witnesses, to take their depositions, and to bind them to appear and give evidence at trial	441
6. Justices to have power to take statement on oath of persons dangerously ill and able to give information as to indictable offence, for perpetuating their testimony, notice and opportunity to cross-examine having been given to any person accused	442
DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE ACT, 1868. 31 & 32 Vict.
c. 37	443
s. 2. Proclamations, orders, etc., issued by the Government may be proved by copies of Gazette, Government printers' copies, or certified copies, without proof of handwriting or position of certifying officer	443
3. Act to apply to Colonies	444
6. Provisions to Act to be cumulative	444
EVIDENCE FURTHER AMENDMENT ACT, 1869. 32 & 33
Vict. c. 68	445
s. 1. Repeal of portions of Evidence Act, 1851 and 1853 ...	445
2. Parties to action for breach of promise of marriage to be competent witnesses; but corroboration required	445
3. Parties to proceedings in consequence of adultery, and their husbands and wives, to be competent witnesses; but no witness bound to answer question showing his adultery, unless evidence given by him in disproof thereof	445
PREVENTION OF CRIMES ACT, 1871. 34 & 35 Vict.
c. 112	446
s. 9. Rules contained in sect. 116 of Larceny Act, 1861, as to previous convictions, to apply to crimes as defined by this Act	446

	PAGE
PREVENTION OF CRIMES ACT, 1871— continued.
s. 15. Intent to commit felony under Vagrancy Act, 1826, may be proved by circumstances or known character of person charged	446
17. (3) In summary proceedings, burden of proof of certain negatives to be on defendant	446
18. Conviction may be proved by record or extract and proof of identity of person; record or extract, in case of indictable offence, to consist of certificate purporting to be signed by officer having custody of records or his deputy, and, in case of summary conviction, of copy purporting to be signed by justice or clerk or officer of court; no proof of signature or official character required; conviction in one part of United Kingdom provable in any other part; conviction before Act provable in the same manner; mode of proving cumulative	446
19. In proceedings for receiving or having in possession stolen property, evidence may be given of finding in accused's possession other property stolen within twelve months; also of his conviction in preceding five years of fraud or dishonesty, if seven days' notice given; in order to prove guilty knowledge [Repealed, but substantially re-enacted, by Larceny Act, 1916, post, xxxix, 503]	447
20. Definition of "crime" for purpose of Act	447
BASTARDY LAWS AMENDMENT ACT, 1872. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65	448
s. 4. Corroboration required on summonses for bastardy orders	448
DIVIDED PARISHES ACT, 1876. 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61	449
s. 34. Corroboration required for removal of paupers	449
EVIDENCE ACT, 1877. 40 & 41 Vict. c. 14	449
s. 1. Defendants and their husbands and wives to be competent and compellable witnesses on indictments, etc., for enforcing civil rights only	449
BANKERS' BOOKS EVIDENCE ACT, 1879. 42 Vict. c. 11	450
s. 3. Copy of entry in bankers' book to be evidence	450
4. Copy not to be received unless proof given by partner or officer of bank that it was made from one of its ordinary books, in its control, and in ordinary course	450
5. Copy not to be received unless proved correct by person who examined it with original	450

	PAGE
BANKERS' BOOKS EVIDENCE ACT, 1879— continued.
s. 6. Bank not compellable to produce book unless by order of judge	450
7. Judge may order inspection and copies of entries for any purpose	450
9. "Bank," "bankers," and "bankers' books" defined	450
SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACT, 1879. 42 & 43 Vict.
c. 49	451
s. 22. (1). Clerk of court of summary jurisdiction to keep register of convictions, orders and other proceedings as directed	451
(2). Register and certified extracts to be evidence ...	451
(4). Entries in register to be entered or signed by justice, with exceptions	451
31. (6). On appeal, when decision not confirmed, clerk of peace to send memorandum of decision for entry on register, copy whereof to be evidence	452
39. (2). In summary proceedings, burden of proof of certain negatives to be on defendant	452
DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE ACT, 1882. 45 Vict. c. 9 ...
s. 2. Documents declared by enactment to be evidence, etc., when purporting to be printed by Government printers, etc., to have same effect when purporting to be printed under authority of Stationery Office ...	453
4. Documentary Evidence Acts to apply to Ireland ...	453
BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT, 1882. 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61 ...
s. 9. (2). Sum denoted by words to be amount payable ...	453
27. (2). Where value at any time given for bill, holder deemed holder for value as regards prior parties ...	453
(3) Holder with lien on bill deemed holder for value to extent thereof	454
30. (1). Every party to bill deemed party for value ...	454
(2). Every holder of bill deemed holder in due course; but if fraud, duress or illegality admitted or proved, burden of proof is shifted	454
54. (2). Acceptor precluded from denying existence, capacity, authority and signature of drawer, and existence and capacity of drawee	454
55. (1). Drawer precluded from denying existence and capacity of drawee	454
(2). Indorser precluded from denying signature of drawer, all indorsements, and validity of and title to bill	454
89. (1). Act to apply to promissory notes, with exceptions	454

	PAGE
MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1882. 45 & 46
Vict. c. 75	455
s. 12. Husband and wife to be competent to give evidence against each other in proceedings by wife for pro- tection of her separate property	455
16. Liability of wife to criminal proceedings by husband	455
CORRUPT PRACTICES PREVENTION ACT, 1883.
46 & 47 Vict. c. 51	456
s. 59. (1). Witness to answer criminating questions, but answers not to be used against him, except for per- jury. Witness answering truly entitled to certificate of indemnity	456
MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1884. 47 & 48
Vict. c. 14	456
s. 1. Husband and wife to be competent, and, except where defendant, compellable, witnesses in criminal proceedings against each other	456
CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1885. 48 & 49 Vict.
c. 69	457
s. 2. Corroboration required for procurement, etc.	457
3. Corroboration required for threatening, etc.	457
4. Evidence of child of tender years may be without oath, under certain circumstances; but corroboration is required	457
CORONERS ACT, 1887. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71	458
s. 4. (1). Coroner to examine on oath all persons having knowledge of facts	458
(2). Coroner to put statement of witnesses into writing, signed by them and him	458
5. (3). Coroner to deliver depositions, etc., to officer of court of trial	458
COUNTY COURTS ACT, 1888. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 43	458
s. 28. Registrar to cause note of all proceedings to be entered in a book; such entries or sealed and certified copies thereof to be evidence, without further proof	458
180. All process to be sealed with the seal of the court; such process purporting to be so sealed to be evidence, without further proof	459
OATHS ACT, 1888. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46	459
s. 1. Person stating he has no religious belief, or that oath is contrary thereto, may make affirmation, of same effect	459

	PAGE
OATHS ACT, 1888— continued.
s. 2. Affirmation to be in specified form	459
3. Oath taken by persons having no religious belief to be valid	459
5. Any person may be sworn with uplifted hand ...	460
ARBITRATION ACT, 1889. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 49	460
s. 8. Party to submission may sue out subpoena, but witness not compellable to produce document privileged at trial	460
INTERPRETATION ACT, 1889. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63	460
s. 9. Every Act to be judicially noticed	460
20. In every Act, expressions referring to writing to include other modes of representing or reproducing words	461
FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890. 53 & 54 Vict. c. 37 ...	461
s. 4. (1). On questions of foreign jurisdiction, Secretary of State to send to court, on its application, his decision, which shall be final	461
(2). Court to send to Secretary of State questions properly framed, sufficient answers to be returned by him	461
PARTNERSHIP ACT, 1890. 53 & 54 Vict. 39	461
s. 2. (3). Sharing profits to be prima facie evidence of partnership	461
14. Everyone who represents himself or suffers himself to be represented as a partner to be liable as such to anyone giving credit in consequence; but continued use of deceased partner's name not to make his representatives liable	462
15. Admission or representation by partner to be evidence against firm	462
STAMP ACT, 1891. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39	462
s. 12. (5). Instruments stamped with adjudication stamps admissible in evidence	462
14. (1). On production of instrument in evidence, notice to be taken of omission or insufficiency of stamp; and if it may legally be stamped after execution payment may be made to officer of court	462
(4). Unstamped instrument not to be given in evidence, except in criminal proceedings	463

	PAGE
SALE OF GOODS ACT, 1893. 56 & 57 Vict. c. 71	463
s. 4. (1). Contract for sale of goods over £10 to be evidenced by writing, unless acceptance of goods or payment	463
MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894. 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60 ...	464
s. 64. (2). Certain documents admissible in evidence in manner provided	464
123. Seaman may prove agreement without producing or giving notice to produce it	464
239. Official log to be kept in every ship; entries therein to be made as soon as possible, to be signed by certain persons, and to be admissible in evidence	464
240. Master to cause to be entered in log certain specified matters	465
457. (1). Burden of proof of justification to be on person sending unseaworthy ship to sea	465
(2). Burden of proof of justification to be on master taking unseaworthy ship to sea	465
691. Depositions of witnesses admissible in legal pro- ceedings under conditions specified	465
694. Document required to be attested may be proved without calling attesting witnesses	466
695. Document declared by this Act admissible in evidence to be evidence of matters stated therein; and examined or certified copy or extract admissible ...	467
697. Burden of proof of certain negatives to be on defendant	467
719. Documents purporting to be issued, etc., by Board of Trade admissible in evidence	467
DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE ACT, 1895. 58 & 59 Vict.
c. 9.	468
s. 1. Documentary Evidence Acts, 1868 and 1882. to apply to Board of Agriculture	468
CRIMINAL EVIDENCE ACT, 1898. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36 ...	468
s. 1. Person charged, and husband or wife, to be competent witness for defence, on application of person charged; prosecution not to comment on failure to give evi- dence; husband or wife not compellable to disclose communication during marriage; person charged may be asked questions criminating as to offence charged, but not as to other offences or character except in three cases; Act not to affect statement of person charged before justices	468
2. Person charged, if the only witness to facts, to be called immediately after evidence for prosecution ...	469

	PAGE
CRIMINAL EVIDENCE ACT, 1898— continued.
s. 3. Fact that person charged is called as witness is not to confer right of reply	469
4. Husband or wife may be called as witness in specified cases without consent of person charged	470
MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903. 3 Edw. 7, c. 36
s. 9. (1). Corroboration required on prosecution for exceeding speed limit	475
PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN ACT, 1904. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15
s. 12. Person charged, and husband or wife, to be competent but not compellable to give evidence	475
17. Child who appears to court to be under any specified age to be deemed under that age	475
18. (3). Person not to be summarily convicted of offence unless wholly or partly committed within six months before information; but evidence may be taken of constituent acts committed previously	476
23. (3). Parents and other persons presumed to have custody, charge or care of child	476
24. Copy of entry in wages book or written statement of employer to be evidence of wages	476
MARINE INSURANCE ACT, 1906. 6 Edw. 7, c. 41
s. 18. (4). Materiality of undisclosed circumstance a question of fact	477
20. (7). Materiality of representation a question of fact	477
21. Contract deemed concluded when proposal accepted, whether policy issued or not; reference may be made to slip, note or memorandum, although unstamped	477
22. Contract inadmissible in evidence unless embodied in policy, either contemporaneously or afterwards ...	477
24. Policy to be signed or sealed; each subscription to constitute distinct contract	478
54. Acknowledgment of receipt of premium by broker conclusive between insurer and assured, but not between insurer and broker	478
88. Reasonableness of time, premium or diligence a question of fact	478
89. Where stamped policy, reference may be made to slip or note in legal proceedings	478

	PAGE
EVIDENCE (COLONIAL STATUTES) ACT, 1907. 7	7
Edw. 7, c. 16	479
s. 1. (1). Copies of statutes, orders, etc., of British possession purporting to be printed by Government printer receivable in evidence	479
(3). Definitions of "Government printer" and "British possession"	479
CRIMINAL APPEAL ACT, 1907. 7 Edw. 7, c. 23	479
s. 3. Person convicted on indictment may appeal to Court of Criminal Appeal	479
4. (1). Court shall allow appeal if verdict unreasonable, or cannot be supported on the evidence, or if wrong decision of law, or any miscarriage of justice; but may dismiss appeal if no substantial miscarriage of justice	479
5. (2). Court may substitute verdict of guilty of another offence	480
8. Judge of court of conviction to furnish to Registrar of Court of Appeal his notes of trial and report giving his opinion	480
9. Court may order production of documents or things, and examination of witnesses, and receive evidence of witnesses including husband or wife; may refer questions to special commissioner for report, and appoint expert assessors; and exercise any powers as in appeals in civil matters	480
16. Shorthand notes to be taken at trial of indictment and transcript to be furnished	481
LIMITED PARTNERSHIP ACT, 1907. 7 Edw. 7, c. 24	482
s. 5. Limited partnership to be registered; otherwise deemed general partnership	482
6. (1). Limited partner not to have power to bind firm	482
7. The Partnership Act, 1907, to apply unless expressly excluded	482
16. Any person may require certificate of registration, or certified copy or extract, which shall be receivable in evidence	482
PUNISHMENT OF INCEST ACT, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 45	483
s. 4. (4). Husband or wife of person charged may be called as witness without consent of person charged	483

	PAGE
PREVENTION OF CRIME ACT, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 59	483
s. 10. (2). Person not to be found habitual criminal unless three times previously convicted and leading persistently dishonest life; or previously found habitual criminal and sentenced to preventive detention	483
(3). Sufficient in indictment, after charging crime, to state that offender is habitual criminal	483
(4). Offender to be first arraigned on crime charged; if found guilty jury to inquire whether he is habitual criminal; such charge not to be inserted unless certain conditions observed	483
(5). Evidence of character and repute admissible on question of leading dishonest life	484
(6). Definition of "crime" for purposes of Act	484
CHILDREN ACT, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67	487
s. 12. (1). Parent or person liable to maintain child or young person deemed to have neglected him if he fails to provide or to take steps to procure food, clothing, medical aid or lodging	487
(7). Copy of policy of insurance certified by officer or agent of insurance company to be evidence of insured person and payee	487
13. Person under influence of drink, in bed with infant when suffocated, deemed to have neglected him	487
14. (2). Person having care of child or young person presumed to have allowed him to be in place for purpose of begging, etc.	487
27. Husband or wife of person charged may be called as witness without consent of person charged	488
28. (1). Justices may take deposition of child or young person out of court if attendance would involve serious danger	488
29. Deposition admissible at trial, if attendance would involve serious danger, under certain conditions	488
30. Evidence of child of tender years may be without oath under certain circumstances; but corroboration is required	489
32. (3). Person not to be summarily convicted of offence unless wholly or partly committed within six months before information; but evidence may be taken of constituent acts committed previously	489
38. (2). Parent or guardian, or person liable to maintain child or young person, presumed to have custody of him; person to whose charge he is committed presumed to have charge of him; person having possession or control of him presumed to have care of him	489

	PAGE
CHILDREN ACT, 1908—continued.
s. 120. (3). Holder of licence deemed to have committed offence under section unless he shows due diligence	490
123. (1). Where person brought before court appears to be child or young person, court shall take evidence as to age, and age presumed or declared by court shall be deemed true age	490
(2). Where alleged that person by or in respect of whom offence was committed was child or young person or under or above certain age, presumed that he was as appears at court	490
124. Copy of entry in wages book or written statement of employer to be evidence of wages	490
 COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 69
s. 17. (1). Certificate of incorporation conclusive evidence as to registration, etc.	492
23. Certificate of shares or stock evidence of title thereto	492
33. Register of members evidence of matters to be inserted therein	492
71. (2). Minute signed by chairman of meeting evidence of proceedings thereat	492
(3). General meeting deemed duly held and proceedings thereat valid, unless contrary proved	492
87. (2). Certificate that company entitled to commence business conclusive evidence	492
111. Copy of report of inspectors evidence of their opinion	492
168. (1). Order of court on contributory conclusive evidence that money due	493
174. Court may summon any person to give information, examine him and require him to sign answers and produce books, etc.	493
175. Court may order examination of directors, promoters, etc., who shall answer all questions, notes whereof shall be signed by persons examined and may be used in evidence against them	493
220. Books and papers of company and liquidators evidence in winding-up	493
225. All courts, etc., to take judicial notice of signatures, seals and stamps on documents in winding-up	493
236. (1). Documents purporting to be orders or certificates of Board of Trade to be evidence and deemed to be such orders or certificates without further proof	493
(2) Certificate signed by President of Board of Trade conclusive evidence of fact certified	493

	PAGE
OATHS ACT, 1909. 9 Edw. 7, c. 39	493
s. 2. (1). Oath may be administered in specified form without kissing book	494
s. 2. (2). In case of person neither Christian nor Jew, oath to be in any lawful manner	494
PERJURY ACT, 1911. 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6	495
s. 1. (6). Materiality of statement on which perjury assigned a question of law	495
13. Corroboration required on prosecution for perjury or subornation or any offence punishable as such	495
14. Certificate purporting to be signed by clerk, etc., sufficient proof of former trial without proof of signature or official character	495
15. Forms of oath or affirmation immaterial if adminis- tered in form accepted or declared to be binding by person sworn	496
16. (2). Act not to apply to statement without oath by child	496
OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT, 1911. 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 28	496
s. 1. (2). On prosecution for spying accused may be con- victed if his purpose appears from circumstances, conduct or character; and any sketch, plan, document, etc., deemed to be for prejudicial purpose unless contrary proved	496
CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1912. 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 20	497
s. 7. (6). Husband or wife of person charged under Vagrancy Act, 1898, may be called as witness with- out consent of person charged	497
CHILDREN (EMPLOYMENT ABROAD) ACT, 1913. 3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 7	498
s. 3. (2). Defendant presumed to have caused or procured or allowed child or young person to go abroad for purpose of singing, etc., if certain facts proved	498
(4). Husband or wife of person charged may be called as witness without consent of person charged	498
CRIMINAL JUSTICE ADMINISTRATION ACT, 1914. 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58	498
s. 28 (1). Record or extract by which summary conviction provable may consist of copy of minute or memo- randum in register, purporting to be signed by clerk of court	498

CRIMINAL JUSTICE ADMINISTRATION ACT, 1914— continued.
s. 28. (2). Provisions of sect. 30 of Children Act, 1908, enabling evidence of child of tender years to be without oath, to apply to other offences	499
(3). Husband or wife of person charged with bigamy may be called without consent of person charged ...	499
(4). In proceedings before court of summary jurisdiction to enforce payment of money, signed certificate or statutory declaration, as specified, to be evidence	499
 BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1914. 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59	500
s. 15. (8). Debtor to answer all questions at his public examination, notes whereof are to be signed by him and may be used in evidence against him	500
109. (5). Court may take evidence viva voce , by interrogatories or commission	500
137. London Gazette to be evidence of facts stated in notice inserted in pursuance of Act, and conclusive evidence of receiving order or adjudication	500
138. Minute of proceedings at meeting of creditors signed by chairman evidence without further proof; and meeting deemed duly held and resolutions or proceedings thereat duly passed or had	501
139. Any petition, order, certificate, instrument, affidavit or document, appearing to be sealed, signed or certified, to be evidence in all legal proceedings	501
141. In case of death of witness deposition to be admitted	501
142. Court to have seal; judicial notice taken thereof ...	501
143. Certificate of Board of Trade to be conclusive evidence of appointment of trustee	501
144. Documents purporting to be issued by Board of Trade and sealed or signed as directed to be evidence without further proof; certificate signed by President of Board to be conclusive evidence... ..	501
166. Statement or admission by any person in compulsory examination or deposition not admissible as evidence against him under sect. 85 of the Larceny Act, 1861	502
 EVIDENCE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1915. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 99	502
s. 5. Documentary Acts, 1868 and 1882, to apply to Army Council	502

	PAGE
LARCENY ACT, 1916. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50	503
s. 43. (1). On charges of receiving, to show scienter , the fact that other property stolen within twelve months before the date of the offence charged; and that, within five years before that date, the defendant was convicted of dishonesty, may be proved	505
(2). Witness protected if he make first disclosure of certain offences on compulsory examination	504
(3). Admissions made on compulsory examinations in bankruptcy protected	504
MINISTRY OF PENSIONS ACT, 1916. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 65	504
s. 6. (5). Documentary Evidence Acts, 1868 and 1882, to apply to Minister of Pensions	504
AIR FORCE (CONSTITUTION) ACT, 1917. 7 & 8 Geo. 5,
c. 51	505
s. 10. (5). Documentary Evidence Acts, 1868 and 1882, to apply to Air Council	505
ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE ACT, 1920. 10 & 11
Geo. 5, c. 81	505
s. 15. Questions of foreign law to be decided by judge, not jury	505
TRIBUNALS OF INQUIRY ACT, 1921. 11 Geo. 5, c. 7 ...	505
s. 1. Powers of Special Tribunals of Inquiry, appointed by both Houses of Parliament, to take evidence, etc. ...	505
2. Power of such Tribunals to exclude the public in special cases	506

TABLE OF BOOKS REFERRED TO.

- Archbold. Criminal Evidence, 26th ed., 1922.
Best. Law of Evidence, 12th ed., 1922.
Phillipps. Law of Evidence, 10th ed., 1852.
Phipson. Law of Evidence, 6th ed., 1921.
Powell. Law of Evidence, 10th ed., 1921.
Roscoe, C. E. Criminal Evidence, 14th ed., 1921.
Roscoe, N. P. Nisi Prius Evidence, 19th ed., 1922.
Starkie. Law of Evidence, 4th ed., 1853.
Stephen. Digest of Evidence, 10th ed., 1922.
Taylor. Law of Evidence, 11th ed., 1920.
Thayer. Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 1898.
Wills. Law of Evidence, 2nd ed., 1907.
Wills, C. E. Circumstantial Evidence, 6th ed., 1912.

TABLE OF BOOKS REFERRED TO

Archbold, Criminal Evidence, 20th ed. 1904	215
Alford, Law of Evidence, 12th ed. 1902	215
Phillips, Law of Evidence, 10th ed. 1902	215
Phillips, Law of Evidence, 9th ed. 1902	215
North, Law of Evidence, 10th ed. 1902	215
Roscoe, C. E., Criminal Evidence, 14th ed. 1902	215
Roscoe, N. V., Criminal Evidence, 14th ed. 1902	215
Starkie, Law of Evidence, 10th ed. 1902	215
Stephens, Digest of Evidence, 10th ed. 1902	215
Taylor, Law of Evidence, 11th ed. 1902	215
Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 1891	215
Willis, Law of Evidence, 2d ed. 1902	215
Willis, C. E., Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 1902	215

TABLE OF CASES CITED IN JUDGMENTS AND NOTES.

[Leading Cases are printed in Capitals.]

	PAGE		PAGE
Abbot v. Massie	385	BERKELEY PEERAGE
ABBOT v. PLUMBE	352	CASE	211
ABRATH v. N. E. RY. CO. ...	133	BERRYMAN v. WISE	32
ALLEN v. PINK	362	BESSELA v. STERN	147, 163
AMOS v. HUGHES	131	Bird v. Randall	46
Amys v. Barton	75	Blackwell v. Bull	388
Anderson v. Hamilton	307	Bolckow v. Seymour	9
ANDERSON v. WESTON	353	Bowden v. Henderson	32
ANGELL v. DUKE	368, 369	BOWMAN v. TAYLOR	49
ARMORY v. DELAMIRIE		Brailey v. Rhodesia, etc. ...	126
	391, 394	Bramley, Re	388
Atkinson v. Morris	242	BRANDAO v. BARNETT	16
ATT.-GEN. v. BOWMAN	110	BRETT v. BEALES	253
Att.-Gen. v. Briant	308	BREWSTER v. SEWELL	339
ATT.-GEN. v. HITCHCOCK	296,	BRISTOW v. SEQUEVILLE
	301		18, 124
Audley's (Lord) Case	267	British Association, etc. v.
AVESON v. KINNAIRD	70, 72	Nettlefold	323
Aylesford Peerage	311	Broughton v. Randall	36
		Brown v. Brown	239
Baerlein v. Chartered Bank ...	255	BROWN v. BYRNE	360, 375
BANBURY PEERAGE CASE	27	BROWNE v. DUNN	286
Barker v. Arnold	472	Bruner v. Moore	389
BARTLETT v. SMITH	10	Bullmore v. Winter	388
BAYLIS v. ATT.-GEN.	381.	BURROUGH v. MARTIN	281
	384, 389	BUTLER v. MOUNT-
BEATSON v. SKENE	304, 307	GARRETT	215
Beatty v. Cullingworth	86
BECKETT v. RAMSDALE	151	CALCRAFT v. GUEST	321
BENTLEY v. COOKE	267	Calder v. Dobell	378

	PAGE		PAGE
Caroline's (Queen) Case ...	291	Eccles v. Louisville Ry. Co. ...	430
CARTER v. BOEHM ...	122	Edelstein v. Schuler ...	18
Chalmers v. Shackell ...	142	Enoch, Re ...	399
CHAMBERS v. BERNAS-		Erskine v. Adeane ...	368
CONI ...	203	Evans v. Evans ...	445
Charnock v. Merchant ...	472, 475	EWER v. AMBROSE ...	292
COLPOYS v. COLPOYS ...	379
COOKE v. LOXLEY ...	53	FOLKES v. CHADD ...	123
Cory v. Bretton ...	55	Fonnereau v. Poyntz ...	379, 381
Coulson v. Disborough ...	399	Forster v. Hale ...	412
Cowen v. Truefitt ...	364	Foster v. Globe Venture Syнди-
Crease v. Barrett ...	210	cate ...	20
CRIPPEN, Re ...	119	FREEMAN v. COOKE ...	50
Crosse v. Gardner ...	367	FRYER v. GATHERCOLE ...	127
CURTIS v. CURTIS ...	153
		GILBEY v. GT. WESTERN
Daniel v. Pitt ...	181	RY. CO. ...	74, 157
Dashwood v. Magniac ...	374	Goblet v. Beechey ...	389
Davis v. Jones ...	372	Goddard's Case ...	48
Dawes v. Hawkins ...	35	Goodinge v. Goodinge ...	389
DE LASSALLE v. GUILD-		GOODRIGHT v. MOSS ...	220, 309
FORD ...	366	GOSS v. NUGENT ...	372
Delmare v. Robello ...	389	Grant v. Maddox ...	388, 389
DEVALA PROVIDENT		G. W. RY. CO. v. WILLIS... ..	183
GOLD MINING CO., Re ...	184	GREENOUGH v. ECCLES ...	299
Director of P. P. v. Ball ...	483	Gregory v. Tavernor ...	281
DOBELL v. STEVENS ...	363
DOE v. CATOMORE ...	357	HAINES v. GUTHRIE ...	217
" v. FLEMING ...	95	Hales v. Kerr ...	105
" v. GRIFFIN ...	219	Hammond v. Bradstreet ...	224
" v. Hiscocks ...	389	HARRIS v. TIPPETT ...	293
" v. HODGSON ...	332	Henkle v. Royal Ex. Ass. Co. ...	364
" v. Kemp ...	92	HENNESSY v. WRIGHT ...	306
" v. Lakin ...	162	HENRY COXON, THE ...	202
" v. NEEDS ...	377, 381	Herbert v. Reid ...	389
" v. Palmer ...	243	HETHERINGTON v. KEMP ...	88
" v. PENFOLD ...	90	HIGGINS v. DAWSON ...	382
" v. ROSS ...	345	Higgins v. Senior ...	378
" v. Smith ...	380	HIGHAM v. RIDGWAY ...	205
" v. SUCKERMORE ...	348	Hill v. Crook ...	387
" v. TURFORD ...	201	HOLCOMBE v. HEWSON ...	104
DONCASTER v. DAY ...	243	HOLLINGHAM v. HEAD ...	102
Doncet v. Geoghegan ...	71	Hunt v. Hort ...	385
DOWLING v. DOWLING ...	64	Hurst v. Beach ...	389
DUNRAVEN v. LLEWEL-		Hutton v. Warren ...	376
LYN ...	224
DWYER v. COLLINS ...	335

	PAGE		PAGE
JACOBS v. LAYBORN	258, 399, 405	MORGAN v. GRIFFITH	365, 368
Jameson's Case	... 250	" v. NICHOLL	... 246
Jersey v. Smith	... 380	MORIARTY v. L. C. & D.
JOHNSON v. BARNES	... 33	RY. CO.	... 166
" v. LAWSON	... 218	MORRELL v. FRITH	11, 386
Jolly v. Young	... 389	MORRIS v. EDWARDS	... 322
JONES v. WILLIAMS	... 91	" v. MILLER	... 96
KELL v. CHARMER	... 386	MORTIMER v. M'CALLAN	341
KINGSTON'S (DUCHESS)		MOSTYN v. FABRIGAS	... 18
CASE	... 41	Moult v. Halliday	... 18
KIRKSTALL CO. v. FUR-		Nash v. Ali Khan	... 273
NESS CO.	... 182	Needham v. Smith	... 407
Kurtz v. Spence	... 57	Nepean v. Doe	... 30, 31
Lane v. Stanhope	... 389	Nevill v. Fine Art Co.	... 12
LEACH v. REX	... 263, 268, 475, 476	Newburgh v. Newburgh	... 389
Leroux v. Brown	... 412	NEWCASTLE v. BROXTOWE	228, 230, 231
Lewis v. Hartley	... 333	NICHOLLS v. DOWDING	278
LINE v. TAYLOR	... 392	Noble v. Ward	... 373
LLANOVER v. HOMFRAY	244	Nottingham v. Tomkinson	260, 445
Lloyd v. Mostyn	... 322
Lovat's (Lord) Case	... 405	OMYCHUND v. BARKER	271, 273
Lowe, Re	... 388	Outram v. Morewood	... 47
Lyno, Re	... 388
Lysney v. Selby	... 363, 364
MACDONNELL v. EVANS	... 327	PADDOCK v. FORRESTER	55
Malpas v. L. S. W. Ry.	... 365	PAPENDICK v. BRIDG-
MALTBY v. CHRISTIE	... 163	WATER	... 210
MARKS v. BEYFUS	... 308	PARKIN v. MOON	... 285
Mash v. Darley	... 120	Pasley v. Freeman	... 367
Massey v. Allen	... 202	PEACEABLE v. WATSON	... 209
MAUGHAM v. HUBBARD	279	PEARCE v. HOOPER	... 356
May v. Platt	... 364	PETO v. HAGUE	... 185
MEATH v. WINCHESTER	354	PHENE'S TRUSTS, Re	30, 31
Medina v. Stoughton	... 367	Pickard v. Sears	... 51, 52
MERCER v. DENNE	... 203, 229, 250	PICKERING v. NOYES	... 324
" v. WHALL	... 139	Pipe v. Fuleher	... 224
MERES v. ANSELL	... 361	PONTIFEX v. JOLLY	... 140
MET. RY. CO. v. JACKSON	8	Poulett Peerage Claim	... 311
Mighell v. Sultan of Johore	... 20	PRICE v. MANNING	... 288
MILLS v. ODDY	... 337	Price v. Page	... 380, 385
Minet v. Morgan	... 322	PRICE v. TORRINGTON	... 200

	PAGE		PAGE
PRINCE v. SAMO	290	R. v. ERISWELL	157, 159
Printing, etc., Co. v. Drucker	244	„ v. Everitt	485
PYE v. BUTTERFIELD	314	„ v. Fawcett	486
PYM v. CAMPBELL	370	„ v. Ferry Frystone	159
Queen Caroline's Case	291	„ v. Fisher	107
Quick v. Quick	242	„ v. FOSTER	69, 73, 174
		„ v. Fowkes	68
		„ v. FRANCIS	108, 393
		„ v. Gardner	471
		„ v. GEERING	104
R. v. Acaster	270, 475	„ v. GIBBONS	196
„ v. Albutt	451	„ v. GLOSTER	73, 237
„ v. Austin	237, 403	„ v. Gordon	342, 343
„ v. AZIR	267	„ v. GOULD	197
„ v. Baggott	485	„ v. Grout	473
„ v. BAINES	400, 403	„ v. Hadwen	474
„ v. Baker	473	„ v. Heard	485
„ v. BALDRY	190	„ v. Heseltine	124
„ v. Ball	483	„ v. HILL	265
„ v. BASKERVILLE	149	„ v. Hodgkinson	471
„ v. Beckett	128	„ v. HOLMES	294
„ v. BEDINGFIELD	68, 174, 236	„ v. HOLY TRINITY, HULL	331
„ v. Bird	471	„ v. Hook	180
„ v. BIRDSEYE	67	„ v. Hudson	473
„ v. Black	458	„ v. Humphries	471
„ v. BLAKE	79	„ v. HUNT	333, 390, 394
„ v. BLISS	227	„ v. JARVIS	193
„ v. Bond	105	„ v. JENKINS	150, 232
„ v. BOYES	312	„ v. Jennings	485
„ v. BRASIER	264	„ v. Jones	474
„ v. Bridgwater	472, 473	„ v. Keane	485
„ v. BROWN	302, 485	„ v. Kelly	484, 485
„ v. BUCKLEY	204	„ v. Kinghorn	451
„ v. Butcher	458	„ v. Kingston	196
„ v. CAMELLERI	86	„ v. LANGMEAD	92
„ v. Chitson	472, 473	„ v. LANGTON	282
„ v. CHRISTIE	170	„ v. LILLYMAN	80, 84, 85, 86, 172
„ v. CLARKE	118	„ v. LLANFAETHLY	338
„ v. Cohen	472, 474	„ v. LLOYD	195
„ v. Coley	196	„ v. Luckhurst	196
„ v. Court	196	„ v. LUFFEY	21
„ v. Cowle	458	„ v. LUMLEY	29
„ v. COX AND RAILTON	319	„ v. McDonald	471
„ v. ELLIS	66, 472, 473	„ v. McNamara	87
„ v. ELWORTHY	329	„ v. Marriott	468
„ v. Entrehman	272

	PAGE		PAGE
R. v. Marshall ...	403, 474, 486	R. v. Sullivan ...	484, 486
„ v. Martin ...	484	„ v. SUTTON ...	251
„ v. Mason ...	124	„ v. Tate ...	149, 482
„ v. Maxfield ...	486	„ v. THOMPSON ...	192, 196
„ v. MEAD ...	234	„ v. TURNER ...	136, 484, 485, 486
„ v. Meath ...	70	„ v. Waller ...	486
„ v. Mitchell ...	485	„ v. Warren ...	471
„ v. Moore ...	273	„ v. Watson ...	472, 485
„ v. Moran ...	486	„ v. Webber ...	486
„ v. Morrison ...	291	„ v. Westfall ...	474
„ v. Murray ...	482, 491	„ v. Westwood ...	486
„ v. Muscot ...	146	„ v. Whitehead ...	258, 399
„ v. Neilson ...	486	„ v. Williams ...	484
„ v. Norman ...	486	„ v. Willis ...	151
„ v. NORTON ...	167, 171, 174, 176, 179	„ v. WILLSHIRE ...	30, 32, 37
„ v. Nuneham Courtney ...	159	„ v. Wilson ...	97, 485
„ v. OSBORNE ...	82, 86	„ v. Winkel ...	147
„ v. Osman ...	237	„ v. WOODCOCK ...	234
„ v. PALMER ...	61	„ v. Young ...	484
„ v. Paty ...	15	Rachfield v. Careless ...	389
„ v. PEARCE ...	268	Ravensworth, Re ...	389
„ v. Peel ...	236	RAWSON v. HAIGH ...	70
„ v. PERRY ...	233, 236	Riches v. Riches ...	153
„ v. PIKE ...	237	Ridley v. Gyde ...	71
„ v. Preston ...	474	RIPLEY, Re ...	242
„ v. Reason ...	196	ROBERTSON v. FRENCH ...	89
„ v. Reeve ...	196	Rouch v. G. W. Ry. ...	71
„ v. RHODES ...	106, 471	Rowe v. Brenton ...	230
„ v. Richards ...	196	Rush v. Smith ...	285
„ v. RILEY ...	108, 295	RUSSELL v. RUSSELL ...	309
„ v. Rose ...	196	Rutland's Case ...	358
„ v. Rouse ...	473
„ v. Rowland ...	472	SANDILANDS, Re ...	351
„ v. ROWTON ...	114	Saunderson v. Piper ...	379, 455
„ v. Sadler ...	399, 400	SCOTT v. SAMPSON ...	111
„ v. SCAIFE ...	401	Scottish Shire Line v. London, etc., Co. ...	123
„ v. SCHAMA ...	94	Shallcross v. Palmer ...	243
„ v. Shaw ...	192	Shore v. Wilson ...	386
„ v. Sheean ...	474	SLATTERIE v. POOLEY ...	187
„ v. SILVERLOCK ...	126, 350	Smith v. Blakey ...	204
„ v. SIMONS ...	187	SMITH v. WILSON ...	385
„ v. Sleeman ...	196	SOWARD v. LEGGATT ...	132
„ v. Smith ...	485	STOBART v. DRYDEN ...	155, 234
„ v. Spilsbury ...	192	STOCKDALE v. HANSARD ...	15
„ v. Stewart ...	484
„ v. Stubbs ...	150

xlviii CASES CITED IN JUDGMENTS AND NOTES.

	PAGE		PAGE
Stringer v. Gardiner ...	388	Wake v. Harrop ...	364
Stroughill v. Buck ...	50	Waldridge v. Kennison ...	57
STURLA v. FRECCIA ...	247	WALKER v. WILSHER ...	56
SUGDEN v. LORD ST.		Wallis v. Littell ...	372
LEONARDS ...	238, 341	Ward v. Sinfield ...	440
Summers v. Moseley ...	285	Watson v. England ...	32
Sussex Peerage Case ...	207	Webb v. Plummer ...	376
SWINFEN v. LORD		WEEKS v. SPARKE ...	221, 226
CHELMSFORD ...	39	WHARAM v. ROUTLEDGE
			281, 332
Tatam v. Reeve ...	52	WHEELER v. LE MAR-
TAYLOR v. BARCLAY ...	19	CHANT ...	315
" v. WITHAM ...	207	Whitelocke v. Baker ...	221
THOMAS v. DAVID ...	299, 301	WIEDEMAN v. WALPOLE	164
Thomas v. Jenkins ...	230	WIGGLESWORTH v. DAL-
THOMPSON v. TREVANION		LISON ...	374
	67, 72, 174	WILLIAMS v. EAST INDIA
Tichborne Case ...	250	CO. ...	26
Trevivan v. Lawrence ...	48	" v. INNES ...	181
Trotter v. Maclean ...	88	Williams v. Thomas ...	57
Twyman v. Knowles ...	331	Willmet v. Harmer ...	142
		Wilson v. Rastall ...	319
Ulrich v. Litchfield ...	389	" v. Wilson ...	126
		WING v. ANGRAVE ...	35
Vaughton v. L. & N. W. Ry.		WOOD v. MACKINSON ...	284
Co. ...	142	Woodhouselee v. Dalrymple ...	387
VERRY v. WATKINS ...	113	Woodward v. Goulstone ...	242
Vezey v. Rashleigh ...	373	WOOLWAY v. ROWE ...	186, 211
VOOGHT v. WINCH ...	46	Wright v. Bagnall ...	52
		WRIGHT v. DOE ...	75
		" v. TATHAM ...	75

TABLE OF STATUTES.

(For Chronological Arrangement and Analysis see ante, pp. xxii—xxxix.)

	PAGE
Administration of Justice Act, 1920. 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 81, s. 15 ...	505
Air Force (Constitution) Act, 1917. 7 & 8 Geo. 5, c. 51, s. 10 (5) ...	505
Arbitration Act, 1889. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 49, ss. 8, 27 ...	460
Attendance of Witnesses Act, 1854. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 34, ss. 1, 2, 5, 6	428
Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879. 42 Vict. c. 11, ss. 3—7, 9 ...	450
Bankruptcy Act, 1914. 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 59, ss. 15 (1), (7), (8), 109 (5), 137—9, 141—4, 166 ...	500
Bastardy Act, 1845. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10, s. 6 ...	419
Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, s. 4 ...	448
Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, ss. 9 (2), 27 (2), (3), 30 (1), (2), 54 (2), 55 (1), (2), 89 (1) ...	453
Blasphemy Act, 1697. 9 Will. 3, c. 35 ...	412
British Law Ascertainment Act, 1859. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63, ss. 1, 2 ...	433
Children Act, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 67, ss. 12 (1), (7), 13, 14 (2), 27, 28 (1), 29, 30, 32 (3), 38 (2), 120 (3), 123 (1), (2), 124 ...	487
Children (Employment Abroad) Act, 1913. 3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. 7, s. 3 (2), (4) ...	498
Coinage Act, 1861. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 37 ...	437
Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 69, ss. 17 (1), 23, 33, 71 (1), (2), (3), 111, 168 (1), 174 (2), (3), 175 (4), (5), (7), 220, 225, 236 (1), (2) ...	492
Coroners Act, 1887. 50 & 51 Vict. c. 71, ss. 4 (1), (2), 5 (3) ...	458
Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1883. 46 & 47 Vict. c. 51, s. 59 (1)	456
County Courts Act, 1888. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 43, ss. 28, 180 ...	458
Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. 7 Edw. 7, c. 23, ss. 3, 4 (1), 5 (2), 8, 9, 16	479
Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, ss. 1—4, 6 (1) ...	468
Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914. 4 & 5 Geo. 5, c. 58, s. 28	498
Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, ss. 3, 6 ...	441
Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, ss. 2, 3, 4	457
Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912. 2 & 3 Geo. 5, c. 20, s. 7 (6) ...	497
Criminal Procedure Act, 1865. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, ss. 1—8 ...	438

	PAGE
Divided Parishes Act, 1876. 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 34	449
Documentary Evidence Act, 1868. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 37, ss. 2, 3, 6 ...	443
Documentary Evidence Act, 1882. 45 Vict. c. 9, ss. 2, 4	453
Documentary Evidence Act, 1895. 58 & 59 Vict. c. 9, s. 1	468
Evidence Act, 1843. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85	419
Evidence Act, 1845. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, ss. 1, 2, 3	420
Evidence Act, 1851. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, ss. 2, 3, 4, 7, 13, 14, 16 ...	424
Evidence Act, 1877. 40 & 41 Vict. c. 14, s. 1	449
Evidence Amendment Act, 1853. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, ss. 1, 2, 3 ...	427
Evidence Amendment Act, 1915. 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 94, s. 5	502
Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, ss. 1, 2, 3	445
Evidence by Commission Act, 1843. 6 & 7 Vict. 82, ss. 5, 7	418
Evidence by Commission Act, 1859. 22 Vict. c. 20, ss. 1, 4, 5	431
Evidence (Colonial Statutes) Act, 1907. 7 Edw. 7, c. 16, s. 1 (1), (3)	479
Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890. 53 & 54 Vict. c. 37, s. 4 (1), (2) ...	461
Foreign Law Ascertainment Act, 1861. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 11, s. 1	434
Foreign Tribunals Evidence Act, 1856. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 113, ss. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6	529
Frauds, Statute of, 1677. 29 Car. 2, c. 3, ss. 4, 7, 9	411
Frauds, Statute of, Amendment Act, 1828. 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, ss. 1, 3, 6	415
Indictable Offences Act, 1848. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, ss. 17, 18, 20 ...	421
Interpretation Act, 1889. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, ss. 9, 20	460
Juries Act, 1825. 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, ss. 23, 24	414
Larceny Act, 1861. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 29, 85, 116	435
Larceny Act, 1916. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 50, s. 43 (1), (2), (3)	503
Limited Partnerships Act, 1907. 7 Edw. 7, c. 24, ss. 5, 6 (1), 16 ...	482
Marine Insurance Act, 1906. 6 Edw. 7, c. 41, ss. 18 (4), 20 (7), 21—24, 54, 88, 89	477
Married Women's Property Act, 1882. 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, ss. 12, 16	455
Married Women's Property Act, 1884. 47 & 48 Vict. c. 14, s. 1	456
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, ss. 13, 43	430
Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 6	432
Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. 57 & 58 Vict. c. 60, ss. 64 (2), 123, 239 (1), (4), (5), (6), 240, 457 (1), (2), 691 (1), (2), (3), (4), 694, 695 (1), (2), 697, 719	464
Ministry of Pensions Act, 1916. 6 & 7 Geo. 5, c. 65, s. 6 (5)	504
Motor Car Act, 1903. 3 Edw. 7, c. 36, s. 9 (1)	475
Oaths Act, 1838. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105	417
Oaths Act, 1888. 51 & 52 Vict. c. 46, ss. 1, 2, 3, 5	459

TABLE OF STATUTES.

li

	PAGE
Oaths Act, 1909. 9 Edw. 7. c. 39, ss. 2, 3	494
Official Secrets Act, 1911. 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 28, s. 1 (2)	496
Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 88	417
Partnership Act, 1890. 53 & 54 Vict. c. 39, ss. 2 (3), 14, 15	461
Perjury Act, 1911. 1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6, ss. 1 (6), 13, 14, 15 (1), (2), 16 (2)	495
Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, ss. 9, 17 (3), 18, 19, 20	446
Prevention of Crimes Act, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 59, s. 10	483
Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904. 4 Edw. 7, c. 15, ss. 12, 17, 18 (3), 23 (3), 24	475
Previous Conviction Act, 1836. 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 111	416
Punishment of Incest Act, 1908. 8 Edw. 7, c. 45, s. 4 (4)	483
Sale of Goods Act, 1893. 56 & 57 Vict. c. 71, s. 4 (1)	463
Shop Book Debts Act, 1609. 7 Jac. 1, c. 12	409
Stamp Act, 1891. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, ss. 12 (5), 14 (1), (4)	462
Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43 ss. 9, 14	423
Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, ss. 22 (1), (2), (4), 31 (1), (6), 39 (2)	451
Supremacy, Act of, 1558. 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 21	409
Treason Act, 1695. 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 3, s. 2	412
Treason Act, 1795. 36 Geo. 3, c. 7, s. 1	413
Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act, 1921. 11 Geo. 5, c. 7, ss. 1 (1), (2), (3), 2	505
Witnesses Act, 1806. 46 Geo. 3, c. 37	414

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1	Introduction
2	Chapter I. The Constitution
3	Chapter II. The Executive
4	Chapter III. The Legislative
5	Chapter IV. The Judiciary
6	Chapter V. The States
7	Chapter VI. The Territories
8	Chapter VII. The Federal Government
9	Chapter VIII. The States and Territories
10	Chapter IX. The Federal Government and the States
11	Chapter X. The States and Territories
12	Chapter XI. The Federal Government and the States
13	Chapter XII. The States and Territories
14	Chapter XIII. The Federal Government and the States
15	Chapter XIV. The States and Territories
16	Chapter XV. The Federal Government and the States
17	Chapter XVI. The States and Territories
18	Chapter XVII. The Federal Government and the States
19	Chapter XVIII. The States and Territories
20	Chapter XIX. The Federal Government and the States
21	Chapter XX. The States and Territories
22	Chapter XXI. The Federal Government and the States
23	Chapter XXII. The States and Territories
24	Chapter XXIII. The Federal Government and the States
25	Chapter XXIV. The States and Territories
26	Chapter XXV. The Federal Government and the States
27	Chapter XXVI. The States and Territories
28	Chapter XXVII. The Federal Government and the States
29	Chapter XXVIII. The States and Territories
30	Chapter XXIX. The Federal Government and the States
31	Chapter XXX. The States and Territories
32	Chapter XXXI. The Federal Government and the States
33	Chapter XXXII. The States and Territories
34	Chapter XXXIII. The Federal Government and the States
35	Chapter XXXIV. The States and Territories
36	Chapter XXXV. The Federal Government and the States
37	Chapter XXXVI. The States and Territories
38	Chapter XXXVII. The Federal Government and the States
39	Chapter XXXVIII. The States and Territories
40	Chapter XXXIX. The Federal Government and the States
41	Chapter XL. The States and Territories
42	Chapter XLI. The Federal Government and the States
43	Chapter XLII. The States and Territories
44	Chapter XLIII. The Federal Government and the States
45	Chapter XLIV. The States and Territories
46	Chapter XLV. The Federal Government and the States
47	Chapter XLVI. The States and Territories
48	Chapter XLVII. The Federal Government and the States
49	Chapter XLVIII. The States and Territories
50	Chapter XLIX. The Federal Government and the States
51	Chapter L. The States and Territories

CASES AND STATUTES ON THE LAW OF EVIDENCE.

PART I.
CASES ON EVIDENCE.

EVIDENCE GENERALLY.

The term "evidence" as used in law, or "judicial evidence," bears the same meaning as in popular language,—the means by which facts are made evident or established to the satisfaction of persons enquiring into them,—narrowed, however, by certain legal rules contrived to secure, as far as possible, its sufficiency and credibility; the result being that facts sufficient generally to satisfy or convince prudent persons of clear understanding may not be sufficient to fulfil the requirements of the law in matters arising for judicial determination.

It may be well to draw attention to the following

DEFINITIONS OF JUDICIAL EVIDENCE.

"That which demonstrates, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other" (Blackstone, Com. III. 367).

“ All the legal means, exclusive of mere argument, which tend to prove or disprove any matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to judicial investigation ” (Taylor, § 1).

“ The means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved ” (Wills, Circ. Ev., 3).

“ The evidence received by Courts of justice in proof or disproof of facts, the existence of which comes in question before them ” (Best, § 33).

(1) Statements made by witnesses in Court under a legal sanction, in relation to matters of fact under enquiry; such statements are called oral evidence;

(2) Documents produced for the inspection of the Court or judge; such documents are called documentary evidence ” (Stephen, art. 1).

“ The facts, testimony, and documents which may be legally received in order to prove or disprove the fact under enquiry ” (Phipson, 1).

VARIETIES OF JUDICIAL EVIDENCE.

The following terms are used, but not uniformly, as descriptive of different varieties of evidence:—

Best Evidence.—This term is used to describe primary evidence as distinguished from secondary evidence (see below, and post, pp. 154, 326).

Conclusive Evidence.—Evidence of a fact which the Court must take as full proof of such fact and which excludes all evidence to disprove it (see Stephen, art. 1). Such evidence seems to be only in cases of statutory provisions declaring particular evidence to be conclusive; unless the so-called conclusive or irrebuttable presumptions are considered as evidence (see post, p. 145).

Direct Evidence.—This term is used in two senses: as (a) Evidence of a fact actually in issue (as distinguished from circumstantial evidence); (b) Evidence of a fact actually perceived by a witness with one of his own senses, or of an opinion actually held by himself (as distinguished from hearsay evidence) (see post, pp. 58, 63, 154).

Circumstantial or Presumptive Evidence is evidence of a fact not actually in issue, but legally relevant to a fact in issue (post, p. 58).

Real Evidence.—Evidence supplied by material objects produced for the inspection of the Court, and not by information from a witness or document (post, p. 390).

Oral Evidence.—Evidence of a fact brought to the knowledge of the Court by the verbal statement of a qualified witness (see post, p. 255).

Documentary Evidence.—Evidence of a fact brought to the knowledge of the Court by inspection of a document produced to the Court (see post, p. 265).

Extrinsic Evidence.—This term is generally used as descriptive of oral or parol evidence when given in connection with written documents (see below, and post, p. 358).

Hearsay (or Second-hand) Evidence.—Evidence of a fact not actually perceived by a witness with one of his own senses, but proved by him to have been stated by another person (see post, p. 154).

Indirect Evidence.—Evidence which is not direct evidence in either of its two senses (see above). It means therefore (a) circumstantial evidence, or (b) hearsay evidence (see above).

Original and Derivative Evidence.—Best defines original evidence as “that which has an independent probative force of its own,” and derivative (second-hand or secondary) evidence, as “that which derives its force from some other source” (§§ 29—30; see as to this distinction, Phipson, 6th ed., 5).

Parol Evidence.—This term is sometimes used as equivalent to oral evidence. It seems to be used chiefly as descriptive of the oral “extrinsic evidence” when given in connection with written documents (see above, and post, p. 255).

Pre-appointed Evidence.—Evidence declared by the law to be either a permissible, or a necessary and exclusive, mode of proof of a particular fact (see Best, § 31). This term is rarely used. It appears chiefly in connection with public documents (see post, p. 144).

Primâ Facie Evidence.—Evidence of a fact which the Court must take as proof of such fact unless it is held disproved by further evidence. Such evidence appears frequently in cases of statutory provisions declaring particular evidence to be primâ facie (see post, p. 145).

Primary Evidence.—Evidence which itself suggests that it is the best evidence, or, at least, does not itself suggest the existence of better evidence, and which the law therefore regards as being the most reliable, and requires to be produced if available, to the exclusion of certain less reliable evidence. The term is mainly of importance in connection with documents, of which the original or an admission of its contents is said to be primary, and must generally be produced. It may be identified with best evidence (see above), and is distinguished from secondary evidence (see below). The term is also, but rarely, applied to oral or parol evidence, of which direct evidence (see above) is said to be primary. But there does not appear to be any practical reason for so classifying oral evidence, as the primary does not exclude the secondary evidence in such case (see post, p. 341).

Secondary Evidence.—Evidence which itself suggests the existence of better evidence, and which the law rejects if the better or primary evidence is available. The term is mainly of importance in connection with documents, a copy or verbal account whereof may not generally be given in evidence. It is distinguished from best evidence and primary evidence (see above). The term is also, but rarely, applied to oral or parol evidence, of which hearsay evidence (see above) is said to be secondary. But there does not appear to be any practical reason for so classifying oral evidence, as the primary does not exclude the secondary evidence in such case (see post, p. 341). [As to the distinction between second-hand and secondary evidence, see Best, § 494; Phipson, 6th ed., 7.]

THE FUNCTIONS OF JUDGE AND JURY IN DEALING WITH EVIDENCE.

In the case of trial by jury, it is, in the first place, essential to distinguish the respective functions of the Judge and the jury, inasmuch as they both have to deal with the evidence tendered, but in different manner. The Judge has the general conduct of the proceedings, deciding questions of law and practice, including those relating to the production and admissibility of evidence. The jury find the facts, thus dealing with the credibility and weight of the evidence.

It is the duty of the Judge to instruct the jury in the rules of law and practice by which the evidence is to be weighed; for instance, he should advise them not to convict upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice (see post, p. 148); he should explain to them the nature and effect of any presumptions applicable (see post, p. 22), or any rule of law rendering evidence either unnecessary (see post, p. 13), or of peculiar application (see post, p. 82). The Judge also, in summing up the case to the jury, frequently comments upon the weight of the evidence.

With respect to the duty of the Judge thus to deal with the weight of evidence, there appears to be some difference of opinion. It is sometimes maintained that, when he has explained to the jury the matter in issue, together with the law and practice applicable, he is functus officio and should not comment on the facts. But this rule is certainly largely departed from in general practice, and it is usually considered that temperate comment by the Judge on the facts may well be of material assistance to the jury, although any officious interference with the functions of the latter is not only improper on the part of the Judge, but frequently defeats its own purpose by inclining the jury against the Judge's opinion. As Lord Chancellor Bacon said to Mr. Justice Hutton, when swearing in the latter as a Judge—“Draw your learning out of your books, not out of your brain. Mix well the freedom of your own opinion with the reverence of the opinion of your fellows. Be a light to jurors to open their eyes, not a guide to lead them by the noses” (Campbell's Chancellors, II. 428).

Professor Thayer speaks of the notion, that a Judge has no right to indicate to the jury his own views of the facts, as one which would have amazed any English Judge “from the beginning down,” remarking that “It is not too much to say of any period, in all English history, that it is impossible to conceive of trial by jury as existing there in a form which would withhold from the jury the assistance of the Court in dealing with the facts” (Thayer, Pr. Tr. Ev., 188).

The general functions of the Judge have thus been shortly summarised :

“The duty of a Judge presiding at a trial by jury is fourfold: first, he must decide all questions respecting the admissibility of evidence; secondly, he must instruct the jury in the rules of law, by which the evidence, when admitted, is to be weighed; thirdly, he must determine, as a legal question, whether there be any evidence fit to be submitted to the jury for their consideration; and lastly, he must explain and enforce those general principles of law that are applicable to the point at issue” (Taylor, § 23). These points are illustrated by the cases following.

METROPOLITAN RY. CO. v. JACKSON.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1877.

L. R. 3 A. C. 193; 47 L. J. Q. B. 303; 37 L. T. 679;
26 W. R. 175.

Questions of law are for the Judge, questions of fact for the jury, to determine. Whether there is sufficient evidence to be left to the jury from which they may legally and properly infer the matter in issue is a question of law for the Judge; whether such evidence establishes the matter in issue is a question of fact for the jury.

In an action for damages caused by negligence, it was held that the Judge was to decide whether there was any evidence proper to be left to the jury of negligence causing the injury, and for the jury to say whether, and how far, such evidence was to be believed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD CAIRNS, L.C. . . . The Judge has a certain duty to discharge, and the jurors have another and a different duty. The Judge has to say whether any facts have been established by evidence from which negligence may be reasonably inferred; the jurors have to say whether, from those facts, when submitted to them, negligence ought to be inferred. It is, in my opinion, of the greatest importance in the administration of justice that these separate functions should be maintained, and should be maintained distinct. It would be a serious inroad on the province of the jury, if, in a case where there are facts from which negligence may reasonably be inferred, the Judge were to withdraw the case from the jury upon the ground that, in his opinion, negligence ought not to be inferred; and it would, on the other hand, place in the hands of the jurors a power which might be exercised in the most arbitrary manner, if they were at liberty to hold that negligence might be inferred from any state of facts whatever. . . .

LORD O'HAGAN. . . . Your Lordships have never held that, when negligence is alleged, any state of facts assumed to bear upon the issue can be made the subject of inference by jurors, although not really connected with the issue before them. The consequences of such a doctrine would be disastrous, and it is of high importance that the authority of the Judge should restrain a latitude of decision which might often in the result be very inconsistent with reason and justice. . . .

LORD BLACKBURN. . . . I think it has always been considered a question of law to be determined by the Judge, subject, of course, to review, whether there is evidence which, if it is believed, and the counter-evidence, if any, not believed, would establish the facts in controversy. It is for the jury to say whether and how far the evidence is to be believed. And if the facts, as to which evidence is given, are such that from them a farther inference of fact may legitimately be drawn, it is for the jury to say whether that inference is to be drawn or not. But it is for the Judge to determine, subject to review, as a matter of law, whether from those facts that farther inference may legitimately be drawn. . . .

LORD GORDON. . . . The duty of a Judge in such a case is an exceedingly delicate one, as the line of division between what is proper to be submitted to the jury, as necessary to support a charge of negligence in point of law, and what may be submitted to the jury as sufficient to support a charge of negligence in point of fact, is often a very narrow one. But I agree . . . that there is in every case a preliminary question, which is one of law, namely, whether there is any evidence on which the jury could properly find the question for the party on whom the onus of proof lies. If there is not, the Judge ought to withdraw the question from the jury, and direct a nonsuit if the onus is on the plaintiff, or direct a verdict for the plaintiff if the onus is on the defendant. . . .

Note.—The following matters have, amongst others, been held to be generally (but with exceptions) questions for the jury to decide—actual knowledge, real intention, express malice, good faith, reasonable skill, reasonable time, due diligence, negligence, and questions of foreign law. As to libel, see post, p. 12.

Some matters are declared by statute to be questions of law or fact. See Marine Insurance Act, 1906, ss. 18, 20, 88, post, p. 477; Perjury Act, 1911, s. 1, post, p. 495.

Where a contract is verbal, wholly or partially, the question as to its terms is for the jury (Bolckow v. Seymour, 17 C. B. N. S. 107). As to written contracts, see post, p. 11.

BARTLETT v. SMITH.

EXCHEQUER. 1843.

12 L. J. Ex. 287; 7 Jur. 448; 11 M. & W. 483;
63 R. R. 664.

The admissibility of evidence, documentary or otherwise, is a question of law for the Judge; and, if its admissibility depend on certain facts, the Judge should himself adjudicate upon such facts without submitting them to the jury.

It was objected by the defendant at the trial, that a bill of exchange with a foreign stamp could not be read, on the ground that it was drawn in this country. Evidence of that fact was tendered and refused at that stage, but was afterwards received as part of the defendant's case and submitted to the jury. It was held that the Judge ought to have received evidence of the place of drawing, in the first instance, to enable him to decide upon the admissibility of the bill, and that he ought not to have submitted the evidence to the jury.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD ABINGER, C.B. . . . All facts, which are necessary to be proved with a view to the reception of evidence, are for the consideration of the Judge, and he is to receive evidence respecting them for his own satisfaction. He might indeed, if he pleased, ask the opinion of the jury, but still the decision ought to be his own. A Judge should receive evidence as to the competency of a witness, or the sufficiency of a stamp, which is good upon the face of it, and ought to determine these questions for himself, instead of submitting them to the jury. . . .

PARKE, B. . . . This is one of the many cases in which a Judge ought to receive evidence for his own satisfaction, and ought not to submit it to the jury. . . .

ALDERSON, B. . . . Where the admissibility of the evidence is a question for the Judge, the facts upon which that admissibility depends, are to be determined by him, and not by the jury. If another rule were to prevail, it would always be left to the jury to decide upon the admissibility of evidence. . . .

ROLFE, B., concurred.

Note.—Questions of admissibility, which the Judge decides, include such as—whether the fact offered in evidence is relevant (see post, p. 56), whether the witness is competent (see post, p. 256), whether a document comes from proper custody (see post, p. 354) or is properly stamped, whether a dying declaration (see post, p. 232) or confession (see post, p. 188) is admissible, and whether secondary evidence is admissible (see post, p. 326).

MORRELL v. FRITH.

EXCHEQUER. 1838.

3 M. & W. 402; 49 R. R. 659.

The construction of a document is generally a question of law for the Judge; but where extrinsic evidence is required, and allowed, to explain it, as where peculiar terms or expressions are used, such evidence is for the jury.

The question was, whether a certain letter was a sufficient acknowledgment in writing to take the case out of the Statute of Limitation. The Judge was of opinion that it was not sufficient; and, although requested by the plaintiff's counsel to leave the question to the jury, he declined to do so, and directed a nonsuit. On an application for a new trial, it was held that he was right.

LORD ABINGER, C.B. . . . One case in which the effect of a written document must be left to a jury, is, where it requires parol evidence to explain it, as in the ordinary case of mercantile contracts in which peculiar terms and abbreviations are employed. So also, where a series of letters form part of the evidence in the cause, they must be left, with the rest of it, to the jury. But where the question arises on the construction of one document only, without reference to any extrinsic evidence to explain it, it is the safest course to adhere to the rule, that the construction of written documents is a question of law for the Court. The intention of the parties is a question for the jury, and, in some cases, in cases of libel for instance, the meaning of the document is part of that intention, and therefore must be submitted to the jury. But where a legal right is to be determined from the construction of a written document which either is unambiguous or of which the ambiguity arises only from the words themselves, that is a question to be decided by the Judge. . . .

PARKE, B. . . . The construction of a doubtful instrument itself is not for the jury, although the facts by which it may be explained are. . . .

ALDERSON, B. . . . Where it is a letter only, and there is no evidence beyond the written instrument itself, the construction of it is for the Court only, and not for the jury. The case of mercantile documents is altogether different. There the meaning of the words themselves is in question, being words that are used in a particular and technical sense; it is as if the document were in a foreign language, and the truth or propriety of the translation were in question.

BOLLAND, B., concurred.

Note.—The question of existence or non-existence of a document would be a question of fact for the jury. Cases on the admissibility of evidence to explain peculiar terms and ambiguities are given post, p. 377. The question whether a writing is sufficient acknowledgment to prevent a debt being statute-barred is for the Judge. So is the construction of policies of insurance, or foreign contracts (after proof of their meaning of words used), and of lost documents (after proof of their contents by secondary evidence), and the question whether an amount agreed to be paid is a penalty or liquidated damages. As to verbal contracts, see ante, p. 9.

The case of libel deserves special notice. Prior to 1792, in prosecutions for libel, the general practice was for the jury to decide merely the question of publication, clearly one of fact; the Judge deciding whether the writing was defamatory or not. Although the defamatory meaning would appear strictly to be a question of law for the Judge, yet it was felt that the practice placed too much power in the hands of the Judge, and it caused much acrimonious discussion, which ultimately resulted in Fox's Libel Act of 1792 (32 Geo. 3, c. 60), providing that in criminal prosecutions for libel the jury shall, after direction by the Judge on the law, give a general verdict upon the whole matter; thus in effect construing the writing, if the Judge holds it to be capable of a defamatory meaning. This rule has now been applied to civil proceedings for libel (Nevill v. Fine Arts Co., [1897] A. C. 68).

PROOF.

Before dealing with the matters requiring proof, and the mode of proving them, it is necessary to consider those matters which (a) do not require proof, or (b) are not allowed to be proved. Under the former head we have (1) matters judicially noticed, (2) matters presumed, and (3) matters admitted; under the latter head we have (1) matters which a party is estopped from alleging, (2) matters stated "without prejudice," and (3) matters which are irrelevant to the issue.

MATTERS OF WHICH PROOF IS NOT REQUIRED.JUDICIAL NOTICE.

There are certain matters which are considered too notorious to require proof: such matters are therefore "judicially noticed," that is to say, the Judge takes notice of their existence and nature without requiring any evidence thereof. English Law is dealt with in the same way, as, although it may not be so notorious to the public generally, it is taken to be within the knowledge, or rather, in the "breast," of the Judge.

It is impossible to state completely the matters which the Court will judicially notice. Any matter of such common knowledge that it would be an insult to intelligence to require proof of it would probably be dealt with in this way. Sir James Stephen gives a list of twelve kinds of matters which would be judicially noticed, but it is obviously incomplete, and apparently without either classification or order (Dig. Ev., Art. 58). Mr. Wills classifies the matters under the three following heads (Wills, 19):—

1. The Law and Practice of the Courts.
 2. Public Acts and Matters connected with the Government of the Country.
 3. Matters of Fact of Common and Certain Knowledge.
- Cases are given below under each of these three heads.

Judicial Notice is required by Statute of many matters, among which may be mentioned the following:—

1. The signatures of the Judges of the Supreme Courts, appended to any judicial or official document (Evidence Act, 1845, s. 2, post, p. 420).

2. The seal of every County Court on all summonses and other process of the Court (County Courts Acts, 1888, s. 180, post, p. 458).

3. Every Act of Parliament passed after 1850, unless it is expressly provided to the contrary (Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 9, post, p. 460).

4. The signatures of officers of the High Court, and the official seal or stamp of the several offices of the High Court, appended to or impressed on any document made, issued or signed in proceedings for winding up companies (Companies Act, 1908, s. 225, post, p. 493).

5. The seal of every Court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and the signature of the Judge or Registrar of such Court (Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 142, post, p. 501).

By other Statutes the seals, etc., of various other Courts and Government Departments are directed to be judicially noticed.

I. THE LAW.

STOCKDALE v. HANSARD.

KING'S BENCH. 1839.

9 A. & E. 1; 8 L. J. Q. B. 294; 3 JUR. 905;
48 R. R. 326.

The English Courts will judicially notice the Law of England and Ireland, including the Law and Custom of Parliament, and the privileges and course of proceedings of each House of Parliament.

In an action for libel, the defence was publication by order of the House of Commons. It was held that the Court could determine whether the House of Commons had such privilege as would support the plea, and could judicially notice the nature and extent of parliamentary privilege as part of the law of the land.

The following is from Adolphus and Ellis:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. . . . It is said that the Courts of law must be excluded from all interference with transactions in which the name of privilege has been mentioned, because they have no means of informing themselves what those privileges are. They are well known, it seems, to the two Houses, and to every member of them, so long as he continues a member; but the knowledge is as incommunicable as the privileges to all beyond that pale. It might be presumption to ask how this knowledge may be obtained, had not the Attorney-General read to us all he had to urge on the subject from works accessible to all and familiar to every man of education. The argument here seems to run in a circle. The Courts cannot be entrusted with any matter connected with privilege, because they know nothing about privilege; and this ignorance must be perpetual, because the law has taken such matters out of their cognisance. . . . Lord Holt (see R. v. Paty, 2 Ld. Raym. 1114) in terms denied this presumption of ignorance, and asserted the right and duty of the Courts to know the law of Parliament, because the law of the land on which they are bound to decide. Other Judges, without directly asserting the proposition, have constantly acted upon it; and it was distinctly admitted by the Attorney-General in the course of his argument. . . .

PATTESON, J. . . . It is further said that the Courts of law have no knowledge as to the lex et consuetudo parliamenti, and cannot therefore determine any question respecting it. And yet, at the same time, it is said that the lex et consuetudo parliamenti are part of the law of the land. And this Court is, in this very case, actually called upon by the defendants to pronounce judgment in their favour, upon the very ground that their act is justified by that very lex et consuetudo parliamenti, of which the Court is said to be invincibly ignorant, and to be bound to take the law from a resolution of one branch of the Parliament alone. . . . There is nothing so mysterious in the law and custom of Parliament, so far at least as the rest of the community not within its walls are concerned, that this Court may not acquire a knowledge of it in the same manner as of any other branch of the law. . . .

LITTLEDALE and COLERIDGE, JJ., concurred.

Note.—The law judicially noticed by the English Courts is that of England (including Wales) and Ireland only; not that of the Channel Islands, nor of Scotland, except in the House of Lords, nor that of the Colonies and India, except in the Privy Council, and, naturally, not that of foreign countries. Such laws can be proved by expert witnesses (see post, p. 124), or they may be ascertained under the British Law Ascertainment Act, 1859 (see post, p. 433), or the Foreign Law Ascertainment Act, 1861 (see post, p. 434). Scotch law is fundamentally different from English law, but Irish law, except where varied by statute, is substantially the same (Taylor, s. 5).

The law thus noticed includes both public and (since 1850) private Acts of Parliament (see post, p. 254), general customs and some local customs of well-known extensive application, such as Gavelkind and Borough-English customs; but, generally, local or particular customs must be proved.

If the judge should happen not to bear in mind the particular law in question, he may refer to, or be referred to, authorities in order to direct his attention to the law in question, and to refresh his memory; but this is not "proving" the law.

BRANDAO v. BARNETT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1846.

12 C. & F. 787; 3 C. B. 519; 69 R. R. 204.

The Court will judicially notice all general customs, such as the custom of Banker's Lien, and other customs of the Law Merchant, when they have once been judicially ascertained and established.

In an action against bankers to recover certain exchequer bills, the defendants set up a general banker's lien by virtue of general custom. It was held that such custom should be judicially noticed.

The following is from Clark and Finnelly:—

LORD CAMPBELL. The first question that arises upon this record is, whether judicial notice is to be taken of the general lien of bankers on the securities of their customers in their hands? The exchequer bills, for which this action is brought, are found to be the property of the plaintiff, and the defendants rest their defence on their second plea, that they were not possessed, etc., relying on the lien claimed for the balance due to them from Edward Burn.

The usage of trade by which bankers are entitled to a general lien, is not found by the special verdict, and unless we are to take judicial notice of it, the plaintiff is at once entitled to judgment. But, my Lords, I am of opinion that the general lien of bankers is part of the law merchant, and is to be judicially noticed—like the negotiability of bills of exchange or the days of grace allowed for their payment.

When a general usage has been judicially ascertained and established, it becomes a part of the law merchant which Courts of Justice are bound to know and recognise. Such has been the invariable understanding and practice in Westminster Hall for a great many years; there is no decision or dictum to the contrary, and justice could not be administered if evidence were required to be given toties quoties to support such usages, and issue might be joined upon them in each particular case. . . .

LORD LYNTHURST. . . . There is no question that, by the law merchant, a banker has a lien for his general balance on securities deposited with him. I consider this as part of the established law of the country, and that the Courts will take judicial notice of it: it is not necessary that it should be pleaded, nor is it necessary that it should be given in evidence in this particular instance. . . .

Note.—Care must be taken to distinguish “general” from “particular” customs, the latter not being judicially noticed, but requiring proof on each occasion. See note to previous case.

It appears, however, to be necessary, in practice, to prove a general custom once at least, so that it may become “judicially ascertained and established," as was said above. See Moult v. Halliday, [1898] 1 Q. B. 125, and Edelstein v. Schuler, [1902] 2 K. B. 144, as to proof of general customs.

Besides mercantile liens, the following general customs have, among others, been judicially noticed—the negotiability of instruments, the general practice of conveyancers, the custom or law of the road, customs of navigation, and market overt.

MOSTYN v. FABRIGAS.

KING'S BENCH. 1774.

1 COWPER, 161.

The Court will not judicially notice the Laws of the colonies or Foreign Countries. They must be proved as matters of fact.

In an action for assault and false imprisonment, alleged to have been committed in Minorca, then a British possession, by the governor thereof, a question arose as to the law of that island.

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. . . . The way of knowing foreign laws is, by admitting them to be proved as facts, and the Court must assist the jury in ascertaining what the law is. For instance, if there is a French settlement, the construction of which depends upon the custom of Paris, witnesses must be received to explain what the custom is; as evidence is received of customs in respect to trade. . . . So in the supreme resort before the King in Council, the Privy Council determines all cases that arise in the plantations, in Gibraltar or Minorca, in Jersey or Guernsey; and they inform themselves, by having the law stated to them. . . .

Note.—Foreign and Colonial Law is one of those matters of "science or art" upon which evidence of opinion may be given by experts. (See Bristow v. Sequeville, post, p. 124.) For the word "plantations" in the above case we may now read "colonies." [Questions of foreign law are now decided by the judge, not the jury (see post, p. 505).]

II. PUBLIC MATTERS.

TAYLOR v. BARCLAY.

CHANCERY. 1828.

2 SIMONS, 213; 29 R. R. 82.

The Court will judicially notice Public, Constitutional, or International Matters, affecting the Government of Great Britain and its relations with other States, in order that the Court and the Executive may take the same view and act in unison in dealing with such matters. for such purpose the Court should enquire of the Executive and thereby acquire the information, and not hear evidence thereon.

The plaintiffs alleged themselves to be the agents of the Government of the "Federal Republic of Central America, which was a sovereign and an independent State, recognised and treated as such by His Majesty the King of these realms." The Judge, after proper enquiry, took judicial notice of the fact that the so-called Republic had not been recognised as an independent Government by the Government of this country.

SIR L. SHADWELL, V.-C. In consequence of the arguments in this case, I have had communication with the Foreign Office, and I am authorised to state that the Federal Republic of Central America has not been recognised as an independent Government, by the Government of this country. It appears to me that, when it is stated in the bill, that this Republic was, and still is, a sovereign and independent State, recognised and treated as such by His Majesty, the King of these realms, it must have been meant that it has been recognised by the Government of this country as an independent State altogether; and, inasmuch as I conceive it is the duty of the Judge in every Court to take notice of public matters which affect the government of the country, I conceive that, notwithstanding that there is this averment in the bill, I am bound to take the fact as it really exists, and not as it is averred to be. . . .

I must judicially take notice of what is the truth of the fact, notwithstanding the averment on the record, because nothing is taken to be true except that which is properly pleaded; and I am of opinion that, when you plead that which is historically false, and which the Judges are bound to take notice of as being false, it cannot be said you have properly pleaded, merely because it is averred, in plain terms; and that I must take it just as if there was no such averment on the record. . . .

Note.—With regard to public matters it is said in Taylor on Evidence, § 18—“The Courts will judicially recognise the political constitution or frame of their own government; its essential political agents or public officers sharing in its regular administration; and its essential and regular political operations and actions. . . . But they will not recognise private orders made at the Council table, for these are matters of particular concernment; nor, it seems, any orders of Council, even though they regard the Crown and the Government; nor the transactions on the journals of either House of Parliament.”

It will be observed that, in the above case, the Judge satisfied himself on the point in question by communication with the Foreign Office. In the later case of Foster v. Globe Venture Syndicate, [1900] 1 Ch. 811, it was said that sound policy demands that in dealing with questions involving the sovereignty and extent of territory of a foreign State the Court should act in unison with the Government. So, where a dispute arises concerning the status and boundaries of a foreign State, the Court will, by enquiring of the Foreign Office, obtain judicial knowledge not only of such status, but also of the fact whether the district in dispute is within the territory of that State. Information relating to the boundaries of a foreign State should be acquired, it was held, by such a method, rather than by evidence adduced by the litigants which might lead to a result inconsistent with the practice of the Government. The same course was adopted in Mighell v. Sultan of Johore, [1894] 1 Q. B. 149. See also the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890, sect. 4, post, p. 461.

III. MATTERS OF COMMON KNOWLEDGE.

R. v. LUFFE.

KING'S BENCH. 1807.

8 EAST, 193; 9 R. R. 406.

The Court will judicially notice facts which must have happened according to the constant and invariable course of nature; matters of common knowledge.

The question arising as to the legitimacy of a child, and the fact appearing that the husband had not access to the wife until a fortnight before the birth, the Court took judicial notice of the fact that, according to the course of nature, he could not have been the father.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. . . . Here, however, in nature, the fact may certainly be known that the husband, who had no access until within a fortnight of his wife's delivery, could not be the actual father of the child. Where the thing cannot certainly be known, we must call in aid such probable evidence as can be resorted to, and the intervention of a jury must, in all cases in which it is practicable, be had to decide thereupon; but where the question arises as it does here, and where it may certainly be known from the invariable course of nature, as in this case it may, that no birth could be occasioned and produced within those limits of time, we may venture to lay down the rule plainly and broadly, without any danger arising from the precedent. . . .

Upon the ground of improbability, however strong, I should not venture to proceed. No person, however, can raise a question, whether a fortnight's access of the husband, before the birth of a full grown child, can constitute in the course of nature the actual relation of father and child. . . . The general presumption will prevail, except a case of plain natural impossibility is shewn. . . . Without weakening, therefore, any established cases, or any legal presumption, applicable to the subject, we may without hesitation say, that a child born under these circumstances is a bastard. . . .

GROSE, J. . . . We go upon the sure ground of natural impossibility and good sense; rejecting a rule founded in nonsense.

LE BLANC, J. . . . Where it can be demonstrated to be absolutely impossible, in the course of nature, that the husband could be the father of the child, it does not break in upon the reason of the current of authorities to say that the issue is illegitimate. If it do not appear but what he might have been the father, the presumption of law still holds in favour of the legitimacy. . . .

LAWRENCE, J., concurred.

Note.—Other matters judicially noticed as matters of common knowledge are the course of time, the ordinary public fasts and festivals, the dates of legal sittings of the Court, the order of the months, the meaning of ordinary language, weights and measures, etc.

As regards the presumption of legitimacy referred to in the above case, see post, p. 27.

PRESUMPTIONS.

In several cases the law itself presumes certain facts in favour of certain persons, who are thereby relieved from the burden of proof of such facts.

Presumptions, or conclusions drawn from certain facts, are frequently stated to be of three kinds—(1) Presumptions of fact; (2) Conclusive or irrebuttable presumptions of law; (3) Rebuttable presumptions of law. But, for the purposes of the law of evidence, the first two may be disregarded. A practical lawyer, when he speaks of a presumption, always means a rebuttable presumption. Presumptions of fact are nothing but the conclusions which the Court draws from any individual combination of facts in evidence before it, and are obviously as various and uncertain as such combinations of fact may be. It is impossible to classify or draw rules from them. They may be considered as outside the law of evidence altogether. Conclusive presumptions of law may be, with advantage, considered as mere rules of substantive law, and not presumptions at all. For instance, it is said to be a conclusive presumption that a child under seven cannot commit a crime. Is it not more proper to put it, as a rule of substantive law, that a person of such age is incapable of crime?

Sir J. Stephen uses the term in the third sense only. He says: "I use the word 'presumption' in the sense of a presumption of law capable of being rebutted. A presumption of fact is simply an argument. A conclusive presumption I describe as conclusive proof" (Stephen, App. Note 1). And he defines a presumption as "a rule of law that Courts and Judges shall draw a particular inference from a particular fact, or from particular evidence, unless and until the truth of such inference is disproved" (Stephen, 2). This use of the term is undoubtedly the most proper. [As to "compulsory," inferences, however, see Phipson. 6th ed., 7.]

Rebuttable presumptions or arbitrary conclusions of law can only be laid down by the law in cases of certain well-defined, and generally frequent, combinations of facts, instances of which are here given. In such cases the defined conclusion must be drawn until it is rebutted by other facts. Such other facts really produce a fresh combination of facts, from which the Court or jury may draw its own conclusion.

The place occupied by presumptions in the law of evidence may be said to be under the head of "Proof," the burden of which is generally obviated by a rebuttable presumption in favour of either party, and shifted to his opponent.

It is practically impossible to give any complete, or generally recognised, list of presumptions. On no other question in the law of evidence does there appear to be such vagueness and difference of opinion. The cases given below illustrate six presumptions which may be said to be generally accepted by the authorities as actual presumptions of law. Beyond these there appears to be so little agreement among the authors of different works on evidence that there are not even two books giving the same list. The main reason of this entire want of harmony seems to be this. Presumptions appear to have developed in all cases from relevant facts. The relevant facts, as will appear later (see post, p. 58), are those from which the Court may draw a certain conclusion. Facts raising presumptions are those from which the Court must draw a certain conclusion, until it is rebutted. In every case, it appears, where there is now a presumption, or imperative conclusion, there was a time when the conclusion was optional, or, in other words, when the Court might draw the conclusion which now it must draw. There has been a transition from relevancy to presumption. The Court having repeatedly had before it the same combination of facts, and having drawn what may have been the natural or obvious conclusion from such facts, the rule of law was ultimately evolved that the usual and familiar conclusion should be drawn, for the sake of uniformity and convenience. Thus we have developed presumptions of law. The difficulty is to ascertain when the boundary between relevancy and presumption has been passed. Decisions and judicial statements are not always clear on the matter, partly because the word "presumption" is frequently used loosely as meaning a presumption of fact, and partly because the occasion for laying down the law definitely may not have occurred. These observations may be illustrated by the rule as to proof of marriage. It is clear that marriage may generally be proved by cohabitation and reputation (see post, p. 95). Such facts are clearly relevant to the fact of marriage, and some writers treat the question as one of relevancy merely. Others say there is a presumption of law in such a case whilst some seek safety in putting the point under both heads. On the whole there seems to be no clear authority on this particular case.

There are certain well-recognised presumptions respecting documents; on which matter cases appear post, pp. 353, 357.

Equitable Presumptions.

Courts of Equity have evolved several presumptions, the most noticeable being those relating to:—

1. Ademption. When a parent gives a legacy to a child, and afterwards gives him a "portion" or substantial sum for his "advancement," the presumption generally is that the legacy is "adeemed," wholly or partially, by the portion, and the child cannot take both. This is really a case of "satisfaction" (see below). Also, when two legacies are given to a stranger, of equal amount and for the same purpose or motive, there is a similar presumption.

2. Performance. When a person covenants to purchase and settle land, or to leave personalty by will, for a certain person, and he afterwards purchases land, and such land or personalty passes on his intestacy to such person, performance of the covenant is presumed.

3. Satisfaction. When a parent covenants to give a "portion" to a child, and afterwards leaves him a substantial legacy, satisfaction of the covenant is generally presumed. Also, a debt due to a creditor is generally presumed to be satisfied by a legacy equal to the debt.

4. Trust. When a person buys property and has it conveyed gratuitously to another person, the latter is generally presumed to be a trustee for the former.

Statutory Presumptions.

In many cases presumptions are declared by statutes, among which may be mentioned:—

1. Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, ss. 27, 30, post, pp. 453, 454.

2. Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, s. 23, post, p. 476.

3. Children Act, 1908, ss. 14, 38, 123, post, pp. 487, 489, 490.

See further hereon, post, p. 145.

PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

WILLIAMS v. EAST INDIA CO.

KING'S BENCH. 1802.

3 EAST, 192; 6 R. R. 589.

There is a presumption of innocence, not only on criminal charges, but in all cases where an allegation of criminality is made.

Where the plaintiff declared that the defendants, who had chartered his ship, put on board dangerous substances without due notice to the captain or any other person concerned in the navigation, it lay upon him to prove even such negative averment, as the law presumed innocence of such a criminal neglect of duty.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included GROSE, LAWRENCE, and LE BLANC, JJ.). . . . Where any act is required to be done on the one part, so that the party neglecting it would be guilty of a criminal neglect of duty in not having done it, the law presumes the affirmative, and throws the burden of proving the contrary, that is, in such case, of proving a negative, on the other side. . . . That the declaration, in imputing to the defendants the having wrongfully put on board a ship, without notice to those concerned in the management of the ship, an article of a highly dangerous combustible nature, imputes to the defendants a criminal negligence, cannot well be questioned. In order to make the putting on board wrongful, the defendants must be conversant of the dangerous quality of the article put on board; and if being so, they yet gave no notice, considering the probable danger thereby occasioned to the lives of those on board, it amounts to a species of delinquency in the person so concerned in so putting such dangerous articles on board, for which they were criminally liable and punishable as for a misdemeanour at least. . . .

Note.—The rule that an alteration in a deed is presumed to have been made before execution appears to be an illustration of the above presumption (see post, p. 357). There is also a presumption of innocence when a person accused of a crime is under fourteen, even after the act is proved. His guilty mind must also be shewn.

There appears to be some doubt whether allegations of criminality in civil cases must be proved with as much strictness as in criminal proceedings. The weight of opinion seems to be that they need not be so strictly proved. See Phipson, 6th ed., 10; Taylor, § 112; Stephen, art. 94; and post, p. 142.

PRESUMPTION OF LEGITIMACY.

BANBURY PEERAGE CASE.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1811.

1 SIM. & ST. 153; 1 L. J. CH. 106; 24 R. R. 159.

There is a presumption that a child born during wedlock is legitimate.

In a claim of peerage the House of Lords requested the opinion of the Judges on certain questions.

The following is from Simons and Stuart:—

SIR JAMES MANSFIELD, C.J., stated the unanimous opinion of the Judges:—

“That the presumption of legitimacy arising from the birth of a child during wedlock, the husband and wife not being proved to be impotent, and having opportunities of access to each other, during the period in which a child could be begotten and born in the course of nature, may be rebutted by circumstances inducing a contrary presumption.” . . .

“That, after proof given of such access of the husband and wife, by which, according to the laws of nature, he might be the father of a child, no evidence can be received except it tend to falsify the proof that such intercourse had taken place.” . . .

“That in every case where a child is born in lawful wedlock, the husband not being separated from his wife by a sentence of divorce, sexual intercourse is presumed to have taken place between the husband and wife, until that presumption is encountered by such evidence as proves, to the satisfaction of those who are to decide the question, that such sexual intercourse did not take place at any time, when by such intercourse, the husband could, according to the laws of nature, be the father of such child."

"That the presumption of the legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock, the husband not being separated from his wife by a sentence of divorce, can only be legally resisted by evidence of such facts or circumstances as are sufficient to prove, to the satisfaction of those who are to decide the question, that no sexual intercourse did take place between the husband and wife, at any time, when, by such intercourse, the husband could, by the laws of nature, be the father of such child. Where the legitimacy of a child, in such a case, is disputed, on the ground that the husband was not the father of such child, the question to be left to the jury is, whether the husband was the father of such child, and the evidence to prove that he was not the father must be of such facts and circumstances as are sufficient to prove to the satisfaction of a jury, that no sexual intercourse took place between the husband and the wife at any time, when, by such intercourse, the husband could, by the laws of nature, be the father of such child." . . .

Note.—The presumption of legitimacy is said to be a very strong one. Formerly indeed, in order to rebut it, it was necessary to show that the husband had been "beyond the four seas," or out of the kingdom during the whole of the material period. This has been relaxed to the extent shown above. [As to the admissibility of the declarations of the parents to prove or disprove matrimonial access, see post, p. 309.]

PRESUMPTIONS OF CONTINUANCE, LIFE, AND DEATH.

There is a presumption of fact that things, circumstances, or positions, once proved to have existed in a certain state or condition at a certain date, continue to exist in such state or condition for a reasonable time. This presumption is applicable to the continuance of life, marriage, sanity, domicil, partnership, &c.

There is a presumption of law that a person who is proved not to have been heard of for seven years by those who would be likely to hear of him if living, is dead; but there is no presumption that he died at any particular time.

Note.—The presumption of continuance is clearly one of great practical importance. It is frequently quite impossible to prove, for instance, the existence of a certain thing in a certain state or condition at the particular moment in question. It is, in general, sufficient, with the aid of this presumption, to prove such existence and state at such an earlier time that, according to its nature, it may fairly be presumed to have lasted to the moment in question. [Where, however, title to property depends on the survivorship of the claimant, this fact must be established by affirmative evidence and not by mere presumption (infra, 31).]

R. v. LUMLEY.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1869.

L. R. 1 C. C. R. 196; 38 L. J. M. C. 86; 20 L. T. 454;
17 W. R. 685; 11 Cox C. C. 274.

On a trial for bigamy, it was proved that the prisoner, a woman, married A. in 1836, left him in 1843, and married another man in 1847. Nothing was heard of A. after the prisoner left him, nor was any evidence given of his age, but the Judge, holding that there was a presumption of law that A. was alive at the date of the second marriage, withdrew the case from the jury, in effect directing them to return a verdict of guilty. Held, that there was no presumption of law either in favour of, or against, the continuance of A.'s life up to 1847; but that it was a question for the jury as a matter of fact whether or not A. was alive at the date of the second marriage. Conviction quashed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LUSH, J. (who delivered the judgment of the Court, consisting of five Judges). . . . On an indictment for bigamy, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove to the satisfaction of the jury that the husband or wife, as the case may be, was alive at the date of the second marriage. This is purely a question of fact. The existence of the party at an antecedent date may, or may not, afford a reasonable inference that he is living at the subsequent date. If, for example, it was proved that he was in good health on the day preceding the marriage, the inference would be strong, almost irresistible, that he was living on the latter day, and the jury would in all probability find that he was so. If, on the other hand, it were proved that he was then in a dying condition, and nothing further was proved, they would probably decline to draw that inference. Thus, the question is entirely for the jury. The law makes no presumption either way.

[Note.—See further In re Phené's Trusts, infra; and for cases where the presumption of innocence conflicts with the presumption of continuance, R. v. Willshire, post, p. 37.]

IN RE PHENÉ'S TRUSTS.

CHANCERY APPEALS. 1869.

L. R. 5 CH. APP. 139; 39 L. J. CH. 316;
22 L. T. 111; 18 W. R. 303.

A testator died in January, 1861, having bequeathed his residuary estate equally between his nephews and nieces. N., one of his nephews, born in 1829, had gone to America in 1853, and frequently written home till August, 1858, but nothing further was heard of him except that he was registered as a deserter from the American Navy in June, 1860. In 1868 he was advertised for in English and American papers, but without result, and the share which his representatives claimed was paid into Court under the Trustee Relief Act. The Vice-Chancellor (James), considering himself bound by previous decisions, from which, however, he dissented, decided that N. was to be presumed to have survived the testator, and so was entitled to his share. Held, on appeal, that N.'s survivorship had not been established, and that the claim failed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

SIR G. M. GIFFARD, L.J. [after citing with approval the statement in Nepean v. Doe, 2 M. & W. 894, that "where a person goes abroad, and is not heard of for seven years, the law presumes the fact that such person is dead, but not that he died at the beginning or the end of any particular period during those seven years; and that if it be important to anyone to establish the precise time of such person's death, he must do so by evidence of some sort to be laid before the jury for that purpose, beyond the mere lapse of seven years since such person was last heard of"; but citing with disapproval certain other passages from that case to the effect that the law presumes that a person proved to be alive at a given time remains alive till the contrary is shown, continued]: Those passages are not essential to the conclusion arrived at, or sound in point of reasoning. The other parts of the same judgment go to prove that there is not, and ought not to be, any such presumption of law. . . . It is a general, well-founded rule that a person seeking to recover property must establish his title by affirmative proof . . . and to assert, as an exception to the rule, that the onus of proving death at any particular period, either within the seven years or otherwise, should be with the party alleging death at such particular period and not with the person to whose title that fact is essential, is not consistent with the authorities. . . . The true proposition is, that those who found a right upon a person having survived a particular period must establish that fact affirmatively by evidence; the evidence will, necessarily, differ in different cases, but sufficient evidence there must be, or the person asserting title will fail. . . . In my opinion the burden of proof is on N.'s representative and he has not proved affirmatively that N. survived the testator, a proof which I consider essential to his title.

Note.—[Nepean v. Doe, sup., which is a leading authority on the presumption of death, and was so given in the last edition, is omitted from the present issue for the reasons indicated in In re Phené's Trusts, sup., which show that the further doctrine, enunciated in the former case, viz., that the presumption of the continuance of life is one of law, is untenable.]

It is frequently stated that this presumption of death only arises where the person in question "goes abroad," and is not heard of for seven years. It is true that in the above case the person had gone abroad, but the rule appears to be general, as stated. Indeed, the presumption of death must be stronger where the person has not gone abroad, as he is in such case more likely to be heard of, and the absence of news of him would still more strongly suggest his death.

It has been held that a person ought not to be presumed to be dead in consequence of seven years' absence, if the other circumstances of the case render it probable that he would not have been heard of (Watson v. England, 14 Sim. 28; Bowden v. Henderson, 2 Sm. & G. 360). So, it might be difficult to presume the death of an absconding thief, as it would be difficult to procure witnesses who were likely to hear from him.

It should be particularly noted that, in order to raise this presumption, evidence must be given that the person whose death is in question has not been heard of for seven years. It is not, as is thought sometimes, that the presumption of continuance of life comes to an end after seven years. If the only evidence were that a young person was alive and well eight years ago, the presumption would be that he was still alive. So, in the case of R. v. Willshire (post, p. 37), life was presumed to continue after eleven years. It has even been said that the presumption of life may continue for half a century (Taylor, § 200).

Two statutes which have given effect to seven years' absence should be noted, viz., 19 Car. 2, c. 6, s. 2, providing that persons upon whose lives estates depend shall be accounted as naturally dead if they "remain beyond the seas or elsewhere absent themselves in this realm" for seven years; and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 57, providing that the penalty of bigamy shall not extend to any person whose husband or wife "shall have been continually absent from such person" for seven years and "shall not have been known by such person to be living within that time."

The Probate Court frequently presumes death after short absence, for the purpose of granting probate or letters of administration.

PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY.

BERRYMAN v. WISE.

KING'S BENCH. 1791.

4 T. R. 366; 2 R. R. 413.

There is a presumption that public and official acts and duties have been regularly and properly performed; and that persons acting as public officers, or in public capacities, have been regularly and properly appointed.

In an action by an attorney for words spoken of him in the way of his profession, it was held he need not prove that he was an attorney by his certificate or by a copy of the roll of attorneys; but that proof that he acted as such was sufficient.

The Court (which then consisted of LORD KENYON, C.J., BULLER, ASHHURST, and GROSE, JJ.) were of opinion that this was sufficient proof.

BULLER, J., said that in the case of all peace officers, justices of the peace, constables, etc., it was sufficient to prove that they acted in those characters without producing their appointments. . . . Neither in actions for tithes is it necessary for the incumbent to prove presentation, institution, and induction; proof that he received the tithes, and acted as the incumbent, is sufficient.

Note.—This presumption, which is of very wide application, is said to be based on principles of public policy, and upon the idea that a person is not likely to be in a position to act as a public officer unless he really were such. There is no such presumption concerning private offices (see post, p. 88), in which the course of business is merely a relevant fact from which a conclusion may be drawn.

Among the other public officials to whom this rule has been applied may be mentioned—solicitors, commissioners for oaths, County Court Judges, Masters in Chancery, Post Office officials, churchwardens, vestry clerks, and Lords of the Treasury.

PRESUMPTION OF LAWFUL ORIGIN.

JOHNSON v. BARNES.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 1873.

L. R. 8 C. P. 527; 42 L. J. C. P. 259; 29 L. T. 65.

There is a presumption that asserted rights exercised without interruption, for such a length of time that they may fairly be taken to have had a lawful origin, had such lawful origin.

Where the Corporation of a Borough had from time immemorial exercised exclusively a right of pasturage over certain lands, it was presumed that the Corporation was legally entitled to an exclusive right of pasturage over such lands, and not a mere right of common which could not, under the circumstances, have been legal, and this notwithstanding that the right had been described as a right of common in a long series of documents.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

KELLY, C.B. . . . I think we are bound to presume a legal origin, if such be possible, in favour of a right which appears, from the facts stated in the case, to have existed for many hundreds of years, and that the inaccurate description of such a right in a series of conveyances cannot interfere with the presumption which we should otherwise be entitled to make from the facts with relation to the enjoyment of the right. When we look to these facts, we find that the Corporation of Colchester has in fact exercised a right of pasturing an unlimited number of cattle or sheep on certain lands around the walls of the town during a certain season of the year, except as to any part of the land under cultivation. . . . It seems to me manifest that what the Corporation have exercised from time immemorial is a right which, though frequently spoken of as a right of common, was, in fact, an exclusive right of pasturage. . . .

Then we come to what has been made one of the most important questions in the case, that is to say, supposing that the right actually exercised has always been in fact a right of exclusive pasturage, and has always been treated and dealt with as such, is the presumption which would naturally arise from the facts destroyed by the effect of a long and numerous series of documents in which the right is spoken of in expressions indicating a right in the nature of a right of common? I do not think we should be justified in giving this effect to the documents, if the result would be to set aside a right which has been so long exercised in fact. . . . It appears to me, therefore, on consideration of the whole of the facts and documents in this case, that we are bound, in accordance with one of the best established principles of law, to presume a legal origin, if one were possible, in favour of a long and uninterrupted actual enjoyment of a right.

MARTIN and CLEASBY, BB., and QUAIN and ARCHIBALD, JJ., concurred.

Note.—The most noticeable application of this presumption of legal origin occurs in the case of common law prescription. Strictly, a prescriptive right should have existed from "time immemorial," but when it was shown to have been actually exercised for a considerable number of years, according to circumstances, it was presumed to have existed from time immemorial, and thus to have had a legal origin, or to have been created by a "lost grant" since time immemorial. Without such presumption it would have been practically impossible to prove prescriptive rights. The Prescription Act, 1832, now simplifies the matter by laying down definite periods (e.g., twenty years for easements, and thirty years for rights of common, etc.), for the acquirement of prescriptive rights in most cases.

The so-called "presumption of lost grant" was but an instance of the presumption of lawful origin in cases where such origin would properly be a "grant." Another illustration is afforded by the dedication of a highway. "If there has been a public uninterrupted user of a road for such a length of time as to satisfy the jury that the owner of the soil intended to dedicate it to the public, this is sufficient to prove the existence of a highway" (Williams, J., in Dawes v. Hawkins, 8 C. B. N. S. 848).

SURVIVORSHIP.

WING v. ANGRAYE.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1860.

30 L. J. CH. 65; 8 H. L. C. 183.

There is no presumption arising from age or sex, etc., as to survivorship among persons dying from the same cause, nor is there any presumption that they all died at the same time. The question is one of fact, and if the evidence does not establish the survival of any individual, the law will treat it as a matter incapable of determination.

A husband, wife and two children were swept off the deck of a ship by one wave, and there was no evidence that any one of them was seen later than the others. Although the husband was a strong man and a good swimmer, and the wife weak and delicate and no swimmer, the Court would not presume that the husband survived the wife.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD CAMPBELL, L.C. . . . According to our law (unlike the Code Napoléon, which has been relied on), where two individuals perish from the same calamity, there is no inference of law as to age or sex which was the survivor. There must be evidence of the fact, and the onus probandi lies on the party who asserts the affirmative. . . . There is no foundation for the supposed doctrine that, where the evidence left it doubtful which of two individuals died first, there is a presumption of law that they died at the same time. . . .

LORD CHELMSFORD. . . . There is no rule of presumption in our law which would govern this case, and the evidence left the matter in mere conjecture. . . .

LORDS BROUGHAM, CRANWORTH and WENSLEYDALE concurred on this question, differing on others.

Note.—Mr. Best, in his Law of Evidence, § 410, says that this subject is "one which has embarrassed more or less the jurists and lawyers of every country. . . . The civil law and its commentators were considerably occupied with questions of this nature, and seem to have established as a general principle (subject, however, to exceptions) that, where the parties thus perishing together were parent and child, the latter, if under the age of puberty, was presumed to have died first; but if above that age, the rule was reversed; while in the case of husband and wife, the presumption seems to have been in favour of the survivorship of the husband. The French lawyers, also, both ancient and modern, have taken much pains on this subject. All the theories that have been formed respecting it are based on the assumption that the party deemed to have survived was likely from superior strength, to have struggled longer against death than his companion. . . . The English law has judged more wisely; for notwithstanding some questionable dicta, the true conclusion from the authorities seems to be, that it recognises no artificial presumption in cases of this nature, but leaves the real or supposed superior strength of one of the persons perishing by a common calamity to its natural weight, i.e., as a circumstance proper to be taken into consideration by a judicial tribunal, but which standing alone is insufficient to shift the burden of proof."

The curious case of Broughton v. Randall, Cro. Eliz. 503 (1596), illustrates this matter. A father and son "were both hanged in one cart: but because the son (as was deposed by witnesses) survived, as appeared by some tokens, viz., his shaking his legs," it was held that he was the survivor.

Persons who die in a common calamity are called "commorientes."

CONFLICTING PRESUMPTIONS.

R. v. WILLSHIRE.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1881.

L. R. 6 Q. B. D. 366; 50 L. J. M. C. 57; 44 L. T. 222;
29 W. R. 473; 45 J. P. 375; 14 Cox, C. C. 541.

Where there are conflicting presumptions, they are to be dealt with in the same way as conflicting evidence, i.e., they must be left to the jury.

In a prosecution for bigamy, it appeared that the prisoner had gone through four marriage ceremonies with A, B, C, and D, in 1864, 1868, 1879 and 1880 respectively. Having been convicted in 1868 of marrying B in the lifetime of A, he was now prosecuted for marrying D in the lifetime of C. In defence, the prisoner gave evidence of the previous conviction, thus proving that A, his real, or first, wife, was alive in 1868. The presumption then arose that her life continued to 1879, when the prisoner married C, and that therefore the marriage with C was void, and he had not committed bigamy by marrying D in the lifetime of C. On the other hand, there was a presumption of innocence as to the marriage with C, consequently a conflicting presumption of the real or first wife's death. It was held to be a question of fact for the jury whether she was alive or not.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J. . . . This conflict of presumptions was sufficient to raise a question of fact for the jury to determine. It was for the jury to decide whether the man told or acted a falsehood for the purpose of marrying in 1879, or whether his real wife was then dead. The learned Common Serjeant did not leave the question to the jury, but, on these conflicting presumptions, held that the burthen of proof was on the prisoner, who, besides showing the existence of the life in 1868, was bound to prove that it continued till 1879. There is no such rule of law. The prisoner was not bound to do more than set up the life in 1868, which would be presumed to continue, and it was then for the prosecution to show by evidence that that presumption was rebutted. . . .

LINDLEY, HAWKINS, LOPES and BOWEN, JJ., concurred.

Note.—As to the two presumptions which arose and were in conflict in this case, viz., that of continuance, and that of innocence, see ante, pp. 26, 28.

ADMISSIONS.

Any matters which have been admitted for the purpose of the trial need not be proved. Admissions thus expressly made in the proceedings prior to or at the trial are sometimes called formal or express admissions, to distinguish them from those informal or casual statements made by a party against his interest, which may, at the trial, be proved by witnesses. Such "informal" admissions, as they may be called, are dealt with hereafter, as exceptions from the "hearsay" rule (see post, p. 160).

Formal or Express admissions may be made—

(a) On Pleadings. Facts alleged in a pleading, if not denied, are taken to be admitted (see O. 19, r. 13, post, p. 509).

(b) On Notice to Admit facts or documents, served by one party on another (see O. 32, rr. 2, 4, post, p. 511).

(c) In Answers to Interrogatories administered by one party to another (see O. 31, r. 1, post, p. 509).

(d) By Solicitor or Counsel, in the exercise of his discretion, before or at trial (see O. 32, r. 1, post, p. 511).

It should, however, be noted here that express admissions are only allowed in civil cases. They are never allowed in criminal cases, unless a plea of "guilty" can be treated as such. It is otherwise as to informal admissions (see post, pp. 162, 167).

Details of admissions under heads (a), (b), and (c) should be sought in books on Procedure. See also Order 32, post, p. 511. The case following illustrates head (d).

SWINFEN v. LORD CHELMSFORD.

EXCHEQUER. 1860.

29 L. J. EX. 382; 2 L. T. 406; 8 W. R. 545;
6 JUR. (N.S.) 1035; 5 H. & N. 890.

A barrister (or other advocate) may make any admission on behalf of his client which, in the honest exercise of his judgment, he thinks proper; but he has no authority on matters collateral to the suit.

The defendant, when Sir Frederick Thesiger, appeared for the plaintiff in a certain case, which he compromised. It was held that he was authorised to do so by virtue of his position.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

POLLOCK, C.B. (delivering the judgment of the Court, POLLOCK, C.B., BRAMWELL, CHANNELL and WATSON, BB). . . . The conduct and control of the cause are left necessarily to counsel. If a party desires to retain the power of directing counsel how the suit shall be conducted, he must agree with some counsel willing to bind himself. . . . Although counsel has complete authority over the suit, the mode of conducting it, and all that is incident to it, such as withdrawing the record, withdrawing a juror, or calling a witness, or selecting such as in his discretion he thinks ought to be called, and other matters which properly belong to the suit, and the management and conduct of the trial, he has not, by virtue of his retainer in the suit, any power over matters that are collateral to it. . . .

Note.—The same rule would apply to a solicitor acting as an advocate.

MATTERS OF WHICH PROOF IS NOT ALLOWED.

ESTOPPEL.

The law in some cases estops or prevents a person from alleging certain facts, which cannot be proved by him.

An estoppel, says Blackstone, "happens where a man hath done some act or executed some deed which estops or precludes him from averring anything to the contrary" (Commentaries, III., 308). Coke's explanation of it is that it is so called "because a man's owne act or acceptance stoppeth or closeth up his mouth to alleage or plead the truth" (Coke on Littleton, 352 a); for which reason it is said to be "odious" and to be construed strictly; but the better view appears to be that the reason is "to provide certain means by which a man may be concluded, not from saying the truth, but from saying that that which, by the intervention of himself or his, has once become accredited for truth, is false" (Smith's Leading Cases II., 726). Sometimes an estoppel is spoken of as a "conclusive admission."

Estoppels are generally divided into three kinds:

1. Estoppel by Record. The very practical and necessary rule that a person is not permitted to deny facts which have previously been decided against him by the judgment of a Court of Law, appears to be based on two maxims—Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium, and Nemo debet bis vexari pro eâdem causâ. It applies generally to judgments of all civil and criminal Courts, whether of record or not, and whether English or foreign, as regards matters which the Court had jurisdiction to decide directly between the parties. So it applies to judgments of County Courts and Courts of Summary Jurisdiction, to judgments obtained in chambers, or by consent or default, if final and not merely interlocutory.

2. Estoppel by Deed. The rule that a party to a deed is not permitted to deny facts stated therein affords an illustration of the exaggerated importance of a "seal" in English law. Neither sealing-wax nor wafer is necessary to constitute a seal (see post, p. 351). Apparently, a smudge of ink on a document purporting to be a deed is a seal if so intended, and it has a greater importance in law than a deliberate and identifiable signature. There is no estoppel in the case of ordinary signed documents.

3. Estoppel by Conduct. The rule that a person who has by his conduct or words caused another person to act in a certain manner cannot afterwards tell an inconsistent tale to the prejudice of such other person appears, on the other hand, to be based on sound common sense, good business and policy. It seems to have originated in equity, and is sometimes known as "equitable estoppel." The expression "estoppel in pais" seems to be falling into disuse. There would appear to be a fine future for this useful and elastic doctrine.

The cases appearing below illustrate and explain these three kinds of estoppel.

Estoppels are sometimes declared by Statute. Two noticeable provisions on this subject are the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 54 (post, p. 454), and the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 14 (post, p. 462).

I. ESTOPPEL BY RECORD.

THE DUCHESS OF KINGSTON'S CASE.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1776.

20 HOWELL'S STATE TRIALS, 355, 537.

A person who was a party to legal proceedings in which judgment was given, or who claims under a person who was a party thereto, is estopped from denying the facts upon which such judgment was based, if such judgment be pleaded as an estoppel.

But a judgment "in personam" does not estop persons who were neither parties nor privies thereto.

Nor are the parties or their privies estopped from denying matters which merely came collaterally into question in such legal proceedings, or which were only incidentally cognisable, or which might be inferred by argument from the judgment.

Any person against whom a judgment is offered in evidence may prove that it was obtained by fraud or collusion to which he was no party.

The Duchess of Kingston was indicted and tried in the House of Lords for bigamy, in marrying the Duke of Kingston in March, 1769, during the lifetime of her husband the Earl of Bristol. The Duchess pleaded that, in a suit for jactitation of marriage instituted by her against the Earl of Bristol, in the Ecclesiastical Court, namely, in the Consistory Court of the Bishop of London, it had been decreed and declared in February, 1769, that she was a spinster, and that the Earl of Bristol had wickedly and maliciously boasted and publicly asserted (though falsely) that they were joined and contracted together in matrimony; and he was admonished to desist from such boasting and asserting of such alleged marriage.

It was objected that such decree of the Ecclesiastical Court was not binding on the Crown, and did not estop the prosecution from proving that in fact there was a lawful marriage as alleged, at the date of such decree, on the grounds: (1) that the Crown was not a party to the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts, and (2) that the decree was obtained by fraud or collusion of the parties to such proceedings.

It was ordered by the Lords that the following questions be put to the Judges, viz.:

1. Whether a sentence of the Spiritual Court against a marriage in a suit for jactitation of marriage is conclusive evidence so as to stop the counsel for the Crown from proving the said marriage in an indictment for polygamy?

2. Whether, admitting such sentence to be conclusive upon such indictment, the counsel for the Crown may be admitted to avoid the effect of such sentence, by proving the same to have been obtained by fraud or collusion?

SIR WILLIAM DE GREY, C.J. (delivering the unanimous opinion of the Judges). . . . As a general principle, a transaction between two parties, in judicial proceedings, ought not to be binding upon a third; for it would be unjust to bind any person who could not be admitted to make a defence, or to examine witnesses, or to appeal from a judgment he might think erroneous; and therefore the depositions of witnesses in another cause in proof of a fact, the verdict of a jury finding the fact, and the judgment of the Court upon the facts found, although evidence against the parties, and all claiming under them, are not, in general, to be used to the prejudice of strangers. . . .

From the variety of cases relative to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits, these two deductions seem to follow as generally true: first, that the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon this point, is as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court; secondly, that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognisable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment.

Upon the subject of marriage, the Spiritual Court has the sole and exclusive cognisance of questioning and deciding, directly, the legality of marriage; and of enforcing, specially, the rights and obligations respecting persons depending upon it; but the Temporal Courts have the sole cognisance of examining and deciding upon all temporal rights of property; and, so far as such rights are concerned, they have the inherent power of deciding incidentally, either upon the fact, or the legality of marriage, where they lie in the way to the decision of the proper objects of their jurisdiction. . . . So that the trial of marriage, either as to legality or fact, was not absolutely and from its nature, an object alieni fori. . . .

A sentence of nullity and a sentence in affirmation of a marriage have been received as conclusive evidence on a question of legitimacy arising incidentally upon a claim to a real estate. A sentence in a case of jactitation has been received upon a title in ejectment as evidence against a marriage, and, in like manner in personal actions immediately founded on a supposed marriage. . . . But in all these cases the parties to the suits, or at least the parties against whom the evidence was received, were parties to the sentence and had acquiesced under it, or claimed under those who were parties and had acquiesced.

But although the law stands thus with regard to civil suits, proceedings in matters of crime, and especially of felony, fall under a different consideration, first, because the parties are not the same; for the King, in whom the trust of prosecuting public offences is vested, and which is executed by his immediate orders, or in his name by some prosecutor, is no party to such proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court, and cannot be admitted to defend, examine witnesses, in any manner intervene, or appeal; secondly, such doctrines would tend to give the Spiritual Courts, which are not permitted to exercise any judicial cognisance in matters of crime, an immediate influence in trials for offences, and to draw the decision from the course of the common law, to which it solely and peculiarly belongs. . . .

But if a direct sentence upon the identical question in a matrimonial cause should be admitted as evidence, . . . yet a cause of jactitation is of a different nature; it is ranked as a cause of defamation only. . . . The sentence has only a negative and qualified effect, viz., "that the party has failed in his proof, and that the libellant is free from all matrimonial contract, as far as yet appears"; . . . so that, admitting the sentence in its full extent and import, it only proves that it did not yet appear that they were married, and not that they were not married at all. . . .

But if it was a direct and decisive sentence upon the point, and, as it stands, to be admitted as conclusive evidence upon the Court, and not to be impeached from within; yet, like all other acts of the highest judicial authority, it is impeachable from without; although it is not permitted to show that the Court was mistaken, it may be shown that they were misled.

Fraud is an extrinsic, collateral act; which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of justice. Lord Coke says, it avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical or temporal. . . .

We are therefore unanimously of opinion:—

First, that a sentence in the Spiritual Court against a marriage in a suit of jactitation of marriage is not conclusive evidence so as to stop the counsel for the Crown from proving the marriage in an indictment for polygamy.

Secondly, admitting such sentence to be conclusive upon such indictment, the counsel for the Crown may be admitted to avoid the effect of such sentence by proving the same to have been obtained by fraud or collusion.

Note.—Judgments are said to be of two kinds—in Rem and in Personam. The former term seems never to have been clearly defined, but it is commonly understood to apply to all judgments affecting the legal status of some subject-matter, person or thing; e.g., Admiralty judgments in cases of forfeiture or prize, Divorce Court decrees, grants of Probate and Administration, and adjudications in Bankruptcy. Such judgments are conclusive against all persons, whether parties or strangers. Judgments in personam are all ordinary judgments between persons not so affecting status. Such judgments bind only parties and privies as to the facts in issue. But all judgments are conclusive against all persons of their legal effect, as distinguished from the facts upon which they are based.

“Privies” are divided by Coke (Co. Lit. 271 a) and other writers into three classes:—(1) In estate (or interest), as donor, and donee, lessor and lessee, or vendor and purchaser; (2) In blood, as ancestor and heir, or coparceners; (3) In law (or representation), as testator and executor, intestate and administrator, tenant and lord claiming by escheat, or successive incumbents. The same rule applies to these privies as to original parties, viz., that a party claiming through another is estopped in the same manner as the original party.

VOOGHT v. WINCH.

KING'S BENCH. 1819.

2 B. & ALD. 662; 21 R. R. 446.

A former judgment between the same parties on the same subject-matter will operate as an estoppel and be conclusive only when it is so pleaded, or there is no opportunity of so pleading it. Otherwise it is only a relevant fact from which the Court may draw a conclusion in favour of the person who tenders it as evidence.

In an action for diverting water from a stream, the defendant gave in evidence a judgment in a former action between the same parties for the same cause of action, and insisted that it operated as an estoppel. The Judge received it in evidence, but refused to nonsuit the plaintiff, the defendant having pleaded only "not guilty," and the plaintiff obtained a verdict. On motion to the Court for a nonsuit or new trial, a nonsuit was refused, but a new trial was granted on other grounds.

ABBOTT, C.J. . . . I am of opinion that the verdict and judgment obtained for the defendant in the former action was not conclusive evidence against the plaintiff upon the plea of not guilty. It would indeed have been conclusive if pleaded in bar to the action by way of estoppel. In that case the plaintiff would not be allowed to discuss the case with the defendant, and for the second time to disturb and vex him by the agitation of the same question. But the defendant has pleaded not guilty, and has thereby elected to submit his case to a jury. Now if the former verdict was proper to be received in evidence by the learned Judge, its effect must be left to the jury. If it were conclusive indeed, the learned Judge ought immediately to have nonsuited the plaintiff, or to have told the jury that they were bound, in point of law, to find a verdict for the defendant. It appears to me, however, that the party, by not pleading the former judgment in bar, consents that the whole matter shall go to a jury, and leaves it open to them to inquire into the same upon evidence, and they are to give their verdict upon the whole evidence then submitted to them. I am aware that in Bird v. Randall (3 Burr. 1353), Lord MANSFIELD is reported to have said that a former recovery need not be pleaded but will be a bar when given in evidence. I cannot, however, accede to that; for the very first thing I learnt in the study of the law was that a judgment recovered must be pleaded: that has so strongly engrafted itself on my mind as a general principle, that nothing I have heard in argument this day, has shaken it.

BAYLEY, J. . . . An action is here brought, as it is alleged, for the same cause in respect of which a former action had been brought, and in which a verdict was obtained by the defendant. Now a defendant ought not, in point of law, to be twice vexed for the same cause of action; and he would have had a right, if he had thought fit, to have pleaded the former verdict by way of estoppel, and thereby have shown that the plaintiff was not at liberty to try that question a second time, which had been tried before and decided against him. Instead, however, of putting himself on that estoppel, he merely says, that he is not guilty of the offence imputed to him; and, upon that issue, the jury are to try, not whether the plaintiff is estopped from trying the question, but whether the defendant be guilty or not. Upon that issue, the defendant may prove, that the act imputed was not done by him, and that another jury were of opinion that he was not guilty; and, for that purpose, he may give in evidence the judgment in the former cause for the consideration of the second jury. The question, however, for the second jury (when the defendant has chosen to plead the general issue) is, whether the defendant be guilty or not? and the question raised upon that issue, in an action on the case is, whether the plaintiff had or had not any cause of action at the time of the commencement of the suit? Now the judgment for the defendant in a former action for the same cause, does not necessarily prove that the plaintiff has no cause of action. It decides nothing unless by way of estoppel. In Outram v. Morewood (3 East, 346), where this subject was very fully considered, Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., in giving the judgment of the Court, takes this distinction, and states expressly that a former judgment, if properly pleaded by way of estoppel, would be conclusive, but if only offered in evidence it would not be so. For these reasons, I am of opinion, that, upon this issue, the judgment in the former verdict was evidence only to go to the jury.

HOLROYD, J. . . . There were two modes, by either of which the defendant might defend himself. There having been a former action, in which he had succeeded, he might have alleged that he was not to be called upon to defend himself again for the same cause. If he chooses to adopt that mode of defence, he must plead it in bar; and say that the other party is not at liberty to call upon him to answer again that which he had before called upon him to do, when a verdict was given in his favour. If, however, he declines that mode of defence, and submits to answer for the cause of action alleged, and defends himself by saying that the plaintiff has no ground of action; he then leaves the question to the jury, and they are to try, not whether there was a former action for the same cause, but whether the plaintiff has such a ground of action as he alleges in his present declaration. A party may have matter which he may either give in evidence, or which, if pleaded, would be an estoppel; but when he puts it to the jury to find what the fact was, it is inconsistent with the issue which he has joined, for him to say that the jury are estopped from going into the enquiry. He may, however, use the former verdict as evidence, and pregnant evidence, to guide the jury who are to try the second case, to a conclusion in his favour. But if, notwithstanding the prior verdict and judgment, the jury think the case is with the plaintiff, they are not estopped from finding the verdict accordingly. . . . In Trevivan v. Lawrence (Salk. 276), it was held, that if a party will not rely on the estoppel when he may, but takes issue on the fact, the jury shall not be bound by the estoppel for they are to find the truth of the fact which is against him; and in Buller's Nisi Prius, it is laid down, that the jury cannot find anything against that which the parties have affirmed and admitted of record, though the truth is contrary; but in other cases, though the parties be estopped to say the truth, the jury are not; as in Goddard's case (4 Coke, 44), where the bond was dated nine months after the execution, and after the death of the obligor. I think, therefore, that upon principle as well as upon authority, the former judgment was not conclusive against the plaintiff upon this issue, and that the learned Judge, therefore, did right in receiving the evidence, and suffering the trial to proceed.

Note.—Apparently, estoppels either by record or by deed must be specially pleaded. There seems to be some doubt as to the necessity of pleading estoppels by conduct. For instance, Taylor, 8th ed., § 92, says there is no need to plead them; but id. 11th ed., and Odgers on Pleading, 223, say they must always be pleaded.

II. ESTOPPEL BY DEED.

BOWMAN v. TAYLOR.

KING'S BENCH. 1834.

4 L. J. K. B. 58; 2 AD. & E. 278; 4 N. & M. 264;
41 R. R. 437.

A person who is party to a deed, or instrument under seal, is estopped from denying its contents. So also are his privies.

The estoppel extends to statements made even in recitals.

A deed, by which the plaintiff granted to the defendant a licence to use certain looms, recited that the plaintiff had invented certain improvements, etc., in power looms, and had obtained letters-patent and had caused a specification to be enrolled. It was held that the defendant was estopped from pleading that the plaintiff was not the inventor, that it was not a new invention, and that no specification had been enrolled.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. . . . An estoppel operates because itcludeth a man to allege the truth by reason of the assertion of the party that that fact is true. The doctrine, as laid down by Coke, that a recital doth not conclude, because it is no direct affirmation, is not supported by any authority. If a party has by his deed directly asserted a specific fact, it is impossible to say that he shall not be precluded from disputing that fact, thus solemnly admitted by him on the face of his deed. . . .

PATTESON, J. . . . The only authority which seems to press upon us is the authority of Lord Coke, but there have been many cases in which a party has been estopped from disputing a recital. But it is said that it will be found in these cases that the recitals are so bound up in and part of the deed as that they are the same as the deed itself. Try the present case by that test. This recital is manifestly so clearly connected with the operative part of the deed as to be essentially part of the deed itself. . . . The current of authorities is clearly in favour of the position, that the defendant in this case is estopped by the recital in the deed.

TAUNTON and WILLIAMS, J.J., concurred.

Note.—Recitals are the introductory or explanatory statements in a deed, inserted before the operative part of the deed, and are intended to explain the transaction and make its effect clear. The operative part then proceeds to declare the operation and effect of the present deed and to bind the parties. The present rule, that all statements in a deed estop the parties, is doubtless based on the idea that they should be careful with regard to all the statements in a deed, even those which are merely introductory.

It may be, however, that the statement in question is in reality the statement of one party only. In such case it estops such party only (Stroughill v. Buck, 14 Q. B. 787).

A mere receipt, for money or goods, does not amount to an estoppel. It is only prima facie evidence and is open to explanation. Even a receipt in a deed appears not to amount to an estoppel, generally, either at law or in equity, since the Judicature Act. See Marine Insurance Act, 1906, s. 54, post, p. 478.

III. ESTOPPEL BY CONDUCT.

FREEMAN v. COOKE.

EXCHEQUER. 1848.

18 L. J. Ex. 114; 12 JUR. 777; 2 Ex. 654; 6 D. & L. 187; 76 R. R. 711.

A person who, by his words or conduct, "wilfully" causes another person to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his position for the worse, is estopped from setting up against the latter person a different state of things as existing at the time in question.

This is so whatever such person's real intention was, if he so conducted himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true and believe that it was meant he should act upon it. Conduct by negligence or omission, where there is a duty cast upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth, may often have the same effect.

But there is no estoppel unless the words or conduct were intended to induce the other person so to act, or they were such that a reasonable man would act upon them; although he did as a fact act upon them to his prejudice.

The defendant was sheriff of Yorkshire, and his officer had seized certain goods under a writ of execution against Joseph and Benjamin Broadbent. Evidence was given that the goods belonged to William Broadbent, but that he, expecting an execution against himself, removed them to the house of his father, Joseph Broadbent; then again, anticipating a distress for rent on his father, Joseph, he removed them to the house of his brother, Benjamin Broadbent. When the sheriff's officer entered the house of Benjamin, William gave him notice not to seize the goods as they were the property of Benjamin. The officer then produced his writ, which was against Benjamin. Then William said the goods belonged to another brother, and finally that they belonged to himself. The officer seized and sold the goods as the goods of Benjamin. William having become bankrupt, an action was brought by his assignees to recover the goods in question, and it was contended by the defendant that the statements of William operated as conclusive evidence, or an estoppel, that the property was not his. It was held that it was not so.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

PARKE, B. (delivering the judgment of the Court, PARKE, ALDERSON, ROLFE and PLATT, BB.). . . . The only question is whether it be an estoppel. It is contended that it was, upon the authority of the rule laid down in Pickard v. Sears (6 A. & E. 469). That rule is, that "where one by his words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that behalf, or to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the time." . . . By the term "wilfully," however, in that rule, we must understand, if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue, at least that he means his representation to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly; and if, whatever a man's real meaning may be, he so conducts himself that a reasonable man would take the repre- sentation to be true, and believe that it was meant he should act upon it, and did act upon it as true, the party making the representation would be equally precluded from contesting its truth; and conduct by negligence or omission, when there is a duty cast upon a person by usage of trade or otherwise to disclose the truth, may often have the same effect—as, for instance, a retiring partner omitting to inform the customers of the firm, in the usual mode, that the continuing partners were no longer authorised to act as his agents, is bound by all contracts made by them with third persons on the faith of their being authorised. . . .

It is not found that the bankrupt intended to induce the officers to seize the goods as those of Benjamin, and whatever intention he had on his first statement was done away with by an opposite statement before the seizure took place; nor can it be said that any reasonable man would have seized the goods on the faith of the bankrupt's representations taken all together. In truth, in most cases to which the doctrine in Pickard v. Sears is to be applied, the representation is such as to amount to the contract or licence of the party making it. Hence there is no pretence for saying it amounted to a licence, and a contract is out of the question.

Note.—It will be observed that, in the above case, William Broadbent made three inconsistent statements, therefore the sheriff's officer could not say that he reasonably acted on either of such statements. If the only statement made had been the first one, that the goods belonged to Benjamin, and the officer then seized them as Benjamin's goods, doubtless there would have been an estoppel.

The doctrine of estoppel by conduct may be applied generally to all cases in which a person seeks to give evidence in direct conflict with any of his previous deliberate acts or statements, by which he has naturally misled another person.

A person may by his conduct even be estopped from pleading an Act of Parliament or statutory defence. Thus, an employer was estopped from pleading that a workman had not taken proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act within the statutory period of six months, where he had led him to believe the claim was admitted (Wright v. Bagnall, [1900] 2 Q. B. 240); and a defendant might be estopped from pleading that money was paid in respect of a gaming debt, where he had led the plaintiff to believe it was not so (Tatam v. Reeve, [1893] 1 Q. B. 44).

But a person cannot by conduct or representation create a state of things which he is legally unable to create; he cannot acquire capacity by estoppel. So, a corporation, infant, or married woman cannot be estopped from showing their respective legal incapacities.

"The truth is, that the Courts have been, for some time, favourable to the utility of the doctrine of estoppel, hostile to its technicality. Perceiving how essential it is to the quick and easy transaction of business, that one man should be able to put faith in the conduct and representations of his fellow, they have inclined to hold such conduct and such representations binding in cases where a mischief or injustice would be caused by treating their effect as revocable. At the same time, they have been unwilling to allow men to be entrapped by formal statements and admissions, which were perhaps looked upon as unimportant when made, and by which no one ever was deceived or induced to alter his position. Such estoppels are still, as formerly, considered odious" (Smith's Leading Cases, II., 865).

COOKE v. LOXLEY.

KING'S BENCH. 1792.

5 T. R. 4; 2 R. R. 521.

A tenant of land is estopped from disputing the title of the landlord by whom he was let into possession, or whom he has acknowledged by payment of rent.

In an action for use and occupation of land let to the defendant by the predecessor in title of the present plaintiff, to whom the defendant had also paid rent, the defendant offered evidence to the effect that the plaintiff had no title to the land. Lord Kenyon rejected the evidence, and, on an application for a new trial, his decision was upheld.

LORD KENYON, C.J. Conforming to the uniform decisions in all the cases upon this subject, I ruled at the trial, and continue to entertain the same opinion, that in an action for use and occupation it ought not to be permitted to a tenant, who occupies land by the licence of another, to call upon that other to show the title under which he let the land. This is not a mere technical rule, but is founded in public convenience and policy. And the only question here is whether that rule shall still prevail; if it do, it applies equally strongly to the present case as to all others. Here the defendant, who occupied the land, did so by the permission of the plaintiff, and then refused to pay his rent under an idea that he might contest the plaintiff's right; but the plaintiff could not be supposed to come to trial prepared to meet such a defence and to make out his title; such an action as the present does not involve the question of title. . . .

GROSE, J. It has been said that the rule of not giving in evidence nil habit in tenementis in an action for use and occupation is a technical rule; but, in my opinion, no rule is better founded in justice and policy than this. The general rule is admitted that in such an action as this the tenant cannot dispute the landlord's title; and no exception to it has been shown applicable to this case.

Note.—This estoppel of a tenant is one of the most noticeable instances of estoppel by conduct. Similar cases of estoppel are those of bailees, licensees and agents, who cannot deny the title of the bailors, licensors or principals, after having acknowledged them by their dealings.

But the tenant is not estopped from showing that the title of his landlord has expired since the tenancy commenced, or that the land in question is not comprised in the lease. There is no inconsistency in holding the land and at the same time proving such matters.

Where the tenancy is by deed there might conceivably be also an estoppel by deed in the case of landlord and tenant.

STATEMENTS "WITHOUT PREJUDICE."

The second class of matters of which proof is not allowed consists of statements or admissions made "without prejudice." Such statements are invariably made in the course of negotiations for settlement of disputes. It is considered necessary to allow the parties to speak somewhat freely in attempting settlements, and to disclose their cases to each other to some extent. But it is clear that the necessary freedom of discussion could not well take place if all the statements or admissions made could be given in evidence after the negotiations for settlement had failed. It is usual, and certainly advisable, expressly to state that the communications in question are made without pre- judice; but it seems clear that the rule of exclusion would apply if it appeared from the circumstances that it was intended that the communications should not be used as evidence (see Cory v. Bretton, 4 C. & P. 462).

This matter is sometimes dealt with under the head of "Privilege" (see post, p. 303). But this seems scarcely correct. Privilege arises when a witness objects to disclose facts or documents; it is an advantage to the witness. In the case of statements made without prejudice, the law prohibits him from disclosing facts which he may wish to disclose. The rule is in favour of his opponent.

PADDOCK v. FORRESTER.

COMMON PLEAS. 1841.

3 SCOTT, N. R. 715; 3 M. & G. 903; 67 R. R. 634.

Communications, admissions or other statements, written or verbal, made by a party to an action, pending the dispute or action, and made expressly or impliedly "without prejudice," with the object of compromise or settlement, cannot be given in evidence against the person making them.

A letter written without prejudice protects from disclosure the whole of the correspondence of which it forms part.

A letter was written by one party "without prejudice." The reply thereto was not stated to have been so written. The latter was held inadmissible.

The following is from Scott:—

TINDAL, C.J. It is of great consequence that parties should be unfettered by correspondence entered into upon the express understanding that it is to be without prejudice. And it would be hard indeed to hold that a letter which is stated to be written without prejudice is admissible in evidence because the same terms are not adopted in the reply. When used in the letter containing the offer, the words "without prejudice" must cover the whole correspondence.

COLTMAN, J. It is of the utmost importance that parties should have the opportunity of free communication without prejudice; and I should be sorry to hold anything that might be in the slightest degree calculated to embarrass or discourage the practice.

ERSKINE, J., concurred.

WALKER v. WILSHER.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1889.

L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 335; 58 L. J. Q. B. 501;
37 W. R. 723.

At the trial of an action, which resulted in a judgment by consent for an agreed sum, application was made to the Judge to deprive the plaintiff of his costs on the ground that, at an early stage of the proceedings, as appeared from letters, marked "without prejudice," which had passed between the parties, the case could have been settled for the amount finally accepted. The letters, though objected to, were received by the Judge as showing "good cause" for depriving the plaintiff of his costs. The plaintiff appealed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD ESHER, M.R. . . . It is, I think, a good rule to say that nothing which is written or said without prejudice should be looked at without the consent of both parties, otherwise the whole object of the limitation would be destroyed. I am therefore of opinion that the learned Judge should not have taken these matters into consideration in determining whether there was good cause, and as that was all that was before him on the point, if that is excluded, it follows that there was no good cause, and that the plaintiff should not have been deprived of his costs.

LINDLEY, L.J. . . . What is the meaning of the words "without prejudice"? I think they mean without prejudice to the position of the writer of the letter if the terms he proposes are not accepted. If the terms proposed in the letter are accepted, a complete contract is established, and the letter, although written without prejudice, operates to alter the old state of things and to establish a new one. A contract is constituted in respect of which relief by way of damages or specific performance would be given. . . . The case of Williams v. Thomas (2 Dr. & Sm. 29), is the only authority that I know of for the course taken by the learned Judge, and when we come to consider the principle on which it was decided, it does not convince me that a Judge is entitled to look at letters written without prejudice unless he has the consent of both parties to his so doing. No doubt there are cases where such letters may be taken into consideration, as was done the other day in a case in which a question of laches was raised. The fact that such letters have been written and the dates at which they were written may be regarded, and in so doing the rule to which I have adverted would not be infringed. The facts may, I think, be given in evidence, but the offer made and the mode in which that offer was dealt with—the material matters, that is to say, of the letters—must not be looked at without consent. I think, therefore, that there was no good cause for depriving the plaintiff of costs, and that the decision should be reversed.

BOWEN, L.J. . . . Negotiations which have taken place without prejudice may be material under circumstances which are not present here. The fact of such negotiations may perhaps in such circumstances be given in evidence, but the question whether what was said or done at such negotiations is admissible, is a very different one.

Appeal allowed.

Note.—Such communications are admissible for the purpose of proving independent admissions not concerning the matter in dispute (Waldridge v. Kennison, 1 Esp. 142). And a person cannot protect himself from liability for a communication, in itself involving legal liability, by expressly marking it “without prejudice.” So, a threat made in such manner may be proved (Kurtz v. Spence, 57 L. J. Ch. 238).

RELEVANCY.

The third class of facts which a party is not allowed to prove consists of such facts as are irrelevant to the issue. It would be idle to attempt to discuss what matters are irrelevant; attention should be addressed to the question—what matters are relevant?

Evidence may be given of two sets of facts: (1) of facts in issue; (2) of facts relevant to the facts in issue. Evidence of (1) is generally known as direct evidence, that of (2) as circumstantial evidence (ante, p. 2).

The facts in issue are those which are alleged by one party and denied by the other on the pleadings, in a civil case; or alleged in the indictment and denied by the plea of "not guilty," in a criminal case, so far as they are in either case material. There is, therefore, little difficulty in ascertaining what are the facts in issue.

The relevant facts are all other facts which are in the eye of the law so connected with or related to the facts in issue that they render the latter probable or improbable, or, roughly, throw light upon them. "Relevancy" may indeed be considered as synonymous with "connection," a word which frequently appears in discussions on the subject. Of course both words must be taken in their legal meaning, which is generally restricted. Common sense, or logical, relevancy is, as a rule, wider than legal relevancy. A Judge might, in ordinary transactions, take one fact as evidence of another, and act upon it himself, when, in Court, he would rule that it was legally irrelevant. And he may exclude facts, although relevant, if they appear to him too remote to be really material to the issue (see Phipson, 6th ed., 49—54).

The limits of legal relevancy cannot be strictly stated, as the connection between facts varies infinitely in different cases. The cases below given show some of the chief rules

In connection with relevancy, one general matter may be mentioned:—

It is sometimes asked—when can evidence be given of what was said or done behind the back of or in the absence of a party? As a general rule such evidence is not admissible, the maxim usually applied being, “Res inter alios actae alteri nocere non debent.” But many instances of the admissibility of such evidence can be given.

It may be said generally, that acts done are more readily received than statements made under such circumstances.

Evidence of acts done in the absence of a party may be given in the following cases (inter alia):—

(1) When such acts, although not expressly connected with the fact in issue, are necessary to prove or show its nature or quality, provided such acts directly lead up to or explain such fact. So, on a charge of receiving stolen goods, the larceny may be proved; and on a charge of larceny, the deposit of the goods in a certain place, or the fact that a mark was put upon them may be proved (see post, p. 66).

(2) When such acts are expressly connected with the fact in issue, so as, in substance, to form the basis of such fact. So, if a contract were made with one person expressly on the same terms as a contract made with another person, such latter contract might be proved (see post, p. 103).

(3) When such acts are legally relevant to prove the actual fact in issue, as in the case of acts of possession to prove ownership (see post, p. 89), or cohabitation to prove marriage (see post, p. 95), or course of business to prove a business transaction (see post, p. 88).

(4) When such acts are admissible to corroborate, illustrate, or show the reason for, or ground of, evidence given, as in the case of experiments or examination of persons or things by experts in support of their opinions (see post, p. 124).

(5) When such acts tend to establish, or prove the nature of, any custom or usage (see post, p. 376).

Evidence of Statements made in the absence of a party may be given in the following cases (inter alia):—

(1) When such statements are actually part of the transaction in issue (see post, p. 67).

(2) When such statements were made by a fellow-conspirator or by a person engaged in some joint transaction (see post, p. 79).

(3) When such statements amount to complaints in cases of rape and similar offences (see post, p. 80).

(4) When such statements were made by deceased persons under such circumstances that they amount to admissible declarations in course of duty (see post, p. 200); against interest (see post, p. 205); as to pedigree (see post, p. 211); as to public or general rights (see post, p. 221); as to cause of death (see post, p. 232); or as to contents of wills (see post, p. 238).

(5) When such statements are made in public documents (see post, p. 247).

[Note.—With regard to the above five classes of statements, it should be observed that (1), (2), (3) are not in general evidence of the truth of the matters asserted; while (4) and (5) are, by exception to the hearsay rule, admissible as such evidence (Phipson, 6th ed., 5—6, 103, 218). Moreover, irrespective of this list, the particular party by whom a given statement is tendered may affect its admissibility. Thus, in an action by A. against B., if A. had written to B. that a certain fact had happened. A. might, at the trial, prove that statement to show that he gave B. notice of such fact, though he could not tender it to show that the fact had actually happened. B., however, might use A.'s letter, not only for the former, but for the latter, purpose, because, when tendered against A., it would be receivable as an admission (id., 229, 235 a).]

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

R. v. PALMER.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT. 1856.

TRIAL OF WILLIAM PALMER; STEPHEN, HIST. OF CR. LAW, III., 389, AND GENERAL VIEW OF CR. LAW.

Evidence is admissible not only of the facts in issue, but also of other facts which render the facts in issue probable or improbable by reason of their connection with or relation to them. Facts so connected with the facts in issue are said to be "relevant facts," and they constitute what is known as "circumstantial evidence."

Thus, facts which supply a motive for an act, or constitute preparation for it, or conduct apparently influenced by the act, are relevant to the question whether such act was done by the person concerning whom such motive, preparation or conduct is proved.

In this trial for murder, the pecuniary embarrassment of the prisoner, his buying poison and attempting to avoid an inquest and other such facts (as appear below), were held to be relevant as circumstantial evidence.

The following is from the separate report published in 1856, by J. Allen:—

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. (in his charge to the jury). . . . By the law and practice of some countries it is allowed, to raise a probability that the party accused has committed the offence which he has to answer, to show that he has committed other offences; with a view of showing that he is an immoral man, and not unlikely to commit other offences, whether of the same or of a different nature; but the law of England is different, and, presuming every man to be innocent until his guilt is established, it allows his guilt to be established only by evidence directly connected with the charge brought against him. .

But in a case of this kind you cannot expect that witnesses should be called to state that they saw the deadly poison administered by the prisoner, or mixed up by the prisoner openly before them. Circumstantial evidence as to that is all that can be reasonably expected; and if there are a series of circumstances leading to the conclusion of guilt, then, gentlemen, a verdict of guilty may satisfactorily be pronounced. With respect to the alleged motive, it is of great importance to see whether there was a motive for committing such a crime, or whether there was not, or whether there was an improbability of its having been committed so strong as not to be overpowered by positive evidence. But, gentlemen, if there be any motive which can be assigned, I am bound to tell you that the adequacy of that motive is of little importance. We know from the experience of criminal Courts that atrocious crimes of this sort have been committed from very slight motives; not merely from malice or revenge, but to gain a small pecuniary advantage, and to drive off for a time pressing difficulties. . . .

I shall best discharge my duty by beginning with that part of the case that was first opened by the Attorney-General, respecting the motive that the prisoner may have had for accomplishing the death of Cook. Now I think that that arises out of certain pecuniary transactions, the nature of which has been most minutely laid before you. It appears that the prisoner had borrowed large sums of money upon bills of exchange, which he drew, and which purported to be accepted by his mother, a lady, it seems, of considerable wealth. Those acceptances were forgeries. . . . It had been expected by Palmer that he would have been able to meet those bills by the proceeds of a policy of insurance, which had been effected upon the life of his brother Walter . . . ; but the Prince of Wales Insurance Office denied their liability upon that policy and refused to pay. Thence arose a most pressing embarrassment—payments were urgently required, and there was danger unless they were immediately paid that the law would be put in force, and that the system of forgeries which had been so long carried on would in all human probability be detected and brought to light. . . .

Then, gentlemen, comes the more direct evidence that the prisoner at the bar, if you believe the witnesses, procured this very poison. . . . For what purpose was that obtained? . . . You have no account of that poison. What was the intention with which it was purchased, and what was the application of it, you are to infer. . . .

Then, gentlemen, it is impossible that you should not pay attention to the conduct of the prisoner at the bar, and there are some instances of his conduct which you will say whether they belong to what might be expected from an innocent or a guilty man. He was eager to have the body fastened down in the coffin. Then, with regard to the betting-book, there is certainly evidence from which you may infer that he did get possession of the betting-book, that he abstracted it and concealed it. Then, gentlemen, you must not forget his conduct in trying to bribe the postboy to overturn the carriage in which the jar was being conveyed, to be analysed in London, and from which evidence might be obtained of his guilt. Again, you find him tampering with the postmaster, and procuring from the postmaster the opening of a letter from Dr. Taylor, who had been examining the contents of the jar, to Mr. Gardiner, the attorney employed on the part of Mr. Stevens. And then, gentlemen, you have tampering with the coroner, and trying to induce him to procure a verdict from the coroner's jury which would amount to an acquittal. . . .

Note.—Such facts as motive, preparation, subsequent conduct, opportunity, etc., referring to the circumstances and position of the party whose act is alleged, are the facts which are generally and specially referred to as "circumstantial" evidence. But this term is properly applicable to all evidence other than that of the facts in issue themselves. Evidence of such facts in issue is known as "direct" evidence. All evidence which is admissible merely as being relevant to the facts in issue is strictly "circumstantial" or "indirect."

"On a superficial view, direct and indirect or circumstantial, would appear to be distinct species of evidence; whereas, these words denote only the different modes in which those classes of evidentiary facts operate to produce conviction. Circumstantial evidence is of a nature identically the same with direct evidence; the distinction is that by DIRECT EVIDENCE is intended evidence which applies directly to the fact which forms the subject of inquiry, the factum probandum; CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE is equally direct in its nature, but, as its name imports, it is direct evidence of a minor fact or facts of such a nature that the mind is led intuitively to the conviction that from it or them some other fact may be inferred. . . . The evidence of these facts is direct; the facts themselves are indirect and circumstantial" (Wills, Circ. Ev., 6th ed., 19—20).

The word "direct" is used in another sense. It is also opposed to "hearsay" in the law of evidence (see post, p. 154). The distinction between "direct" and "circumstantial" refers to the facts offered in evidence; that between "direct" and "hearsay" refers to the mode of proving such facts (see ante, pp. 2—3).

DOWLING v. DOWLING,

EXCHEQUER (IRELAND). 1860.

10 IRISH C. L. R. 236.

Facts showing the circumstances and position of the parties whose conduct is in question are generally relevant to such conduct. So, evidence of opportunity is relevant to the question whether a certain act was done.

Circumstantial evidence is admissible not only in the absence of direct evidence, but also in aid of direct evidence.

The question being whether A. lent money to B. ; evidence of the poverty of A. about the time of the alleged loan, and for seven years previously, was held admissible as tending to disprove it, in support of the defendant's direct evidence that it had not been lent.

PIGOR, C.B. . . . In my own experience, now of many years, it has been the constant practice of Judges to receive such evidence when offered, whether in a Court of law or a Court of equity, upon the question whether or not money was paid ; especially where that question related to transactions of a remote period, to which it was difficult to apply other than circumstantial evidence. In such cases, proof that a party was in such circumstances that he could not, has been received as evidence that he did not, pay the money in question. . . . Evidence of this nature is plainly admissible ; for the simple reason, that it constitutes, or forms part of, circumstantial evidence, from which the jury are entitled to form their judgment as to the fact of payment and as to the credibility of conflicting testimony. . . .

Here the evidence that was offered went back a distance of seven years ; but the object of showing the plaintiff's circumstances, seven years before, was to prove the position in life out of which he then emerged, and to show, partly by his own statements, on his cross-examination, of his own intervening pursuits, and partly by the evidence of the defendant, that he had not acquired property in the interval ; and that at the time when the loan was alleged to have been made he had not the means of making it. . . .

The circumstances of the parties, and the position in which they stood when the matter the subject of controversy occurred, are, for the most part, proper subjects of evidence to be submitted to a jury, and the recent changes in the law, by which parties are enabled to swear for themselves, have rendered evidence of "surrounding circumstances" still more important than they were before. They often supply the only means of determining upon testimony at one side directly conflicting with the testimony at the other; and such was the testimony in the case now before us. . . .

Note.—A good deal of discussion has taken place as to the relative weight and reliability of direct and circumstantial evidence. The theory seems to be that the former is superior, as the latter is only a substitute for it. It is said also that there are only two chances of error in the case of direct evidence, namely (1) the mistake, and (2) the untruthfulness of witnesses; while there is a further danger in the case of circumstantial evidence, namely, (3) the fallacious inference of the tribunal. On the other hand, it is said that circumstantial evidence has the advantage of presenting less opportunities for conspiracy and perjury. Many small unimportant facts are more difficult of fabrication, and less likely to be thought of beforehand, than single important facts nearer to the issue.

"Many writers of authority, both ancient and modern, have treated circumstantial evidence as inherently and of necessity of less value than direct evidence. . . . But, in truth, direct and circumstantial evidence ought not to be placed in contrast, since they are not mutually opposed; for evidence of a circumstantial and secondary nature can seldom, if ever, be justifiably resorted to, or carry conviction, except where direct evidence is unattainable or unreliable, or where the circumstantial evidence is used merely in confirmation of the direct. . . . Where the evidence is direct, and the testimony credible, belief is the immediate and necessary result; whereas, in cases of circumstantial evidence, processes of inference and deduction are essentially involved—frequently of a delicate and perplexing character liable—to numerous causes of fallacy" (Wills Circ. Ev., 6th ed., 39, 47, 48).

It will be observed from the above case that the "best evidence" rule (see post, p. 154) does not now exclude circumstantial in favour of direct evidence. They may be given together.

THE TRANSACTION. "RES GESTÆ."

R. v. ELLIS.

KING'S BENCH. 1826.

6 B. & C. 145.

Facts which are parts of the same transaction as the fact, or facts, in issue are in general admissible as forming parts of the "res gesta" or "res gestæ."

The prisoner being charged with stealing six shillings, marked money, from a till, evidence was allowed of the taking not only of that amount but also of other moneys taken at the same time.

BAYLEY, J. I think that it was in the discretion of the Judge to confine the prosecutor to the proof of one felony, or to allow him to give evidence of other acts, which were all part of one entire transaction. Generally speaking, it is not competent to a prosecutor to prove a man guilty of one felony, by proving him guilty of another unconnected felony; but where several felonies are connected together, and form part of one entire transaction, then the one is evidence to show the character of the other. Now all the evidence in this case tended to show that the prisoner was guilty of the felony charged in the indictment. It went to show the history of the till from the time when the marked money was put into it up to the time when it was found in the possession of the prisoner. I think, therefore, that the evidence was properly received.

HOLROYD, J., concurred.

[Note.—"A transaction is a group of facts so connected together as to be referred to by a single legal name, as a crime, a contract, a wrong, or any other subject of inquiry which may be in issue. Every fact which is part of the same transaction as the facts in issue is deemed to be relevant to the facts in issue, although it may not be actually in issue, and although if it were not part of the same transaction it might be excluded as hearsay" (Stephen, Dig. Ev., Art. 3; Phipson, 6th ed., 55—87). Roughly, a transaction may be described as any physical act, or series of connected physical acts, together with the words accompanying such act or acts.]

R. v. BIRDSEYE.

BEDFORD ASSIZES. 1830.

4 C. & P. 386.

Acts are not parts of the same transaction, unless they were done substantially at the same time, although they are similar in other respects.

The prisoner was charged with stealing pickled pork, a bowl, some knives and a loaf of bread. He went to the prosecutor's shop, took the pork and ran away with it. In about two minutes he returned, replaced the pork in a bowl which contained the knives, and took the lot away. About half an hour later he returned and took the loaf.

LITTLEDALE, J. This taking away the loaf cannot be given in evidence upon this indictment. I think that the prisoner's taking the pork, and returning in two minutes, and then running off with the bowl, must be taken as one continuing transaction, but I think that half an hour is too long a period to admit of that construction. The taking of the loaf, therefore, is a distinct offence.

THOMPSON v. TREYANION.

NISI PRIUS. 1693.

SKINNER, 402.

A "transaction" consists both of the physical acts and the words accompanying such physical acts, whether spoken by the person doing such acts, the person to whom they were done or any other persons present. Such words are admissible in evidence as part of the transaction.

In a civil action for assault on the plaintiff's wife.

HOLT, C.J., allowed that what the wife said immediate upon the hurt received, and before that she had time to devise or contrive anything for her own advantage, might be given in evidence.

Note.—The difficulty is to determine whether the words in question do really accompany the physical acts, or whether they are subsequent to such acts and are therefore mere “narrative” and inadmissible (see the next two cases).

The true test of admissibility of the spoken word seems to be indicated by HOLT, C.J., in the above case—did the speaker have time to contrive anything for his own advantage, or to invent a false tale? If sufficient time elapsed to allow the invention of a false tale, obviously the evidence would be unreliable. In the following case such time would scarcely appear to have elapsed, and yet the statement was rejected.

The case of R. v. Fowkes (Stephen, Art. 3 n.), shows how the statement of a third party may be admissible as part of the transaction, if he be actually present at the time.

R. v. BEDINGFIELD.

NORWICH ASSIZES. 1879.

14 Cox, C. C. 341.

A statement, in order to be admissible in evidence as part of the transaction or “res gestæ,” must strictly accompany, or be made at the same time as, the physical acts in question.

On a trial for murder, it appeared that the deceased, with her throat cut, came suddenly out of a room, in which she had left the prisoner, and that she said, immediately after coming out of the room, and shortly before she died, “Oh dear, Aunt, see what Bedingfield has done to me!” It was held that her statement was not admissible in evidence, either as a dying declaration, as it did not appear that she was in fear of death, or as res gestæ, as it was made after the transaction was complete.

COCKBURN, C.J., said it was not admissible. Anything, he said, uttered by the deceased at the time the act was being done would be admissible, as, for instance, if she had been heard to say something, as “Don’t, Harry!” But here it was something stated by her after it was all over, whatever it was, and after the act was completed. . . . The statement was not admissible as a dying declaration, because it did not appear that the woman was aware that she was dying. . . . Though she might have known it if she had had time for reflection, here that was not so, for at the time she made the statement she had no time to consider and reflect that she was dying; there is no evidence to show that she knew it, and I cannot presume it. There is nothing to show that she was under the sense of impending death, so the statement is not admissible as a dying declaration.

Note.—This case has been the subject of much discussion and criticism, and it certainly does not appear consistent with the next case, in which, apparently, a longer time elapsed between the act in question and the spoken words than in the present case. But the cases illustrate the difficulty in determining the limits of the transaction. Cases on such a subject are of little use. Each case must rest on its own facts.

For the rule under which dying declarations are admissible, see post, p. 232.

R. v. FOSTER.

OLD BAILEY. 1834.

6 C. & P. 325.

A statement may be part of the transaction, and admissible in evidence, although it followed the physical acts, and was indeed the last item of the transaction. It is a question, on the facts, whether it was made substantially at the same time.

The prisoner was charged with manslaughter by driving over deceased. A witness saw the vehicle drive by, but did not see the accident. He immediately afterwards went up to the deceased, who then made a statement as to the cause of the injury. Such statement was admitted in evidence.

GURNEY, B. What he said at the instant, as to the cause of the accident, is clearly admissible.

PARK, J. I am of opinion that his evidence ought to be received. It is the best possible testimony that, under the circumstances, can be adduced to show what it was that had knocked the deceased down. The case of Aveson v. Lord Kinnaird, in which I was counsel many years ago, bears strongly on this point.

PATTESON, J., concurred.

See p. 72.

Note.—The very short judgments in this case do not elucidate the matter much. But the facts speak for themselves. The words admitted in evidence as part of the transaction were spoken after the act of driving over the deceased was completed, and after the lapse of at least many seconds. Nevertheless the words were held to be substantially part of the transaction. [In R. v. Meath, cited Phipson, 6th ed., 31, very similar evidence was, however, rejected by three Irish judges.]

The case referred to by Park, J., appears, post, p. 72.

RAWSON v. HAIGH.

COMMON PLEAS. 1824.

2 BING. 99; 9 MOORE, 217; 1 C. & P. 77.

A transaction may be a continuous one, extending over a long period. In such case any words or statements accompanying such continuous transaction at any time during its continuance, are admissible as part of it.

The question was whether a debtor had absented himself from the realm "with the intent to hinder his creditors," and so brought himself within the Bankruptcy Act. Letters written during his absence, indicating such an intention, were held admissible in proof thereof.

The following is from Bingham:—

BEST, C.J. . . . When these letters are coupled with the fact of his running away in a hurry, would not the jury be warranted in finding that he went to avoid his creditors? If so, there has been a clear act of bankruptcy. But it has been urged, that the second and third letters, having been written subsequently to the act of departing the realm, were not admissible in evidence. I am clear that they were admissible. The going abroad was of itself an equivocal act, and where an act is equivocal, we must get at the motive with which it was committed. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, this can only be got at by the declarations of the party himself. . . . The declarations, in order to be admissible, must be made, or the letters written, at the time of the act in question; but it is sufficient if they are written at any time during the continuance of the act; the departing the realm is a continuing act, and these letters were written during its continuance. . . .

PARK, J. . . . I am satisfied that declarations made during departure and absence are admissible in evidence to show the motive of the departure. It is impossible to tie down to time the rule as to the declarations; we must judge from all the circumstances of the case; we need not go the length of saying, that a declaration made a month after the fact would of itself be admissible; but if, as in the present case, there are connecting circumstances, it may even at that time, form part of the whole res gestæ. . . . The declarations, however, must be connected with the state of the party's mind at the time, and in the present instance I think the connection sufficiently clear for the admission of the letters.

BURROUGH, J., concurred.

Note.—So, if the question were whether a person who had remained abroad for some years had acquired a domicile in the country of his residence, letters written by him during such residence, showing his intention to remain there permanently, or otherwise, would, doubtless, be admissible as part of the transaction (see Doucet v. Geoghegan, 9 Ch. D. 455).

Other cases, such as Rouch v. G. W. R., 1 Q. B. 51, and Ridley v. Gyde, 9 Bing. 349, have sometimes been cited for the proposition that the statements need not be strictly contemporaneous in order to be admissible; but they do not appear to show this, as the transactions were continuous and the statements were made during their continuance, although some time after the commencement of the continuous act (see Phipson, 59, 75—77).

AYESON v. KINNAIRD.

KING'S BENCH. 1805.

6 EAST, 188; 8 R. R. 455.

Statements made by a person respecting the state of his health or bodily feelings at a particular time are admissible as evidence of such state of health or feelings.

In an action upon a policy of insurance on the life of the plaintiff's wife, the question being whether the statement of the insured's good health, given at the time of effecting the policy, was false; the Court allowed evidence to be given by a friend to the effect that she had visited deceased at the time, and had been told by her that she was in a bad state of health.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. . . . The question being, what was the state of her own health at a certain period, a witness has been received to relate that which has always been received from patients to explain, her own account of the cause of her being found in bed at an unseasonable hour with the appearance of being ill. She was questioned as to her bodily infirmity. She said it was of some duration, several days. . . . What were the complaints, what the symptoms, what the conduct of the parties themselves at the time, are always received in evidence upon such inquiries, and must be resorted to from the very nature of the thing. The substance of the whole conversation was that the wife had been ill at least from the 9th of November, when she was examined by the surgeon and certified to be in good health, down to the day when the conversation took place, and those appearances were exhibited to the witness; and in that view I think the evidence unexceptionable. . . . The admission, then, of the evidence in this case is free from any imputation of breaking in upon the confidence subsisting between man and wife; the declaration was upon the subject of her own health at the time, which is a fact of which her own declaration is evidence; and that, too, made unawares before she could contrive any answer for her own advantage and that of her husband, and therefore falling within the principle of the case in Skinner (Thompson v. Trevanion, ante, p. 67), which I have alluded to.

GROSE, J. . . . The question in the cause was concerning her state of health at the time of the insurance effected, and in order to ascertain that it became material to inquire what the state of her health was between the time of her first examination by the surgeon and the time when she was seen by the witness who conversed with her. The first question put the witness was, in what situation she found Mrs. Aveson when she called? The answer was, in bed. To that there could be no objection. The next question was, why was she in bed? Now who could possibly give so good an account of that as the party herself? It is not only good evidence, but the best evidence which the nature of the case afforded. . . .

LAWRENCE, J. . . . As to the general ground of objection to the evidence as hearsay, it is in every day's experience in actions of assault that what a man has said of himself to his surgeon is evidence to show what he suffered by reason of the assault. The wife was found in bed at an unusual time; she complained of illness, and naturally answered her friend's inquiries by describing how long her health had been bad. . . . If what she said to Susannah Lees were not evidence against her husband, then what she said to the surgeon could not be evidence for him; yet the testimony of the surgeon was brought forward by the plaintiff in order to show that the woman was an insurable life at the time. . . .

Note.—Although this decision has been generally considered correct, there seems to have been some difference of opinion as to the right ground of the admissibility of such evidence. It would appear to be but an instance of a statement accompanying a transaction or act, or being part of it, the act of living or being in a certain state of health, or, as the Judge put it, the act of being in bed at an unusual hour. See the reference to the above case by Park, J., in R. v. Foster, ante, p. 69.

R. v. GLOSTER.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT. 1888.

16 Cox, C. C. 471.

Upon a trial for murder by performing an illegal operation, it was proposed to ask a witness for the prosecution what the deceased had said as to her bodily condition, and what had been done to her.

CHARLES, J. The statement must be confined to contemporaneous symptoms, and nothing in the nature of a narrative is admissible as to who caused them or how they were caused.

[The statement was also rejected as a dying declaration, since it was not shown to have been made when the declarant was without hope of recovery (post, p. 232).]

GILBEY v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1910.

102 L. T. 202; 3 B. W. C. C. 135.

In a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, by the widow of a workman whose death was alleged to have been caused by the accident, evidence had been admitted by the County Court Judge of statements made by the deceased to his wife, on his return home after the alleged accident, both as to his own feelings at the time of such statements, and as to the cause and occasion of the injury,—viz., that he was carrying a side of beef from a lift to the market stall, but that the beef slipped, and, to save it from falling, he gave a sudden jerk which broke one of his ribs.

The following is from the Law Times:—

COZENS-HARDY, M.R. I do not doubt at all that statements made by a workman to his wife of his sensations at the time, about the pains in his side, or head, or what not,—whether the statements were made by groans, or by actions, or were verbal statements,—would be admissible to prove the existence of those sensations. But to hold that these statements ought to go further and be admitted as evidence of the facts deposed to, is contrary to all authority.

FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J. In this case, the only evidence on which the applicant rests her case consists of statements made by the deceased workman as to his having had an accident and as to the nature of that accident. I can find no case whatever which permits such declarations to be received as evidence of the truth contained in the facts of those declarations.

(Appeal allowed.)

[Note.—This case was approved and followed, inter alia, in Amys v. Barton, [1912] 1 K. B. 40 (C. A.).] ✓

WRIGHT v. DOE d. TATHAM.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1838.

4 BING. N. C. 489; 6 SCOTT, 58; 5 C. & F. 670.

When the act or conduct of any person is in question, the contents of any documents, such as letters, upon which he has acted, or which qualify, illustrate or explain such act or conduct, are admissible as part of the transaction.

The question being as to the sanity of a deceased testator, Mr. Marsden, his conduct in indorsing, answering, and acting upon letters received by him from third persons would have been admissible and, such conduct having been proved, the contents of the letters would have been receivable as statements accompanying and explaining it.

But it was held that the mere fact that such letters were written to him was inadmissible as evidence of his sanity, although they were letters which would only be written to a person believed to be sane. Such facts would only show the writer's opinion of his sanity, and such opinion, being thus given out of Court, would be mere "hearsay."

The question being submitted by the House of Lords to the Judges, they gave their opinions separately.

The following is from Bingham:—

COLERIDGE, J. . . . I am now brought to the consideration of the third ground taken by the counsel for the defendant below; that these letters are admissible, because they accompany and explain acts done by Mr. Marsden; in other words, that there is evidence with respect to each of these letters that Mr. Marsden had done some act, which act would in itself be relevant to and admissible upon the point in issue, his competency, and the act itself being admissible, whatever accompanies it and serves to explain his character, is relevant and admissible also. The principle here applied is admitted on all hands to be correct. . . . The only question therefore remaining is one of fact, whether there was any evidence of such act by Mr. Marsden in regard to all or any one of these letters. . . . What is the evidence of these facts? None direct; and every circumstance stated is equally consistent with the assumption of competency or incompetency. . . . The facts then being consistent with either view of the case, he must fail whose duty it is affirmatively to establish either, and who relies on this for proof. . . .

WILLIAMS, J. . . . I think that all the three letters contained in the bill of exceptions are inadmissible. . . . If upon the back of all or any of these letters, there had been any indorsement in the handwriting of Mr. Marsden, or if any act had been done by him avowedly in consequence of the contents, or any part of them, such letters or letter must of necessity be submitted to the jury with a view to ascertain how far such indorsement contained any material or appropriate comment, or how far the act was consequent upon, or in accordance with, a fair and reasonable interpretation of the contents. . . .

The question then is, whether Mr. Marsden has in any manner identified himself with—if the expression be allowable—or in other words has by any act, speech or writing, manifested an acquaintance with and knowledge of the contents of all or any of these letters. If he has, such letter or letters must have been improperly rejected, otherwise not. . . . The foundation of my opinion is, that neither competency nor incompetency should be presumed, and that, therefore, the burthen was cast upon the defendant below, who tendered this piece of evidence, to give affirmatively some proof that the mind of Mr. Marsden had been exercised upon it, to make it admissible in a case where the only question was the actual state of that mind; and no such proof was given.

PATTESON, J. . . . Every act of the party's life is relevant to the issue; of course, therefore, anything which he can be shown to have done in regard to any written document, being evidence, it follows that such written document must itself be received; otherwise the true character of the act which he has done in regard to it cannot be properly estimated, or the jury be enabled to judge how far that act is indicative of the state of his mind or not. In every case, therefore, the first point to be considered will be whether any act has in truth been done by the party in regard to the document proposed to be given in evidence. . . .

ALDERSON, B. . . . It is said that the letters are receivable as having been acted upon by the testator and as explanatory of his acts; and if that were the case, I should agree in the conclusion.

Every act of the testator is evidence, and if these are letters which qualify, or illustrate, or explain any act of his, they are receivable.

But then, the first step to be taken is to show some act of the testator, by clear evidence, for that is the foundation of the whole.

Here, that step wholly fails; this is an attempt to raise a superstructure which has nothing to support it.

If the testator had made an indorsement on any one of them, the contents of the letter would have been receivable. But why? Only for the purpose of showing that the indorsement was a rational act, not for the purpose of showing the opinion of the writer. If an answer to the letter had been sent by him, the letter is in like manner receivable to show the rationality of such answer. . . .

PARKE, B. . . . These letters are sufficiently proved to have been written and sent to the house of the deceased by persons now dead, and they indicate the opinion of the writers that the alleged testator was a rational person and capable of doing acts of ordinary business. But it is perfectly clear that in this case an opinion not given upon oath in a judicial inquiry between the parties is no evidence; for the question is not what the capacity of the testator was reputed to be, but what it really was in point of fact; and though the opinion of a witness upon oath, as to that fact, might be asked, it would only be a compendious mode of ascertaining the result of the actual observation of the witness, from acts done, as to the habits and demeanour of the deceased. . . .

Besides that, there is another ground, and the only other ground on which these letters are argued to be receivable in evidence, and that is, that there was proof in this case of acts done by the testator in reference to these letters, or at least one of them, which render the contents admissible by way of explanation of those acts. Those acts are the opening of two of the letters, and placing them in the supposed usual repository of the papers of the deceased, and the opening of the third one, and transmitting it to the attorney. . . .

The answer to this argument is, that there is no direct proof whatever of these acts being done by the testator; and as to indirect proof, to infer that the testator did the acts is to assume the very fact to be proved. . . .

VAUGHAN, J. . . . If any acts on the part of the testator could be proved, either by letter or from other sources, all declarations and writings which tend to explain such acts, may be put in evidence. The principle then upon which alone the letters can claim admission is the following: That where any facts are proper evidence upon an issue, all oral or written declarations which can explain such facts may be received in evidence. . . .

LITTLEDALE, J. . . . If a party were alive and could be cross-examined he could be examined as to the ground of his belief of the competency. But letters of this sort are much less likely to express the real sentiments of the writer than if written to a third person, as it is not likely that the writer would in letters to the party himself indicate anything tending to a doubt of his incapacity. . . .

In a question of competence, where the party who alleges the competency is bound to prove it, he must show that the person has done some act upon the manifestation of opinion, which indicates that he understands the manifestation; if he does so, it is admissible in evidence, and the effect of it will be left to the jury. . . .

TINDAL, C.J. . . . The question, therefore, with respect to the admissibility of the three letters comes to this: Is there any evidence stated to us from which it can be inferred that the contents of these letters, or any of them, were ever perused by the testator, and by that means submitted to the exercise of his understanding and reasoning powers? or, Is there any evidence of his doing any act with reference to them, which may, according to the nature of such act, import the exercise of a larger or smaller extent of reasoning power?

GURNEY, B., BOSANQUET, J., BOLLAND, B., and PARK, J., also delivered opinions to the same effect.

R. v. BLAKE AND TYE.

KING'S BENCH. 1844.

13 L. J. M. C. 131; 8 JUR. 667; 6 Q. B. 126; 66
R. R. 311.

Acts and statements by one of several conspirators or joint offenders, or other persons engaged in any common transaction involving mutual legal responsibility, are parts of such common transaction and are evidence against the other party or parties thereto, as if they were done or made by him or them, so far as they were in the execution or furtherance of their common purpose, but not otherwise.

Blake was a "landing waiter" employed at the Custom House, and Tye was an agent for importers there. They were charged with conspiring to pass goods without paying full duty. Tye had made false entries in two books; in one book the entries were necessary in order to carry out the fraud, in the other book the entry was not thus necessary, but was for Tye's convenience only. The former were admissible against Blake, the latter were not.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. . . . Upon the first point, the evidence was clearly receivable; it was an entry made in the course of the transaction, which could not have been proved by any other means. With regard to the other piece of evidence . . . full effect might have been given to the conspiracy without it. . . . It is a mere statement of what this party was doing. . . . A mere statement made by one conspirator, or an act that he may choose to do, which is not necessary to carry the conspiracy to its end, and is not evidence to affect another. . . .

COLERIDGE, J. . . . Acts or declarations are not receivable unless they tend to the advancement of the common object. That assumes the object not to be then completed. If it has been accomplished, the act or statement is not receivable. This was a mere statement as to the share of the plunder. . . .

PATTESON and WILLIAMS, JJ., concurred.

COMPLAINTS. *R v Dush (1891)*R. v. LILLYMAN. 69 JP 977

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1896.

R v Dush (1900)
64 JP 106
R v Lee (1911)
7 C 91
R 31

L. R. [1896] 2 Q. B. 167; 65 L. J. M. C. 195; 74
 L. T. 730; 44 W. R. 654; 60 J. P. 536.

Statements made after the transaction are generally irrelevant and inadmissible in favour of the person making them; but, in cases of rape and similar offences, the fact that a complaint was made by the prosecutrix shortly after the alleged occurrence, and the particulars of such complaint, may, so far as they relate to the charge, be given in evidence by the prosecution, not as evidence of the facts complained of, but as evidence of the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with the story told by her in the witness-box, and as being inconsistent with her consent to that of which she complains.

On a charge of attempted rape and indecent assault the mistress of the prosecutrix, being a person to whom she would naturally complain, was allowed to state all that the prosecutrix told her, in the absence of the prisoner, very shortly after the commission of the act.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

HAWKINS, J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD RUSSELL, C.J., POLLOCK, B., HAWKINS, CAVE and WILLS, JJ.). . . . It is necessary in the first place to have a clear understanding as to the principles upon which evidence of such a complaint, not on oath, nor made in the presence of the prisoner, nor forming part of the res gestæ, can be admitted. It clearly is not admissible as evidence of the facts complained of; those facts must therefore be established, if at all, upon oath by the prosecutrix or other credible witness, and, strictly speaking, evidence of them ought to be given before evidence of the complaint is admitted. The complaint can only be used as evidence of the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with the story told by her in the witness-box, and as being inconsistent with her consent to that of which she complains.

In every one of the old text-books, proof of complaint is treated as a most material element in the establishment of a charge of rape or other kindred charge. . . . It is too late, therefore, now to make serious objection to the admissibility of evidence of the fact that a complaint was made, provided it was made as speedily after the acts complained of as could reasonably be expected. . . .

That the general usage has been substantially to limit the evidence of the complaint to proof that the woman made a complaint of something done to her, and that she mentioned in connection with it the name of a particular person, cannot be denied; but it is equally true that Judges of great experience have dissented from this limitation, and of those who have adopted the usage, none have ever carefully discussed or satisfactorily expressed the grounds upon which their views have been based. . . . When and for what reason the proof of the complaint was first limited to answers to such questions as these, "Did she make a complaint?" "Did she mention a name?" "Whose name?" etc., I have not been able to discover. . . .

After very careful consideration we have arrived at the conclusion that we are bound by no authority to support the existing usage of limiting evidence of the complaint to the bare fact that a complaint was made, and reason and good sense are against our doing so. The evidence is admissible only upon the ground that it was a complaint of that which is charged against the prisoner; it can be legitimately used only for the purpose of enabling the jury to judge for themselves whether the conduct of the woman was consistent with her testimony on oath given in the witness-box. . . . Is it to be left to the witness to whom the statement is made to determine and report to the jury whether what the woman said amounted to a real complaint? And are the jury bound to accept the witness's interpretation of her words as binding upon them without having the whole statement before them, and without having the power to require it to be disclosed to them, even though they may feel it essential to enable them to form a reliable opinion. . . . In reality, affirmative answers to such stereotyped questions as these, "Did the prosecutrix make a complaint" (a very leading question, by the way) "of something done to herself?" "Did she mention a name?" amount to nothing to which any weight ought to be attached; they tend rather to embarrass than to assist a thoughtful jury, for they are consistent either with there having been a complaint or no complaint of the prisoner's conduct. To limit the evidence of the complaint to such questions and answers is to ask the jury to draw important inferences from imperfect materials, perfect materials being at hand, and in the cognisance of the witness in the box. In our opinion, nothing ought unnecessarily to be left to speculation or surmise.

It has been sometimes urged that to allow the particulars of the complaint would be calculated to prejudice the interests of the accused and that the jury would be apt to treat the complaint as evidence of the facts complained of. Of course, if it were so left to the jury, they would naturally so treat it. But it never could be legally so left, and we think it is the duty of the Judge to impress upon the jury in every case that they are not entitled to make use of the complaint as any evidence whatever of those facts, or for any other purpose than that we have stated. With such direction we think the interests of an innocent accused would be more protected than they are under the present usage. For when the whole statement is laid before the jury they are less likely to draw wrong and adverse inferences, and may sometimes come to the conclusion that what the woman said amounted to no real complaint of any offence committed by the accused. . . .

R. v. OSBORNE.

CROWN CASES RESERVED, 1905.

L. R. [1905] 1 K. B. 551; 74 L. J. K. B. 311; 92
L. T. 393; 53 W. R. 494; 69 J. P. 189.

Evidence of complaints made in the absence of the accused, after the matter complained of, is only admissible in cases of rape and similar offences against females.

Such evidence is admissible, whether consent is or is not a material element in the charge, in order to show the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with her evidence and so corroborate the latter.

But the complaint must be shown to have been made at the first opportunity which reasonably offered itself after the commission of the offence.

The fact that the complaint has been made in answer to a question does not of itself render it inadmissible; but it must not have been elicited by questions of a leading and inducing or intimidating character.

The Judge ought to inform the jury that the statement is not evidence of the facts complained of, and must not be regarded by them as other than corroboration of the evidence of the prosecutrix, or of the absence of consent.

On a charge of indecent assault on a girl aged twelve, evidence was given by another girl, Keziah Parkes, aged eleven, to the effect that she had left the prosecutrix with the prisoner shortly before the alleged offence, arranging to return soon. On her way back she met the prosecutrix running home, and said to her, "Why are you going home? Why did you not wait until we came back?" Her answer, incriminating the prisoner, was admitted in evidence as corroboration of her story.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

RIDLEY, J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., KENNEDY, RIDLEY, CHANNELL, and PHILLIMORE, JJ.).

. . . It was contended for the prisoner that the evidence was inadmissible—first, because the answer made by the girl was not a complaint, but a statement or conversation, having been made in answer to a question; and secondly, because, as Keziah Parkes was under the age of thirteen, her consent was not material to the charge.

As to the first point. . . It appears to us that the mere fact that the statement is made in answer to a question in such cases is not of itself sufficient to make it inadmissible as a complaint. Questions of a suggestive or leading character will, indeed, have that effect, and will render it inadmissible; but a question such as this, put by the mother or other person, "What is the matter?" or "Why are you crying?" will not do so. These are natural questions which a person in charge will be likely to put. On the other hand, if she were asked, "Did So-and-so (naming the prisoner) assault you?" "Did he do this and that to you?" then the result would be different, and the statement ought to be rejected. In each case the decision on the character of the question put, as well as other circumstances, such as the relationship of the questioner to the complainant, must be left to the discretion of the presiding Judge. If the circumstances indicate that but for the questioning there probably would have been no voluntary complaint, the answer is inadmissible. If the question merely anticipates a statement which the complainant was about to make, it is not rendered inadmissible by the fact that the questioner happens to speak first. . . .

Upon the second point it was contended that, although under the decision of Reg. v. Lillyman (ante, p. 80), the particulars of a complaint made may in some circumstances be given in evidence on a charge of rape, that ruling does not extend to a charge of criminal knowledge or indecent assault where, as in the present case, consent is not legally material. . . .

By the judgment in Reg. v. Lillyman it was decided that the complaint was admissible, not as evidence of the facts complained of, nor as being a part of the res gestæ (which it was not, but "as evidence of the consistency of the conduct of the prosecutrix with the story told by her in the witness-box, and as being inconsistent with her consent to that of which she complains." (Counsel for the prisoner) argued upon this that the reasons so given were one only, and that the consistency of the complaint with the story given by the prosecutrix was material only so far as the latter alleged non-consent. If, however, that argument were sound, the words in question might have been omitted from the sentence, and it would have been sufficient to say that the complaint was admissible only and solely because it negatived consent. We think, however, if it were a question of the meaning of words, that the better construction of the judgment is that, while the Court dealt with the charge in question as involving in fact, though not in law, the question of consent on the part of the prosecutrix, yet the reasons given for admitting the complaint were two—first, that it was consistent with her story in the witness-box; and, secondly, that it was inconsistent with consent. . . . It is not, therefore, because the charge itself involves proof of the absence of consent that the evidence is admissible; on the contrary, the prosecutrix herself can make it evidence by deposing that she did not consent, when that is no part of the charge. In other words, whether non-consent be legally a necessary part of the issue, or whether, on the other hand, it is what may be called a collateral issue of fact, the complaint becomes admissible. But how does non-consent become a collateral issue of fact? The answer must be, in consequence of the story told by the prosecutrix in the witness-box. And the judgment treats the two cases on the same footing. If non-consent be a part of the story told by the prosecutrix, or if it be legally a part of the charge, in each case alike the complaint is admissible. But if that is so, does not the reasoning apply equally to other parts of the story and not merely to the part in which the prosecutrix has denied consent? If not, it seems illogical to allow, as the Court did allow, that the whole of the story may be given in evidence. The true result is, we think, that while the decision in Reg. v. Lillyman is not strictly on all fours with the present case, yet the reasoning which it contains answers the questions now raised for decision.

But, however that may be, it appears to us that, in accordance with principle, such complaints are admissible, not merely as negating consent, but because they are consistent with the story of the prosecutrix. In all ordinary cases, indeed, the principle must be observed which rejects statements made by anyone in the prisoner's absence. Charges of this kind form an exceptional class, and in them such statements ought, under the proper safeguards, to be admitted. Their consistency with the story told is, from the very nature of such cases, of special importance. Did the woman make a complaint at once? If so, that is consistent with her story. Did she not do so? That is inconsistent. And in either case the matter is important for the jury. . . .

We are, at the same time, not insensible of the great importance of carefully observing the proper limits within which such evidence should be given. It is only in cases of this kind that the authorities on which our judgment rests apply; and our judgment also is to them restricted. It applies only where there is a complaint not elicited by questions of a leading and inducing or intimidating character, and only when it is made at the first opportunity after the offence which reasonably offers itself. Within such bounds we think the evidence should be put before the jury; the Judge being careful to inform the jury that the statement is not evidence of the facts complained of, and must not be regarded by them, if believed, as other than corroborative of the complainant's credibility, and, where consent is in issue, of the absence of consent.

R. v. CAMELLERI.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL. 1922.

L. R. [1922] 2 K. B. 122; 91 L. J. K. B. 671; 16
C. A. R. 162; 86 J. P. 135; 66 S. J. 667; 27
Cox, C. C. 246.

On a charge against a male prisoner of gross indecency with a boy of fifteen the particulars of a complaint made by the boy to his parents, shortly after the offence, were admitted by the Judge, not as evidence of the facts complained of, but to show the consistency of his conduct with his testimony in the box. Held, that the evidence was rightly admitted.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD HEWART, C.J. . . . Does the principle of R. v. Osborne, sup., following R. v. Lillyman, sup., apply to indecent assaults on males? . . . There are, it is true, historical reasons for allowing complaints of this character by females, but in view of the principle laid down in R. v. Lillyman, sup., where no doubt the question of consent was material, and in R. v. Osborne, sup., where no question of consent arose, it does not appear to us that at the present day the admissibility of evidence of this nature can depend upon the historical grounds upon which, in the first instance, in the case of female complainants, it was first admitted. It is true that in certain other cases, as, for example, Beatty v. Cullingworth, 60 J. P. 740, observations were made which appear to limit the class of cases in which complaints of the kind referred to are admissible, to indecent assaults upon women and girls. But when the facts of those cases are looked at, it is apparent that the antithesis which the Judges had in their minds was not that between complaint by a female and complaint by a male person, but was the antithesis between sexual offences, on the one hand, and non-sexual offences, on the other. So far as this country is concerned there is no authority which decides that the mere fact that the complainant is a male person renders the complaint or its particulars inadmissible. The question does not seem to have been considered by the High Court. In New Zealand, on the other hand, the fact and particulars of a complaint by a male person have been held admissible (R. v. McNamara, 1917, N. Z. L. R. 382). No doubt there is force in the suggestion that probably little attention would or should be paid to a complaint by an abandoned male person of mature years, but perhaps that observation goes rather to the weight than to the admissibility of the complaint. In this case, where the complaint was by a young boy, we are of opinion that the Judge rightly admitted evidence of the fact and particulars of the complaint. Hereafter, it may be that the limits of this matter may have to be considered. It is no part of the function of this Court to go beyond the facts of the case and lay down far-reaching principles.

[Note.—The above decisions established the following points:—

1. That complaints are only admissible in "sexual" cases, which term is now held to include offences against males as well as females.
 2. That both the fact and the particulars of the complaint are admissible.
 3. That complaints are not evidence of the truth of the matters stated; but only (a) of the consistency of the complainant's conduct with the story she, or he, has told in the box, and (b) as negating consent, where that fact is in issue.]
-

COURSE OF BUSINESS.

HETHERINGTON v. KEMP.

NISI PRIUS. 1815.

4 CAMPBELL, 193; 16 R. R. 773.

In an action on a bill of exchange, to prove notice of dishonour, the plaintiff testified that he wrote a letter to the defendant, to whom notice to produce had been given, stating that the bill had been dishonoured; that he put the letter on a table where, according to the usage of his office, letters for the post were always deposited; and that a porter carried them thence to the post. But the porter was not called, and no evidence was given of what became of the letter after it was put on the table.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. You must go further. Some evidence must be given that the letter was taken from the table in the counting-house, and put into the post-office. Had you called the porter, and he had said that, although he had no recollection of the letter in question, he invariably carried to the post-office all the letters found upon the table, this might have done; but I cannot hold this general evidence of the course of business in the plaintiff's counting-house to be sufficient.

[Note.—In modern cases less strictness has usually been exacted. Thus, to prove the copy of a letter, the original of which was alleged to have been posted to the plaintiff, but was not produced on notice, it was held sufficient for the defendant's clerk to testify that he had made the copy, and that though he did not remember posting the letter he had no doubt he would have done so in the ordinary course of business (Trotter v. Maclean, 13 Ch. D. 574, 580, per Fry, J.). As to public offices, see ante, p. 32.] ✓

POSSESSION OF PROPERTY.

ROBERTSON v. FRENCH.

KING'S BENCH. 1803.

4 EAST, 130; 7 R. R. 535.

Possession of property, land or goods and chattels, and acts of ownership thereof, are evidence of ownership. Ownership or title need not generally be strictly proved by production of documents of title.

In an action on a policy of insurance on a ship and its cargo, evidence of the facts of possession and dealing with such ship as owners, was allowed as evidence of the plaintiffs' ownership, although the title of the plaintiffs actually depended on a deed, i.e., a bill of sale.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included GROSE, LAWRENCE and LE BLANC, JJ.). . . . As to the first point made in this case on the part of the defendant, viz., that the ownership alleged was not sufficiently proved; it was proved by the captain in the ordinary way, that the owners by whom, as such, he was appointed and employed, were the persons in whom the ownership is by the declaration averred to be. And though it afterwards appeared by his answers on cross-examination, that the ownership was derived to those persons under a bill of sale executed by himself as attorney to one Lawrence Williams, the former owner, it did not on that account become necessary for the plaintiffs to produce that bill of sale, or the ship's register, or to give any further proof of such their property; the mere fact of their possession as owners being sufficient primâ facie evidence of ownership, without the aid of any documentary proof or title deeds on the subject, until such further evidence should be rendered necessary in support of the primâ facie case of ownership which they made, in consequence of the adduction of some contrary proof on the other side.

Note.—The fact of possession is clearly relevant to the fact of ownership, as the former undoubtedly renders the latter probable.

The person who possesses and acts as owner is generally the owner, at least as regards personal property.

The matter in question has been very clearly and concisely stated by a well-known and reliable author—"The acts of enjoyment from which the ownership of real property may be inferred are very various, as for instance, the cutting of timber, the repairing of fences or banks, the perambulation of boundaries of a manor or parish, the taking of wreck on the foreshore, and the granting to others of licences or leases under which possession is taken and held; also the receipts of rents from tenants of the property; for all these acts are fractions of that sum total of enjoyment which characterises dominium" (Wills, 60).

There is sometimes said to be a "presumption of ownership" in these cases. But there can scarcely be sufficient certainty of facts to create any recognised presumption of law. A presumption of fact may be drawn. See ante, p. 22.

DOE v. PENFOLD.

NISI PRIUS. 1838.

8 C. & P. 536.

Possession of land may be taken as sufficient "prima facie" evidence of seisin in fee simple.

In an action of ejectment, the only evidence to show the seisin of a person, in whom title was alleged, was that he was in possession of the whole of the property. This was held sufficient prima facie evidence.

PATTESON, J. If he was in actual possession, that is evidence that he was seised in fee, unless there be something to show that he had a less estate. I think that if nothing further be shown, it is, at least, some evidence of a seisin in fee.

Note.—This rule that the possessor of land is prima facie owner in fee simple is the basis of the law as to declarations against proprietary interest, as to which see post, pp. 209-10.

JONES v. WILLIAMS.

EXCHEQUER. 1837.

2 M. & W. 326; 46 R. R. 611.

Acts of possession and enjoyment of land, as cutting timber, repairing hedges, granting leases, etc., may be evidence of ownership, not only of the particular piece or quantity of land with reference to which such acts are done, but also of other land so situated or connected therewith by locality or similarity that what is true as to the one piece of land is likely to be true of the other piece of land.

Acts and conduct of the plaintiff showing apparent ownership of a hedge and the bed of a river at a certain point were admitted as evidence of ownership thereof at a neighbouring point.

LORD ABINGER, C.B. . . . The plaintiff . . . was endeavouring to prove that upon both sides of the river—on the same side with the land of the defendant—he had exercised acts of ownership, such as repairing the hedge; and therefore he claimed a right up to the hedge; and then going further, he shows that the hedge continued a visible line of demarcation without anything occurring to break its continuity—except that a cross hedge ran down to it, dividing the defendant's farm from his neighbour's land on the same side of the river—down to a considerable distance, till it came opposite to the extremity of the plaintiff's land on the other side. From these facts the plaintiff purposes to show that it is all his; and it appears to me that the evidence ought to have been received, in order to rebut the presumption that the middle of the river was to be considered as the boundary between two distinct closes. . . .

PARKE, B. . . . I think the evidence offered of acts in another part of one continuous hedge, and in the whole bed of the river, adjoining the plaintiff's land, were admissible in evidence, on the ground that they are such acts as might reasonably lead to the inference that the entire hedge and bed of the river, and consequently the part in dispute, belonged to the plaintiff. Ownership may be proved by proof of possession, and that can be shown only by acts of enjoyment of the land itself; but it is impossible, in the nature of things, to confine the evidence to the very precise spot on which the alleged trespass may have been committed; evidence may be given of acts done on other parts, provided there is such a common character of locality between those parts and the spot in question as would raise a reasonable inference in the minds of the jury that the place in dispute belonged to the plaintiff if the other parts did. . . .

BOLLAND and GURNEY, BB., concurred.

Note.—A similar case is Doe v. Kemp, 2 Bing. N. C. 102, in which it was held that acts of ownership over certain strips of grass at the side of a highway were evidence of ownership of similar strips on the same highway at a considerable distance, but were not evidence of ownership of similar strips on other roads, although in the same manor. The matter must depend on the facts in each case.

R. v. LANGMEAD.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1864.

10 L. T. 350; 9 Cox, C. C. 464; L. & C. 427.

Possession of property, proved to have been stolen recently, is evidence that the person in possession either stole it or received it knowing it to have been stolen.

The prisoner was indicted for (a) stealing, and (b) receiving feloniously, certain sheep, which were found in his possession a few days after they had been stolen. The circumstances seemed to show that he had not himself stolen them, and he gave no explanation of his possession. The jury, acting on this evidence of possession, found him guilty of receiving. The Court for Crown Cases Reserved affirmed the conviction.

The following is from Leigh and Cave:—

BYLES, J. . . . There are three ways in which the prisoner may have received these sheep with a guilty knowledge. . . . The jury may fairly have drawn any one of these conclusions from the facts before them. Whether they were right or wrong in their conclusion is not a question for us. Where there has been a burglary, and some men and a woman are found in possession of the property stolen, although the evidence may be the same against all, the jury almost universally find the men guilty of the burglary and the woman only of receiving; the consideration of her sex inclining their minds to the belief that she did not take any part in the burglary.

BLACKBURN, J. . . . When it has been shown that property has been stolen, and has been found recently after its loss in the possession of the prisoner, he is called upon to account for having it; and, on his failing to do so, the jury may very well infer that his possession was dishonest, and that he was either the thief or the receiver according to the circumstances. If he had been seen near the place where the property was kept before it was stolen, they may fairly suppose that he was the thief. If other circumstances show that it is more than probable that he was not the thief, the presumption would be that he was the receiver. The jury should not convict the prisoner of receiving, unless they are satisfied that he is not the actual thief. . . .

MELLOR, J. In theory the jury ought to agree in their opinion; but in practice they often do not. Some think that the prisoner was the actual thief, and others that he was the receiver only. . . . It is clear that, whatever was the mode in which the jury in this case arrived at their verdict, there was evidence from which they might safely have drawn either conclusion.

POLLOCK, C.B., and MARTIN, B., concurred.

Note.—The substantial question in such cases is whether such possession of the property is so near in time to the stealing that it may fairly be concluded that the person in possession was connected with the offence. If such time had elapsed that, in all probability, the wrongdoer would have got rid of the property, possession thereof would rather show that the possessor had no connection with the crime. Much would depend on the nature of the property, the opportunity of getting rid of it, and other circumstances. Several cases illustrating the matter may be found in books on Criminal Law.

R. v. SCHAMA.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL. 1915.

84 L. J. M. C. 396; 112 L. T. 480; 79 J. P. 184;
59 S. J. 288; 11 C. A. R. 45; 31 T. L. R. 88.

On a charge of receiving stolen goods well knowing them to have been stolen, the Judge directed the jury that, after evidence that the goods had been stolen, and recently thereafter found in the possession of the prisoner, the onus was shifted to the prisoner of satisfying the jury that he came by them innocently. The prisoner was convicted and appealed.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD READING, C.J. . . . When the prosecution have proved that the person charged was in possession of the goods and that they had been recently stolen, the jury should then be told that they may, not that they must, in the absence of any explanation which may reasonably be true, convict the prisoner. But if an explanation has been given by the accused, then it is for the jury to say whether upon the whole of the evidence they are satisfied that the prisoner is guilty. If the jury think that the explanation given may reasonably be true, although they are not convinced that it is true, the prisoner is entitled to be acquitted, inasmuch as the Crown would then have failed to discharge the burden imposed on it by our law, of satisfying the jury, beyond reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the prisoner. The onus of proof is never changed in these cases: it always remains on the prosecution. Conviction quashed.

COHABITATION AND REPUTATION OF MARRIAGE.

DOE v. FLEMING.

COMMON PLEAS. 1827.

4 BING. 266; 29 R. R. 562.

Marriage may usually be proved by evidence of cohabitation or general reputation, even when it is not supported by other evidence, and although the persons reputed to be married are still alive.

The plaintiff sought to recover certain premises as heir-at-law, and the only evidence of the marriage of his parents was the reputation of their having lived together as man and wife. This was held sufficient, although the father was still alive.

PARK, J. The general rule is, that reputation is sufficient evidence of marriage, and a party who seeks to impugn a principle as well established ought, at least, to furnish cases in support of his position. As we have heard none, I see no reason for disturbing the verdict.

BEST, C.J. The rule has never been doubted. It appeared on the trial that the mother of the plaintiff was received into society as a respectable woman, and under such circumstances improper conduct ought not to be presumed.

Note.—For the exceptions to this rule, see next case. As to whether there is a presumption in law of marriage, see ante, p. 24.

MORRIS v. MILLER.

KING'S BENCH. 1767.

4 BURROW, 2057; 1 WM. BLACKSTONE, 632.

In proceedings for bigamy, divorce, or damages for adultery, the marriages or ceremonies alleged by the prosecution or petitioner and upon which the proceedings are based, cannot be proved by reputation. Strict evidence thereof must be given.

In an action for criminal conversation (damages for adultery), proof of "cohabitation, name, and reception by everybody as wife" was held insufficient.

The following is from Burrow:—

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included YATES, ASTON and HEWITT, JJ.). . . . We are all clearly of opinion that in this kind of action, an action for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife, there must be evidence of a marriage in fact; acknowledgment, cohabitation, and reputation are not sufficient to maintain this action.

But we do not at present define what may or may not be evidence of a marriage in fact.

This is a sort of criminal action; there is no other way of punishing this crime at common law.

It shall not depend upon the mere reputation of a marriage, which arises from the conduct or declarations of the plaintiff himself.

In prosecutions for bigamy, a marriage in fact must be proved.

No inconvenience can happen by this determination; but inconvenience might arise from a contrary determination, which might render persons liable to actions founded upon evidence made by the persons themselves who should bring the action.

The following is from Blackstone:—

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. (as above). In these actions there must be proof of a marriage in fact, as contrasted to cohabitation, and reputation of marriage arising from thence. Perhaps, there need not be strict proof from the register, or by a person present; but strong evidence must be had of the fact; as by a person present at the wedding dinner, if the register be burnt, and the parson and clerk are dead.

This action is by way of punishment, therefore the Court never interfere as to the quantum of damages.

No proof, in such a case, shall arise from the parties' own act of cohabitation.

The case of bigamy is stronger than this. . . . Except in these two cases, I know of none where reputation is not a good proof of marriage.

Note.—Stephen says, "The facts that they cohabited and were treated by others as man and wife . . . are not sufficient to prove a marriage in a prosecution for bigamy," etc. (Dig. Ev., Art. 53). But this seems to put it too broadly. The marriage and subsequent ceremony upon which the prosecution is based certainly cannot be so proved, but it may be that another marriage becomes material in such prosecution, and such marriage can certainly be proved by reputation, although it is proving a marriage "in a prosecution for bigamy." Thus, in the case of R. v. Wilson, 3 F. & F. 119, the prisoner pleaded that, when she went through the first ceremony alleged, the man was already married, and, therefore, the ceremony was void, and she had not committed bigamy. This marriage, so alleged by the prisoner, was allowed to be proved by reputation.

CONDUCT, CHARACTER, AND CON- VICTION OF PARTIES.

It is most important to keep distinct three entirely different matters which are frequently confused, namely:—

- (1) Conduct,
- (2) Character,
- (3) Convictions,

with reference to both parties and witnesses. As regards witnesses, these matters are considered, post, p. 283.

The rules as to conduct on the occasion in question, as part of the transaction, have been dealt with ante, pp. 66, 67. It is proposed to consider in this place conduct of the parties which is not part of the transaction, that is to say—

(1) CONDUCT ON OTHER OCCASIONS.

The rules are mainly derived from cases, as will be shown by those given post, pp. 102 to 109. The position appears to be:—

- (a) The evidence must be of similar acts of the party whose act is in question (see post, p. 104).
- (b) It is, when admissible, not evidence of the act in question, unless directly connected therewith (see post, p. 102).
- (c) It is admissible as evidence of the state of mind of the person when he did the act in question, after such act has been proved (see post, p. 104).
- (d) It is so admissible in both civil and criminal cases generally (see post, p. 105).

(2) CHARACTER.

Evidence of character is admissible in the cases mentioned below :—

Civil Cases.

The character of the plaintiff :—

- (1) In cases where it is actually in issue, as in actions for defamation (see post, p. 111).
- (2) In cases where the amount of damages may depend on it, as in actions for breach of promise of marriage, damages for adultery, and defamation (see post, p. 113).

The character of the defendant :—

In no cases, apparently.

The character of other persons :—

- (1) In actions for seduction, evidence of the character of the person seduced may be given on the question of damages (see post, p. 113).
- (2) In proceedings for damages for adultery, evidence of the character of the wife may be given on the question of damages, apparently (see post, p. 114).

Criminal Cases.

The character of the person prosecuting :—

In cases of rape and kindred offences, evidence of the character of the prosecutrix (see post, p. 118).

The character of the person charged :—

- (1) In all cases if he chooses to introduce it by tendering evidence of his good character (see post, p. 114).
- (2) On a charge of vagrancy, by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, evidence of his known character as proved may be given to prove intent to commit felony (see post, p. 446).

- (3) On a charge of being an habitual criminal, under the Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, evidence of his character and repute may be given on the question of dishonest or criminal life (see post, p. 484).
- (4) On a charge of spying, etc., under the Official Secrets Act, 1911, evidence of his known character as proved may be given as evidence that his purpose was prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State (see post, p. 496).

(3) PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS.

The rules here are mainly statutory. The position appears to be:—

- (a) The evidence must be of actual conviction of a crime (as to the mode of proof whereof, see post, p. 533).
- (b) It is admissible as evidence of various matters in different cases, as stated below.
- (c) It is admissible on both civil and criminal cases, as follows:—

In Civil Cases.

- (1) If a witness denies his conviction when cross-examined as to that fact (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 6, see post, p. 439).
- (2) As evidence of the existence of a public or general right (see post, p. 224).
- (3) As evidence of commission of the crime by the person convicted, if he, or anyone claiming through him, claims any right resulting from such crime (see post, p. 119).

In Criminal Cases.

- Before verdict, evidence of previous conviction of a person charged cannot generally be given (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 111, see post, p. 416; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116, see post, p. 436; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, s. 9; see post, p. 446), but it may be given in the following cases:—
- (1) On any charge to which a previous conviction is essential to the charge, evidence of the appropriate convictions may be given in support of the charge (e.g., 8 Edw. 7, c. 59, s. 10 (2), see post, p. 483).

- (2) On any charge to which a previous conviction is a defence, i.e., on a plea of autrefois convict.
- (3) On any charge of non-capital felony, evidence of previous conviction for felony may be given in support of the charge, but only if the person charged gives evidence of his good character (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 111, see post, p. 416).
- (4) On any charge of an offence under the Larceny Act, 1861, evidence of previous conviction for felony or misdemeanour or summary conviction may be given in support of the charge, but only if the person charged gives evidence of his good character (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116, see post, p. 436).
- (5) On any charge of an offence under the Coinage Act, 1861, evidence of previous conviction for any coinage offence may be given in support of the charge, but only if the person charged gives evidence of his good character (24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, c. 37, see post, p. 437).
- (6) On any charge of a crime as defined by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, evidence of previous conviction for felony or misdemeanour or summary conviction may be given in support of the charge, but only if the person charged gives evidence of his good character (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, ss. 9, 20, see post, pp. 446, 447).
- (7) On a charge of receiving stolen goods, evidence of previous convictions for fraud or dishonesty within five years previous to the date of the offence charged may be given to prove guilty knowledge, whether the person charged gives evidence of his good character or not (Larceny Act, 1916, s. 4, see post, p. 503).

After Verdict, evidence of previous conviction of a person charged can always be given, in order that the punishment may be properly adjusted to the offence.

CONDUCT OF PARTIES ON OTHER OCCASIONS.

HOLLINGHAM v. HEAD.

COMMON PLEAS. 1858.

27 L. J. C. P. 241; 6 W. R. 442; 4 JUR. N. S. 379;
4 C. B. N. S. 388.

Conduct of the parties on other occasions, unconnected with the act or conduct in question, is generally irrelevant. The fact that a person has done a certain thing on other occasions is not relevant to the question whether he did it on the occasion in question.

The question being whether the plaintiff had sold guano to the defendant on certain special terms, the fact that he had sold guano to other persons on such terms was inadmissible in evidence.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

WILLES, J. . . . The question is, whether in an action for goods sold and delivered, it is competent for the defendant to show, by way of defence, that the plaintiff has entered into contracts with other persons in a particular form, for the purpose of inducing the jury to come to the conclusion that the contract sued upon was in that particular form, and so to defeat the action; and I am of opinion that it is not competent for the defendant to do so. . . .

It may be often difficult to decide upon the admissibility of evidence, where it is offered for the purpose of establishing probability, but to be admissible it must at least afford a reasonable inference as to the principal matter in dispute. . . . It appears to me that the evidence, which was proposed to be given in this case, would not have shown that it was probable that the plaintiff had made the contract, which the defendant contended he had made; for I do not see how the fact that a man has once or more in his life acted in a particular way, makes it probable that he so acted on a given occasion. The admission of such evidence would be fraught with the greatest inconvenience. Where, indeed, the question is one of guilty knowledge or intent, as in the case of uttering forged documents or base coin, such evidence is admissible as tending to establish a necessary ingredient of the crime. But if the evidence were admissible in this case, it would be difficult to say that in any case, where the question was whether or not goods had been sold upon credit, the defendant might not call evidence to prove that other persons had received credit from the plaintiff; or in an action for an assault, that the plaintiff might not prove that the defendant had assaulted other persons generally, or persons of a particular class.

To obviate the prejudice, the injustice, and the waste of time to which the admission of such evidence would lead, and bearing in mind the extent to which it might be carried, and that litigants are mortal, it is necessary not only to adhere to the rule, but to lay it down strictly. I think, therefore, the fact that the plaintiff had entered into contracts of a particular kind with other persons on other occasions could not properly be admitted in evidence, where no custom of trade to make such contracts, and no connection between such and the one in question, was shown to exist. . . .

BYLES, J. . . . As regards the question put to the plaintiff on cross-examination, it may be that he might have been asked whether he had not made the same contract with other persons, which the defendant contended he had made with him, for the purpose of testing his memory or his credit. But such evidence, when offered as part of the defendant's case, was totally inadmissible. To have admitted it would have been contrary to all principle, and to what has been the universal practice so long as I have known the profession.

WILLIAMS, J. . . . As to the evidence offered by the defendant, there can be no doubt whatever that that was inadmissible. It would lead to the greatest inconvenience if we were once to relax the rule, which requires the evidence to be confined to the points in issue, by allowing other transactions to be inquired into. . . .

Note.—It will be observed that the rule in the above case applies to "unconnected" conduct. If the conduct on another occasion were connected with that in question, as if it were part of the same transaction (see ante, p. 66), it then might be admissible. Or if, in the above case, the plaintiff had said he would supply guano to the defendant on the same terms as those made with the other persons in question, then, doubtless, his conduct in dealing with such persons would have been admissible.

HOLCOMBE v. HEWSON.

NISI PRIUS. 1810.

2 CAMP. 391.

The evidence to prove a particular transaction must generally be confined to the details of such transaction.

In an action by a brewer against a publican, on an agreement by the latter to take all his beer from the former, the question arose whether he had supplied bad beer. Evidence of certain other publicans that the plaintiff had supplied them with good beer was rejected.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. This is res inter alios acta. We cannot here enquire into the quality of different beer furnished to different persons. The plaintiff might deal well with one and not with the others. Let him call some of those who frequented the defendant's house, and there drank the beer which he sent in, or let him give any other evidence of the quality of this beer; but I cannot admit witnesses to his general character and habits as a brewer.

Note.—If it had been shown that all the beer was of the same brewing and supplied at the same time, it is suggested that the evidence would have been admitted.

R. v. GEERING.

LEWES ASSIZES. 1849.

18 L. J. M. C. 215.

When a person is charged with, or alleged to have done, some act involving guilty knowledge or intention, or other state of mind; after proof of the physical act, evidence is admissible of his similar acts on other occasions, but only in order to show such guilty knowledge or intention, or state of mind.

The question being whether prisoner murdered her husband by poison; after proof of the actual administering of the poison, evidence could be given that other members of her family, whose food she prepared, died from similar poison, in order to show that such administering was not accidental.

POLLOCK, C.B. . . . The tendency of such evidence is to prove and to confirm the proof already given, that the death of the husband, whether felonious or not, was occasioned by arsenic. In this view of the case, I think it wholly immaterial whether the deaths of the sons took place before or after the death of the husband. The domestic history of the family during the period that the four deaths occurred is also receivable in evidence, to show that during that time arsenic had been taken by four members of it, with a view to enable the jury to determine as to whether such taking was accidental or not. The evidence is not inadmissible by reason of its having a tendency to prove or to create a suspicion of a subsequent felony. . .

ALDERSON, B., concurred.

Note.—The matter may be roughly stated thus: unconnected conduct on other occasions is never admissible to prove the actus reus, but is admissible to prove the mens rea, or other state of mind. The rule applies to both civil and criminal cases.

With regard to civil cases, Hales v. Kerr, [1908] 2 K. B. 601, is instructive. The plaintiff sued a barber in whose shop he alleged he had contracted barber's itch, owing to the defendant's negligence in using dirty materials. Evidence was allowed to be given by two other customers who had contracted such a complaint at the same shop, in order to show that the defendant's mode of carrying on business was dangerous.

With regard to criminal charges, in the case of R. v. Bond, [1906] 2 K. B. 389, Bray, J., summarised the law as follows:—

"A careful examination of the cases where evidence of this kind has been admitted shows that they may be grouped under three heads:—

"(1) Where the prosecution seeks to prove a system or course of conduct.

"(2) Where the prosecution seeks to rebut a suggestion on the part of the prisoner of accident or mistake.

"(3) Where the prosecution seeks to prove knowledge by the prisoner of some fact."

[This list, however, must not be taken as exhaustive: see Phipson, 6th ed., 158—185.]

R. v. RHODES.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1899.

L. R. [1899] 1 Q. B. 77; 68 L. J. Q. B. 83; 79 L. T. 360; 47 W. R. 121; 62 J. P. 774; 19 Cox, C. C. 182.

Evidence of similar acts on other occasions is admissible to prove guilty knowledge or intention, or state of mind, even though such acts were subsequent to the transaction in question, if they show a connected or entire, scheme or system of operations.

On a trial for obtaining eggs by false pretences, it was proved that the prisoner had falsely represented by advertisements that he was carrying on a bonâ fide dairyman's business. Evidence was admitted that, subsequently to the transaction in question, he had obtained eggs from other persons by similar advertisements.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J. . . . It is plain that the prisoner was carrying on a single and entire scheme of fraud by means of one and the same sham business and sham advertisements. Had the transactions been disconnected and isolated, I should be by no means prepared to admit evidence of the later transactions upon a charge arising out of a former transaction. But here, where, so far from being isolated, a plain connection between each of these transactions is afforded by the advertisement, which shows that the whole scheme was one entire fraud, and that the business was an absolute sham, and that the method was the same in every case, and with the one view of defrauding the public, I am of opinion that the evidence with regard to the prisoner's subsequent transactions was admissible. . . .

WILLS, J. . . . The charge here is that the prisoner falsely pretended he was carrying on a real business when he was carrying on a bogus business. How is this to be shown when a man has, as the prisoner had here, some of the apparatus of a regular business—that is to say, a real shop with his name over it—unless by showing that other like transactions have been carried on by the accused, and that the transaction, the subject of the charge, was part of a system forming a single and entire scheme of fraud? If these other transactions be prior in date to the one in question, there can be no doubt as to their admissibility in evidence. What difference does it make whether they took place before or after, so long as they would fairly lead to the inference that the transaction on which the charge is based is part of a connected system of operations? The difficulty here is the interval of time which elapsed; and if there had been no connecting link between the first and last transactions I agree that the evidence of the last transaction would have been inadmissible. . . . But here we find that the same advertisement had been continued, and that its operation in the last case was precisely similar to its operation in the first. This being so, in my judgment the evidence relating to the later transactions was properly left to the jury. As to this I can entertain no doubt.

WRIGHT, J. . . . It was an essential part of the proof that it was a business of a bogus character to show its general nature, and the best evidence of this would be that it was carried on in the same manner for a considerable time, and once the continuity of the business was shown, transactions after the date of the alleged particular crime were as relevant in proof of its general character as transactions before that date. . . .

BRUCE, J. . . . I cannot say that the evidence is not relevant, because I think it may have tended to show that the prisoner's business was a sham business. It seems to me, however, that it had only a remote bearing upon the case, but that is an objection that relates to the weight of the evidence only, and not to its admissibility.

DARLING, J., concurred.

Note.—It will be observed that the substantial question is—do such acts show a scheme or system of operations of which the act charged forms a part? If so, and one act in the scheme is in issue, the other acts, before or after it, are relevant.

But the other acts offered in evidence must be sufficiently "similar" to the act charged, in order to show system. This is illustrated by the recent case of R. v. Fisher, [1910] 1 K. B. 149, where a prisoner was charged with obtaining goods and credit by false pretences and other fraud; it was held that evidence should not have been admitted that on other occasions he had obtained goods from other persons by false pretences, as the acts were not, under the circumstances, sufficiently similar, Channell, J., saying—

"Of course if the swindling charged was swindling by a particular method, the prosecution might prove similar acts of swindling. In the present case, however, the evidence ought not to have been admitted, because the offence charged ought to have been proved otherwise than by showing that the prisoner was a fraudulent person." The case of R. v. Francis, post, p. 393, illustrates the rule as applied to false pretences.

R. v. RILEY.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1887.

L. R. 18 Q. B. D. 481; 56 L. J. M. C. 52; 56 L. T. 371; 35 W. R. 382; 16 Cox, 191.

In prosecutions for rape, or assault with intent to commit rape, or indecent assault, evidence of similar conduct on other occasions between the prosecutrix and the prisoner is admissible, as being relevant to the issue.

On a charge of rape, the defence was consent of the prosecutrix. In cross-examination she denied previous voluntary acts of connection with the prisoner, and the Court rejected evidence offered by the prisoner to contradict her. The conviction was quashed on the ground that the evidence was admissible.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J. . . . The indictment charged the prisoner with an assault with intent to commit a rape upon a woman, and the woman having denied previous voluntary connection with the accused, the prisoner proposed to show that she had had such connection with him. That evidence was rejected. It is clear that it was receivable. It has been held again and again that if in such a case evidence as to connection with persons other than the accused is denied by the prosecutrix, evidence offered in contradiction must be rejected. There are good reasons, other than those suggested in argument, for rejecting such evidence. It would be very unfair and sometimes cruel to the prosecutrix to admit such evidence; but, in addition, it does not go to the point in issue. . . .

But rejection of evidence of previous voluntary connection with the prisoner is another matter, because not only does such evidence render it more likely that the woman has consented, but it is a line of examination going to the very point in issue.

Upon principle and authority, I think that the evidence in question was receivable.

POLLOCK, B. I agree. The only question is whether the evidence tendered was relevant to the issue. If it was irrelevant as merely going to the woman's character, as in the case of evidence as to connection by the woman with other men, then it was properly rejected. In my opinion, evidence as to her connection with the prisoner, whether of recent date or not, is clearly relevant to the issue.

STEPHEN, J. I am of the same opinion, and have hardly anything to add. I think the weight of authority is decidedly in the direction in which this decision will place it. . . .

MATHEW and WILLS, JJ., concurred.

Note.—For other cases on special rules of evidence concerning rape, etc., see ante, p. 80, and post, p. 118 and p. 294. ✓

CHARACTER OF PARTIES.

"Character" has at least two popular meanings—"disposition" and "reputation." The legal meaning of the term is reputation, at any rate so far as the Law of Evidence is concerned. A man of evil disposition who has secured a good reputation is entitled to the benefit of it in those cases where evidence of his good character is admissible, and vice versa.

It may be said, indeed, that a man's reputation is the best index to his real character or disposition, of which it would be very difficult to obtain any reliable evidence. And the law encourages a man to live in such a manner as to get a good reputation. The Prevention of Crime Act, 1908, uses the expression "character and repute" (see post, p. 484).

Character must be distinguished from conduct on other occasions, with which it is sometimes confused. In order to show system and guilty knowledge, as we have seen (ante, p. 104), evidence of specific acts of conduct may be given. But a man concerning whom such specific acts are proved may still have a good character or reputation, which is not legally affected by evidence of specific acts, as character may be proved by evidence of general reputation only (see post, p. 114).

The cases in which evidence of character of the parties is admissible have been stated ante, p. 99.

The following cases illustrate the positions there referred to.

As to character of witnesses, see post, p. 283.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BOWMAN.

NISI PRIUS. 1791.

2 B. & P. 532.

The character of the parties to a civil action is generally irrelevant and inadmissible.

Upon the trial of an information against the defendant for keeping false weights, and for offering to corrupt an officer, the defendant's counsel called a witness to character. His evidence was not admitted, as it was not a criminal prosecution, but only a penal action.

EYRE, C.B. I cannot admit this evidence in a civil suit. The offence imputed by the information is not in the shape of a crime. It would be contrary to the true line of distinction to admit it, which is this: that in a direct prosecution for a crime, such evidence is admissible; but where the prosecution is not directly for the crime but for the penalty, as in this information, it is not.

SCOTT v. SAMPSON,

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1882.

L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 491; 51 L. J. Q. B. 380; 46 L. T. 412;
30 W. R. 541; 46 J. P. 408.

In all actions or proceedings in which a plaintiff's character is actually in issue, as in actions for defamation, evidence of the plaintiff's character may be given. But evidence cannot be given of particular acts of misconduct by the plaintiff, nor evidence of rumours to the same effect as the matter complained of.

This was an action for libel, the plaintiff, a journalist, alleging that the defendant had published words to the effect that he had obtained money under a threat of publishing facts injurious to the reputation of a certain lady, and systematically abused his position as a dramatic critic and journalist for the purpose of extorting money. The judge at the trial refused to receive evidence of the plaintiff's character, of specific acts of misconduct, and also of rumours prior to the alleged libel to the same effect as the matters complained of. On an application for a new trial it was held that evidence of the character was admissible, but the other evidence was not admissible, but a new trial was refused on other grounds.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

MATHEW, J. . . . I have had the advantage of seeing the judgment which my brother Cave is about to deliver, and I agree with him in the conclusions at which he has arrived after a careful examination of the cases. . . .

CAVE, J. . . . These decisions relate to the admissibility—first, of evidence of reputation; secondly, evidence of rumours of and suspicions to the same effect as the defamatory matter complained of; and, thirdly, evidence of particular facts tending to show the character and disposition of the plaintiff. . . .

Speaking generally, the law recognises in every man a right to have the estimation in which he stands in the opinion of others unaffected by false statements to his discredit; and if such false statements are made without lawful excuse, and damage results to the person of whom they are made, he has a right of action. The damage, however, which he has sustained must depend almost entirely on the estimation in which he was previously held. He complains of an injury to his reputation, and seeks to recover damages for that injury, and it seems most material that the jury who have to award those damages should know, if the fact is so, that he is a man of no reputation. "To deny this would," as is observed in Starkie on Evidence, "be to decide that a man of the worst character is entitled to the same measure of damages with one of unsullied and unblemished reputation. A reputed thief would be placed on the same footing with the most honourable merchant, a virtuous woman with the most abandoned prostitute. To enable the jury to estimate the probable quantum of injury sustained, a knowledge of the party's previous character is not only material, but seems to be absolutely essential." . . .

As to the second head of evidence, or evidence of rumours and suspicions to the same effect as the defamatory matter complained of, it would seem that upon principle such evidence is not admissible, as only indirectly tending to affect the plaintiff's reputation. If these rumours and suspicions have, in fact, affected the plaintiff's reputation, that may be proved by general evidence of reputation. If they have not affected it, they are not relevant to the issue. . . . Unlike evidence of general reputation, it is particularly difficult for the plaintiff to meet and rebut such evidence; for all that those who know him best can say is that they have not heard anything of these rumours. Moreover, it may be that it is the defendant who himself has started them. . . .

As to the third head, or evidence of facts and circumstances tending to show the disposition of the plaintiff, both principle and authority seem equally against its admission. At the most it tends to prove not that the plaintiff has not, but that he ought not to have, a good reputation, and to admit evidence of this kind is, in effect, to throw upon the plaintiff the difficulty of showing a uniform propriety of conduct during his whole life. It would give rise to interminable issues which would have but a very remote bearing on the question in dispute, which is to what extent the reputation which he actually possesses has been damaged by the defamatory matter complained of. . . .

Note.—It is obvious that in cases of defamation evidence of the character of the plaintiff must be admitted, the action being brought for injury to such character, which is thus directly in issue, and all matters in issue may undoubtedly be proved. The evidence may show that his character was correctly described, or that it was such that little damage was done to it. (See note to next case.)

It is perhaps unusual to find other cases, besides defamation, in which character is actually in issue. It might, conceivably, be so in applications to remove trustees or guardians, or in actions for wrongful dismissal on the ground of want of character.

VERRY v. WATKINS.

OXFORD CIRCUIT. 1836.

7 C. & P. 308.

In a few cases, where the amount of damages depends upon character, as in seduction and breach of promise of marriage, evidence may be given of the character of the woman seduced, or the female plaintiff, but upon the question of damages only.

In an action for seduction, the plaintiff's daughter was cross-examined with the object of showing that she was a girl of loose character. Evidence was also called for the defence showing her general bad character in respect of chastity and moral conduct.

ALDERSON, B. (to the jury). If you think that the defendant had such intercourse with the daughter of the plaintiff as caused him to be the father of the child to which she gave birth, your verdict must be for the plaintiff; and the case then comes to a question of damages; in which view, and in which view alone, you will consider what reliance you ought to place on the evidence adduced on the part of the defendant.

Note.—Stephen says: "In civil cases, the fact that a person's general reputation is bad, may, it seems, be given in evidence in reduction of damages" (Dig. Ev., Art. 57). Stated in this general manner, it would suggest that a person's character could be given in evidence when he claimed damages for a breach of contract or a broken leg. It cannot be so. But in cases of seduction and breach of promise the woman's character for modesty, etc., may clearly be relevant as to the damage suffered. And it appears to be so considered in cases of damages for adultery. (See Phipson, 6th ed., p. 191.)

There does not appear to be any case in which evidence of the defendant's character is admissible in civil cases.

Order 36, rule 37 of the Rules of the Supreme Court provides that in actions for libel or slander, in which the defendant does not plead truth, the defendant shall not give evidence in mitigation of damages, as to the circumstances, or as to the character of the plaintiff, without the leave of the Judge, unless seven days before the trial he furnishes particulars (see post, p. 512).

R. v. ROWTON.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1865.

34 L. J. M. C. 57; 11 L. T. 745; 13 W. R. 436; 11 JUR. N. S. 325; 10 Cox, C. C. 25; L. & C. 520.

A prisoner, or defendant in a criminal case, at his trial, can always give evidence of his good character. The prosecution may rebut such evidence by evidence of his bad character, although they cannot give evidence of his bad character as part of their case.

Evidence of character must not be evidence of particular facts, but must be evidence of general reputation only, having reference to the nature of the charge; not evidence of disposition.

On a trial for indecent assault, where the defendant had given evidence of his good character, a witness called by the prosecution to rebut such evidence was asked, "What is the defendant's general character for decency and morality of conduct?" The witness said, "I know nothing of the neighbourhood's opinion, because I was only a boy at school when I knew him; but my own opinion, and the opinion of my brothers, who were also pupils of his, is that his character is that of a man capable of the grossest indecency and the most flagrant immorality." It was held, by eleven Judges against two, that this answer was not admissible in evidence.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . Two questions present themselves, the first, whether, when evidence in favour of the character of the prisoner has been given on his behalf, evidence of his bad character can be adduced upon the part of the prosecution to rebut the evidence so given. I am clearly of opinion that such evidence may properly be received: It is true that, probably in the experience of all of us, no occasion has presented itself when such evidence has been given on the part of the prosecution. That may be easily explained by the circumstance that it seldom happens that evidence is called to the character of a prisoner when those who represent the prisoner are aware that the character will be liable to be rebutted. Notice is often given from a sense or spirit of fairness by the prosecuting counsel, that if any attempt is made to set up the character of the prisoner, against the facts adduced on the part of the prosecution, such attempt will be met either by a rigorous examination or rebutting evidence; but it seems to me when we come to consider whether such evidence is admissible, speaking logically and reasonably, it is impossible to come to any other than one conclusion. . . .

Assuming, then, that evidence was properly received to rebut the prior evidence of good character, adduced by the prisoner, the question still presents itself of whether the answer which was given to the question, which is perfectly legitimate in its character, was an answer which it was proper to leave to the jury? Now, in determining this, it becomes necessary, in the first instance, to consider what is the meaning of evidence to character. It is laid down in the books that a prisoner is entitled to give evidence as to his general character. What does that mean? Does it mean evidence as to his reputation amongst those to whom his conduct and position are known, or does it mean evidence of disposition? I think it means evidence of reputation only. . . . No one ever heard of a question put deliberately to a witness called on behalf of a prisoner as to the prisoner's disposition of mind; the way, and the only way the law allows of your getting at the disposition and tendency of his mind, is by evidence as to his general character founded upon the knowledge of those who know anything about him and his general conduct. Now, that is the sense in which I find the word "character" used and applied in all the books of the text-writers of authority upon the subject of evidence. . . .

No one pretends that, according to the present practice, examination can be made as to a specific fact, though every one would agree that evidence of one fact of honesty or dishonesty, as the case might be, would weigh infinitely more than the opinions of a man's friends or neighbours as to his general character. The truth is, this part of our law is an anomaly. Although, logically speaking, it is quite clear that an antecedent bad character would form quite as reasonable a ground for the presumption and probability of guilt, as previous good character lays the foundation for the presumption of innocence, yet the prosecution cannot go into evidence as to the prisoner's bad character. The allowing evidence of a prisoner's good character to be given has grown up from a desire to administer the law with mercy, as far as possible. . . .

When we come to consider the question of what, in the strict interpretation of the law, is the limit of such evidence, I must say that, in my judgment, it must be restrained to this: the evidence must be of the man's general reputation, and not the individual opinion of the witness. . . . The witness who acknowledged that he knew nothing of the general character, and had no opportunity of knowing it in the sense of reputation, would not be allowed to give an opinion as to a man's character in the more limited sense of his disposition.

If that be the true doctrine on the subject of the admissibility of evidence to character in favour of the prisoner, the next question that presents itself is, within what limits must the evidence be confined which is adduced in rebutting evidence to meet the evidence which the prisoner has brought forward? I think that that evidence must be of the same character and kept within the same limits; that while the prisoner can give evidence of general good character, so the evidence called to rebut it must be evidence of the same general description, showing that the evidence which has been given to establish a good reputation on the one hand is not true, because the man's general reputation was bad.

Now, then, what is the answer in the present case? The witness, it seems, disclaims all knowledge as to the general reputation of the accused; what he says is this: "I know nothing of the neighbourhood's opinion." I take the witness in this expression to mean to say, "I know nothing of the opinion of those with whom the man has in the ordinary occupations of life been brought immediately into contact. I knew him, and so did two brothers of mine when we were at school, and in my opinion his disposition" (for in that sense the word "character" is used by the witness)—"in my opinion his disposition is such that he is capable of committing the class of offences with which he stands charged." I am strongly of opinion that that answer was not admissible in evidence. . . . I take my stand on this: I find it uniformly laid down in the books of authority that the evidence to character must be evidence to general character in the sense of reputation. . . .

POLLOCK, C.B., WILLIAMS, BLACKBURN, BYLES, KEATING, MELLOR and SHEE, J.J., and MARTIN, CHANNELL and PIGGOTT, BB., concurred; ERLE, C.J., and WILLES, J., dissented.

Note.—It is generally stated, that evidence of a prisoner's good character is admissible, but evidence of his bad character is inadmissible, except in answer to evidence of his good character. But why cut up this rule into two parts? It seems to be simply this—evidence of the prisoner's character, good or bad, is always admissible at the prisoner's option. Whenever his good character is admitted his bad character is admissible. [This statement may perhaps mislead. The option the prisoner has is to give, or withhold, evidence of his good character. If he elect (1) to give this, the prosecution then has the option of giving, or withholding, evidence of his bad character in rebuttal; if he elect (2) to withhold it, the prosecution's option does not arise, for there is nothing to rebut, and evidence of bad character (which here is only admissible in rebuttal) is consequently excluded. This is not quite adequately expressed by saying that "evidence of the prisoner's character, good or bad, is always admissible at the prisoner's option."]

"Evidence of character must, of course, be applicable to the particular nature of the charge; to prove, for instance, that a party has borne a good character for humanity and kindness, can have no bearing in reference to a charge of dishonesty. The correct mode of inquiry is as to the general character of the accused" (Wills, Circ. Ev., 6th ed., 273).

The rule in the above case only applies to criminal charges.

R. v. CLARKE.

NISI PRIUS. 1817.

2 STARKIE, 241.

In prosecutions for rape, or assault with intent to commit rape, or indecent assault, evidence of the bad character of the prosecutrix may be given in defence, her character, under the circumstances, being considered, to some extent, in issue.

Upon an indictment for assault with intent to commit rape, it was proposed, on the part of the defendant, to call witnesses to impugn the character of the prosecutrix, both generally and particularly.

HOLROYD, J. It is clear that no evidence can be received of particular facts, and such evidence could not have been received, although the prosecutrix had been cross-examined as to those facts, because her answers upon those facts must have been taken as conclusive. With respect to such facts the case is clear. Then, with respect to general evidence; such evidence, it has been held, is admissible in all cases where character is in issue, and therefore the only question is, whether the character of the prosecutrix is involved in the present issue. In the case of an indictment for a rape, evidence that a woman had a bad character previous to the supposed commission of the offence is admissible; but the defendant cannot go into evidence of particular facts. This is the law upon an indictment for rape, and I am of opinion that the same principles apply to the case of an indictment for an assault with intent to commit a rape.

Note.—This seems to be the only case in which evidence is allowed of the character of the person prosecuting. The act here charged as a crime is, unlike most other criminal acts, one which may be consented to, and the character of the prosecutrix is material as to consent. See also ante, pp. 80 and 108, and post, p. 294. ✓

CONVICTIONS OF PARTIES.

Re CRIPPEN.

PROBATE. 1911.

L. R. [1911] P. 108; 80 L. J. P. 47;
104 L. T. 224.

A conviction of a person is admissible in a subsequent civil proceeding brought by such person or anyone claiming through him, to establish a claim or enforce a right resulting to such person from the crime of which he was convicted; not merely as proof of the conviction, but also as evidence of the commission of the crime.

Crippen was convicted of the murder of his wife and duly executed. He had made his will, but his sister, as one of his next of kin, applied for letters of administration of his estate. His executrix opposed the application. By sect. 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, the Court has discretion, by reason of special circumstances, to appoint such person as it thinks fit to be administrator. It was held that there were special circumstances in the case, and that the conviction was admissible as evidence of the commission of the crime.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

SIR SAMUEL EVANS, P. . . . It is clear that the law is, that no person can obtain, or enforce, any rights resulting to him from his own crime; neither can his representative claiming under him obtain or enforce any such rights. . . .

The proposition argued was, that a judgment of conviction in a criminal prosecution like the one in question cannot be received, in a civil action or matter, as any evidence to establish the truth of the facts on which it was rendered, and that it is not admissible at all for that purpose. . . .

His Lordship here considered the authorities.

It is exactly the same as the case of the felon himself making the claim, or bringing the action. Would not the fact of his conviction be evidence against him? Would it be right to treat it as res inter alios acta, and to say it was not admissible at all in a civil action brought by him? . . .

In the present day a person before he can be convicted is "admitted to make a defence, to examine witnesses, and to appeal from a judgment he may think erroneous"—and it may be added, to give evidence in his own behalf.

In these circumstances I think the maxim "Omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta" ought to apply. . . .

If it be that the rules of evidence ever were as contended for the executrix in this regard I think, in the circumstances attending trials for crimes in these days, that they ought to be reconsidered and revised.

In my opinion, where a convicted felon, or the personal representative of a convicted murderer who has been executed, brings any civil proceeding to establish claims, or to enforce rights, which result to the felon, or to the convicted testator from his own crimes, the conviction is admissible in evidence, not merely as proof of the conviction, but also as presumptive proof of the commission of the crime.

Note.—This case was approved of in Mash v. Darley, [1914] 1 K. B. 1 [reversed on other grounds, [1914] 3 K. B. 1226 (C. A.)].

OPINION.

As a general rule, the fact that a witness has a certain opinion as to a fact in issue is not relevant to such fact. It is for the Court to form opinions or draw inferences from the relevant facts proved, and it is improper for a witness to express an opinion upon any fact as to which the Court itself can form an opinion.

"Vain would it be for the law to constitute the jury the triers of disputed facts, to reject derivative evidence when original proof is withheld, and to declare that a party is not to be prejudiced by the words or acts of others with whom he is unconnected, if tribunals might be swayed by opinions relative to those facts, expressed by persons who come before them in the character of witnesses. If the opinions thus offered are founded on no evidence, or on illegal evidence, they ought not to be listened to; if founded on legal evidence, that evidence ought to be laid before the jury, whom the law presumes to be at least as capable as the witnesses of drawing from them any inferences that justice may require" (Best, 424).

But, of course, in those matters on which the Court is not as capable as witnesses of drawing inferences, i.e., in matters which require special study or experience in order that a just opinion may be formed, such as matters of science or art, the rule of exclusion cannot prevail, and the opinions of "experts" must be received.

"The reasonable principle appears to be, that scientific witnesses shall be permitted to testify only to such matters of fact as have come within their own cognisance, or as they have acquired a knowledge of by their reading, and to such inferences from them, or from other facts provisionally assumed to be proved, as their particular studies and pursuits specially qualify them to draw; so that the jury may thus be furnished with the necessary scientific criteria for testing the accuracy of their conclusions, and enabled to form their own independent judgment by the application of those criteria to the facts established in evidence before them" (Wills, Circ. Ev., 140).

Opinion evidence is by no means confined to "experts." There have been many cases in which ordinary witnesses have been allowed to give their opinions in evidence, and they must frequently be allowed to do so. There are many matters on which it is naturally impossible for any witness to give positive evidence of facts which he observed. He must, if he says anything at all, speak as to his opinion of belief, on matters which are essentially matters of opinion or are so complex or indefinite that he can only form a general opinion upon them. Thus, on questions of identity, condition, age, appearance or resemblance of persons or things; on the general character of the weather, or the general conduct of a business or of persons during a certain period, or the general character of a meeting alleged to be seditious, clearly only evidence of opinion can be given, and would in most cases be received.

CARTER v. BOEHM.

KING'S BENCH. 1766.

3 BURROW, 1905; 1 W. BL. 593.

A witness may not, generally, give his opinion as to facts in issue or relevant facts. The fact that he has such an opinion is not relevant to such facts. It is for the Court to form opinions on the facts proved.

In an action on an insurance policy, the question arose as to the materiality of certain facts which had not been communicated to the insurers. It was proposed to give in evidence the opinions of certain insurance brokers, who had had long acquaintance with insurance business. Such evidence was rejected.

The following is from Burrow:—

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included ASTON, YATES and WILMOT, J.J.). . . . Great stress was laid upon the opinion of the broker. But we all think the jury ought not to pay the least regard to it. It is mere opinion; which is not evidence. It is opinion after an event. It is opinion without the least foundation from any previous precedent or usage. It is an opinion, which, if rightly formed, could only be drawn from the same premises from which the Court and jury were to determine the cause, and therefore it is improper and irrelevant in the mouth of a witness. . . .

The following is from Blackstone:—

. . . As to the Opinion of the Broker: it was no Evidence; being merely Opinion, and formed after the Event had happened. . . .

[Note.—This case, which is commonly regarded as a leading authority, has been retained for its statement of principle, though the modern practice is to admit the evidence of underwriters as to the materiality of facts in connection with policies of insurance (Scottish Shire Line v. London, &c. Co., [1912] 3 K. B. p. 70).]

FOLKES v. CHADD.

KING'S BENCH. 1782.

3 DOUGLAS, 157.

On certain matters, such as those of science or art, upon which the Court itself cannot form an opinion, special study, skill or experience being required for the purpose, "expert" witnesses may give evidence of their opinions.

The question arising whether a certain bank, erected for the purpose of preventing the sea overflowing certain meadows, contributed to the choking and decay of a certain harbour, the evidence of Mr. Smeaton, the celebrated engineer, of his opinion on the subject, was allowed.

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included BULLER, ASHHURST and WILLES, JJ.). . . . The question is, to what has this decay been owing? The defendant says to this bank. Why? Because it prevents the back water. That is matter of opinion; the whole case is a question of opinion, from facts agreed upon. Nobody can swear that it was the cause; nobody thought that it would produce this mischief when the bank was erected. . . .

Mr. Smeaton is called. A confusion now arises from a misapplication of terms. It is objected that Mr. Smeaton is going to speak, not as to facts, but as to opinion. That opinion, however, is deduced from facts which are not disputed—the situation of banks, the course of tides and of winds, and the shifting of sands. His opinion, deduced from all these facts, is, that, mathematically speaking, the bank may contribute to the mischief, but not sensibly.

Mr. Smeaton understands the construction of harbours, the causes of their destruction, and how remedied. In matters of science no other witnesses can be called. . . . I cannot believe that where the question is, whether a defect arises from a natural or an artificial cause, the opinions of men of science are not to be received. Hand-writing is proved every day by opinion; and for false evidence on such questions a man may be indicted for perjury. . . .

I have myself received the opinion of Mr. Smeaton respecting mills, as a matter of science. The cause of the decay of the harbour is also a matter of science, and still more so, whether the removal of the bank can be beneficial. Of this, such men as Mr. Smeaton alone can judge. Therefore, we are of opinion that his judgment, formed on facts, was very proper evidence. . . .

Note.—The matters upon which such opinion evidence can be given include, inter alia, causes of death, insanity, effects of poison, genuineness of works of art, value of articles, genuineness of hand-writing, proper navigation of vessels, meaning of trade terms, foreign law, etc. And in support of such opinion evidence the witness may prove experiments, inspection and other acts upon which he bases his opinion, although they were made or done in the absence of the party. See R. v. Heseltine, 12 Cox, 404. In a recent trial for murder it was held that a medical witness, who had not seen the body, might be asked whether, in his opinion, assuming the facts described by another witness who had seen the body to be true, the wounds could have been self-inflicted (R. v. Mason, 76 J. P. 184).

BRISTOW v. SEQUEVILLE.

EXCHEQUER. 1850.

19 L. J. Ex. 289; 14 JUR. 674; 5 Ex. 275; 82 R. R. 664.

It is for the Judge to decide whether the skill of any proposed witness is sufficient to entitle him to be considered an "expert." A person whose knowledge of foreign law is derived solely from study without actual practice may be held incompetent to give evidence on such matter.

In order to prove the foreign law in force at Cologne, a witness was called, who stated that he was a jurisconsult and adviser to the Prussian consul in England; that he had studied law at the University of Leipzig, and knew from his studies there that the Code Napoléon was in force at Cologne. It was held that he was incompetent to prove the law of Cologne.

The following is from the Jurist:—

ALDERSON, B. If a man who has studied law in Saxony and never practised in Prussia be competent to prove the law of Prussia, why should not a Frenchman be competent to prove it? Or suppose I were to read in a book about the law of China, would the knowledge so acquired render my evidence admissible to prove the law of China? . . . Would the testimony of a man be receivable to prove the English law who had studied it abroad but never in England?

ROLFE, B. If you are right in your argument you need not have gone as far as Leipzig for a witness; the testimony of a man who should say, "I have been to Oxford and studied the German law there," would be receivable.

POLLOCK, C.B. Suppose a case depending on medical testimony, would the evidence of a man be receivable who had studied medicine at one of the universities, but never practised it?

The following is from the Law Journal:—

ALDERSON, B. If a man who has studied law in Saxony, and has never practised in Prussia, is a competent witness, why may not a Frenchman, who has studied the books relating to Chinese law, prove what the law of China is?

ROLFE, B. If this is sufficient, it would do to study the German law at Oxford.

POLLOCK, C.B., and PLATT, B., concurred in rejecting the evidence.

[Note.—Foreign or Colonial law, which in our Courts is treated as a question of fact, is a subject upon which the opinion of experts is admissible, since competency to form an opinion thereon can only be acquired by a course of special study or experience. Although a question of fact, it is one which, by statute, is determinable by the judge and not the jury (Administration of Justice Act, 1920, s. 15; post, p. 505). (As to the judicial notice of English law, see ante, p. 15).]

The above case can scarcely be taken as laying down a definite rule that an expert witness must be a practitioner. No formal judgment is reported, the Judge's ideas being expressed in loose and indefinite questions. It may well be doubted whether the evidence of a learned juriconsult or professor, who had never actually practised, would always be rejected. It would be strange that a young and comparatively inexperienced practitioner should be admitted as a witness in preference to a learned professor of high reputation. The Judge would probably consider the general qualification of the proposed witness, and would not rely solely upon the question of practice. The above case shows that the Judges were not satisfied with the particular witness.

The case seems to have been ignored in the later cases of Wilson v. Wilson, [1903] P. 157, and Brailey v. Rhodesia, etc., [1910] 2 Ch. 95, in each of which the evidence of a person not practising in the particular country was admitted. [As to the qualification of experts in handwriting, see R. v. Silverlock, infra, and post, p. 350.]

R. v. SILVERLOCK.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1894.

L. R. [1894] 2 Q. B. 766; 63 L. J. M. C. 136; 72
 .. L. T. 298; 18 Cox, C. C. 104; 58 J. P. 788.

In order to prove by comparison with admittedly genuine letters that a certain advertisement was in the handwriting of the accused, the solicitor for the prosecution was, after objection, allowed to be called as "an expert." The solicitor testified that he had for the last ten years, and quite apart from his professional work, given considerable study and attention to handwriting, and especially to old parish registers and wills; that he had on several occasions professionally compared evidence in handwriting, but had never before given evidence as to handwriting; also that he had formed an opinion that the defendant was guilty before he began to compare the handwriting. The prisoner was convicted and appealed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J. . . . It is true that the witness who is called upon to give evidence founded on a comparison of hand-writings must be peritus; he must be skilled in so doing; but we cannot say that he must have become peritus in the way of his business, or in any definite way. The question is, is he peritus? is he skilled? Has he an adequate knowledge? Looking at the matter practically, if a witness is not skilled the Judge will tell the jury to disregard his evidence. There is no decision which requires that the evidence of a man who is skilled in comparing handwriting and has formed a reliable opinion from past experience, should be excluded because his experience has not been gained in the way of his business. It is, however, really unnecessary to consider this point; for it seems from the statement in the present case that the witness was not only peritus, but peritus in the way of his business. When once it is determined that the evidence is admissible, the rest is merely a question of its value or weight, and this is entirely a question for the jury, who will attach more or less weight to it according as they believe the witness to be peritus.

Conviction affirmed.

FRYER v. GATHERCOLE.

EXCHEQUER. 1849.

13 JUR. 542.

On matters with respect to which it is practically impossible for any witness to swear positively, ordinary or "non-expert" witnesses may give evidence of their opinions.

So, on questions of identification, condition, comparison or resemblance, of persons or things, a witness may speak as to his belief or opinion, when he cannot swear positively; although he has no special knowledge, skill or experience on such matters generally.

To prove the publication of a libellous pamphlet, a female witness was called, who deposed to having received from the defendant a copy of a pamphlet, of which she read some portions, and lent it to several persons in succession, who returned it to her, after which she wrote her name on it; and, although there was no mark by which she could identify it, she believed the copy produced to be the same, but could not swear that it was. It was held that this was proper evidence of identification of the pamphlet.

POLLOCK, C.B. . . . The question resolves itself into a question of degree. The witness could say no more than this: "I believe the copy of the pamphlet produced to be the same with that which I received from the defendant, because when I lent that copy to other persons it was returned to me, and I had no reason to believe it otherwise when I last got it back. I then for certainty put my name to it." If the name had been written in the first instance no doubt could have arisen. . . . As has been truly argued, there are many cases of identification where the law would be rendered ridiculous if positive certainty were required from witnesses. . . . The evidence in this case was therefore properly received; any objection to it goes merely to its value.

ALDERSON, B. . . . She said she read a portion—read several parts of it. She lends it to A. B., he has it in his possession out of her sight, he returns her a similar book on the same subject, and she believes it is the same copy. It is open to contend that A. B. may have substituted another copy, and that that returned is not the same which was lent. The jury may judge how far that is probable or reasonable. . . .

PARKE, B. (in course of argument). . . . In the identification of person you compare in your mind the man you have seen with the man you see at the trial. The same rule belongs to every species of identification.

Note.—One of the chief matters on which non-experts are allowed to give opinion evidence, is handwriting, provided their knowledge has been acquired in the ways specified, post, p. 347. Expert witnesses may also be called on such questions, to apply their special skill thereto. Recently, the opinion of a non-expert as to the value of a thing was held admissible (R. v. Beckett, 29 T. L. R. 332). Another matter upon which opinion evidence may be given is referred to in the Motor Car Act, 1903, i.e. the speed of a car (see post, p. 475). See also Companies Act, 1908, post, p. 492. ✓

THE BURDEN OF PROOF AND THE RIGHT TO BEGIN.

The term "burden of proof" is used in two senses: as regards (1) the whole case; (2) particular facts. Thus we have to consider what we purpose to call the "general" and the "particular" burden of proof (see Phipson, 30-32).

(1) The General Burden of Proof.

Before the Court can proceed to hear a case, it is, obviously, necessary to determine which party shall begin, or upon whom the burden of proof on the whole case lies. The general rule is that the party who alleges any matter in issue must prove it. This would be simple enough if there were only one fact in issue, but there may be several facts in issue, the burden of proof of some being on one party and of others on the other party. The position is practically this, that the burden of proof lies at first on the party against whom judgment would be given if no evidence at all were adduced. When such party has given sufficient evidence to entitle him to judgment if no further evidence were given, the burden of proof shifts to the other party, and may repeatedly so shift.

In a criminal case there is generally no difficulty, as all the allegations are invariably made by the prosecution, on whom the general burden of proof invariably lies.

In a civil case, the pleadings must be looked at in order to settle the question. The plaintiff naturally, in his statement of claim, makes the first allegations. If the defendant, in his defence, pleads a traverse, or denial of an allegation made by the plaintiff, that puts it in issue and leaves the burden of proof upon the plaintiff. If the defendant pleads a confession and avoidance, admitting the plaintiff's allegation, but alleging further facts by way of defence, the matter in issue is not the plaintiff's allegation, but that of the defendant, if denied by the plaintiff, and the burden of proof is therefore upon the latter. But if there are several allegations, and the burden of proof of some is on one party and of others on the other party, i.e., a distribution of issues, the general burden of proof is upon the plaintiff. This is so even if all the allegations of fact are admitted by the defendant, and the only question in issue is the amount of unliquidated damages. The result is that the general burden of proof is almost invariably upon the plaintiff.

The expression "right to begin," frequently used in this connection, may seem inconsistent with the expression "burden of proof," as both expressions refer to the same position; the position of the party who, on the facts, is to begin, but they indicate the different way in which such position may be viewed. If such party has not sufficient evidence to establish his case by his own witnesses, he would consider his position a burden; if he has clearly sufficient evidence to make out a primâ facie case, he would consider his position a right or privilege, as it would generally entitle him to both the first and the last word in the case, by way of reply (see hereon the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, s. 2, post, p. 438; Order 36, r. 36, post, p. 512).

(2) The Particular Burden of Proof.

It has been indicated above, that the burden of proof of any particular fact in issue is upon the party who alleges the affirmative of such fact. It is only necessary to add, and to emphasise, that the substance, and not the mere form, of the pleading is to be considered. The position cannot be altered, nor can the Court be misled by the ingenious manipulation of language. This rule as to the burden of proof applies generally to negative averments, unless by reason of their complexity or difficulty of proof, or by virtue of some statutory provision, the burden is cast upon the person denying the allegation, as will be seen below.

AFFIRMATIVE AVERMENTS.

AMOS v. HUGHES.

NISI PRIUS. 1835.

1 M. & ROB. 464.

The general burden of proof is upon the party who would be unsuccessful in the case if no evidence at all were given; and such party has the right to begin.

The burden of proof of any particular fact in issue is upon the party who alleges the affirmative thereof.

In an action for a breach of contract to emboss calico in a workmanlike manner, the defendant pleading that he had done the work properly, the question arose as to which party was entitled to begin; it was held that the plaintiff was.

ALDERSON, B., ruled that the plaintiff was entitled. He said, questions of this kind were not to be decided by simply ascertaining on which side the affirmative, in point of form, lay: the proper test is, which party would be successful if no evidence at all were given? Now here, supposing no evidence to be given on either side, the defendant would be entitled to the verdict, for it is not to be assumed that the work was badly executed; therefore the onus lies on the plaintiff.

Note.—It is always possible to make an allegation in a negative form, so that the defendant must answer it affirmatively; as in the above case, where the defendant said "he had done the work properly," the plaintiff having alleged, apparently, that it was "not done properly." The proof cannot be shifted by putting an allegation in a negative form. The question is, on the facts, who substantially alleges the "affirmative in substance"? He begins and proves. The next case is perhaps a still better illustration of the rule.

SOWARD v. LEGGATT.

NISI PRIUS. 1836.

7 C. & P. 613.

In determining the burden of proof and right to begin, it is not so much the grammatical language of the pleading which is to be considered as the substance and effect of it. The Judge should consider what is the real fact in issue, and who alleges the "affirmative in substance" thereof.

The plaintiff, being the landlord of the defendant, alleged that the latter "did not repair" the premises in question. The defendant pleaded that he "did well and sufficiently repair" the same. It was held that, notwithstanding that the defendant's pleading was the grammatical affirmative, the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff.

LORD ABINGER, C.B. Looking at these things according to common sense, we should consider what is the substantive fact to be made out, and on whom it lies to make it out. It is not so much the form of the issue which ought to be considered, as the substance and effect of it. In many cases, a party, by a little difference in the drawing of his pleadings, might make it either affirmative or negative, as he pleased. The plaintiff here says, "You did not repair"; he might have said, "You let the house become dilapidated." I shall endeavour by my own view to arrive at the substance of the issue, and I think in the present case that the plaintiff's counsel should begin.

Note.—The questions practically are—what is the matter in issue? who brought it into question? The party who did so must prove it.

NEGATIVE AVERMENTS.

ABRATH v. NORTH EASTERN RY. CO.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1883.

L. R. 11 Q. B. D. 440; 52 L. J. Q. B. 620; 49 L. T. 618; 32 W. R. 50; 47 J. P. 692.

The burden of proof is, as a general rule, upon the party who alleges the matter in issue, even although his allegation involves a negative.

When the party alleging has made out a "primâ facie" case in support of his allegation, the burden of proof may shift to his opponent.

Thus, in an action for malicious prosecution, where the plaintiff alleges that the defendant instituted proceedings against him without reasonable and probable cause, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove, not only the prosecution, but also primâ facie, the want of reasonable and probable cause. The burden may then shift to the defendant to show that he had such cause.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

BRETT, M.R. . . . It seems to me that the propositions ought to be stated thus: the plaintiff may give primâ facie evidence which, unless it be answered either by contradictory evidence, or by the evidence of additional facts, ought to lead the jury to find the question in his favour: the defendant may give evidence either by contradicting the plaintiff's evidence or by proving other facts: the jury have to consider upon the evidence given upon both sides, whether they are satisfied in favour of the plaintiff with respect to the question which he calls upon them to answer; if they are, they must find for the plaintiff; but if upon consideration of the facts they come clearly to the opinion that the question ought to be answered against the plaintiff, they must find for the defendant. Then comes this difficulty—suppose that the jury, after considering the evidence, are left in real doubt as to which way they are to answer the question put to them on behalf of the plaintiff; in that case also the burden of proof lies upon the plaintiff; and if the defendant has been able, by the additional facts which he has adduced, to bring the minds of the whole jury to a real state of doubt, the plaintiff has failed to satisfy the burden of proof which lies upon him.

BOWEN, L.J. . . . Whenever litigation exists somebody must go on with it; the plaintiff is the first to begin; if he does nothing he fails; if he makes a prima facie case, and nothing is done to answer it, the defendant fails. The test, therefore, as to the burden of proof or onus of proof, whichever term is used, is simply this: to ask oneself which party will be successful if no evidence is given, or if no more evidence is given than has been given at a particular point of the case, for it is obvious that as the controversy involved in the litigation travels on, the parties from moment to moment may reach points at which the onus of proof shifts, and at which the tribunal will have to say that if the case stops there it must be decided in a particular manner. The test being such as I have stated, it is not a burden that goes on for ever resting on the shoulders of the person upon whom it is first cast. As soon as he brings evidence which, until it is answered, rebuts the evidence against which he is contending, then the balance descends on the other side, and the burden rolls over until again there is evidence which once more turns the scale. That being so, the question of onus of proof is only a rule for deciding on whom the obligation of going further, if he wishes to win, rests. It is not a rule to enable the jury to decide on the value of conflicting evidence. So soon as a conflict of evidence arises it ceases to be a question of onus of proof.

There is another point which must be cleared in order to make plain what I am about to say. As causes are tried, the term "onus of proof" may be used in more ways than one. Sometimes when a cause is tried the jury is left to find generally for either the plaintiff or the defendant, and it is in such a case essential that the Judge should tell the jury on whom the burden of making out the case rests, and when and at what period it shifts. Issues again may be left to the jury upon which they are to find generally for the plaintiff or the defendant, and they ought to be told on whom the burden of proof rests; and indeed it is to be observed that very often the burden of proof will be shifted within the scope of a particular issue by presumptions of law which have to be explained to the jury. But there is another way of conducting a trial at Nisi Prius, which is by asking certain definite questions of the jury. If there is a conflict of evidence as to these questions, it is unnecessary, except for the purpose of making plain what the Judge is doing, to explain to the jury about onus of proof, unless there are presumptions of law, such as, for instance, the presumption of consideration for a bill of exchange, or a presumption of consideration for a deed. And if the jury is asked by the Judge a plain question, as, for instance, whether they believe or disbelieve the principal witness called for the plaintiff, it is unnecessary to explain to them about the onus of proof, because the only answer which they have to give is "Yes" or "No," or else they cannot tell what to say. If the jury cannot make up their minds upon a question of that kind it is for the Judge to say which party is entitled to the verdict. I do not forget that there are canons which are useful to a Judge in commenting upon evidence and rules for determining the weight of conflicting evidence; but they are not the same as onus of proof.

Now in an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has the burden throughout of establishing that the circumstances of the prosecution were such that a Judge can see no reasonable or probable cause for instituting it. In one sense this is the assertion of a negative, and we have been pressed with the proposition that when a negative is to be made out the onus of proof shifts. That is not so. If the assertion of a negative is an essential part of the plaintiff's case, the proof of the assertion still rests upon the plaintiff. The terms "negative" and "affirmative" are after all relative and not absolute. In dealing with a question of negligence that term may be considered either as negative or affirmative according to the definition adopted in measuring the duty which is neglected. Wherever a person asserts affirmatively as part of his case that a certain state of facts is present or is absent, or that a particular thing is insufficient for a particular purpose, that is an averment which he is bound to prove positively. It has been said that an exception exists in those cases where the facts lie peculiarly within the knowledge of the opposite party. The counsel for the plaintiff have not gone the length of contending that in all those cases the onus shifts, and that the person within whose knowledge the truth peculiarly lies is bound to prove or disprove the matter in dispute. I think a proposition of that kind cannot be maintained, and that the exceptions supposed to be found amongst cases relating to the game laws may be explained on special grounds. . . .

The ground of our decision comes back to what was suggested, Who had to make good their point as to the proposition whether the defendants had taken reasonable and proper care to inform themselves of the true state of the case? The defendants were not bound to make good anything. It was the plaintiff's duty to show the absence of reasonable care. . . .

FRY, L.J., concurred.

Note.—It will be observed that in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff makes two main allegations, (1) that the defendant prosecuted him, (2) that he had no reasonable cause for the prosecution; the first being affirmative and the second negative. The burden of proof of both of them is on the plaintiff.

A noticeable instance of the shifting of the burden of proof is afforded by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 30 (2), see post, p. 454.

A negative averment must be distinguished from a contradiction of a positive averment, technically known as a "traverse." The former is part of the allegation which has, generally, to be proved by the party making it. The latter is an answer to the allegation of the opposite party, who must prove his allegation. ✓

R. v. TURNER.

KING'S BENCH. 1816.

5 M. & S. 206.

In some cases, if a negative averment is made by one party, and the facts involved are so numerous or complex or are so peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party that it is practically impossible for the party alleging to prove such negative, the burden of proof thereof may be on the party within whose knowledge such facts are, and not upon the party alleging.

So, in a prosecution against a carrier for having pheasants and hares in his possession without being qualified or authorised by law to do so; as there were ten different qualifications recognised by the game laws, and the prisoner knew which qualification, if any, he had, it was held that the burden of proof was upon him to show what qualification he had, notwithstanding that the absence of qualification was affirmatively alleged by the prosecution. Otherwise the prosecution would have been obliged to expressly negative the whole of the ten possible qualifications.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. The question is, upon whom the onus probandi lies; whether it lies upon the person who affirms a qualification, to prove the affirmative, or upon the informer, who denies any qualification, to prove the negative. There are, I think, about ten different heads of qualification enumerated in the statute, to which the proof may be applied; and, according to the argument of to-day, every person who lays an information of this sort is bound to give satisfactory evidence before the magistrates to negative the defendant's qualification upon each of those several heads. The argument really comes to this, that there would be a moral impossibility of ever convicting upon such an information. If the informer should establish the negative of any part of these different qualifications that would be insufficient, because it would be said non liquet, but that the defendant may be qualified under the other. And does not, then, common sense show, that the burden of proof ought to be cast on the person who, by establishing any one of the qualifications, will be well defended? Is not the statute of Anne, in effect, a prohibition on every person to kill game, unless he brings himself within some one of the qualifications allowed by law; the proof of which is easy on the one side, but almost impossible on the other? . . .

BAYLEY, J. I have always understood it to be a general rule, that if a negative averment be made by one party, which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the other, the party within whose knowledge it lies, and who asserts the affirmative, is to prove it, and not he who avers the negative. And if we consider the reason of the thing in this particular case, we cannot but see that it is next to impossible that the witness for the prosecution should be prepared to give any evidence of the defendant's want of qualification. If, indeed, it is to be presumed that he must be acquainted with the defendant, and with his situation or habits in life, then he might give general evidence what those were; but if, as it is more probable, he is unacquainted with any of these matters, how is he to form any judgment whether he is qualified or not, from his appearance only? Therefore, if the law were to require that the witness should depose negatively to these things, it seems to me, that it might lead to the encouragement of much hardihood of swearing. The witness would have to depose to a multitude of facts; he must swear that the defendant has not an estate in his own or his wife's right of a certain value; that he is not the son and heir-apparent of an esquire, etc.; but how is it at all probable that a witness should be likely to depose with truth to such minutiæ? On the other hand, there is no hardship in casting the burden of the affirmative proof on the defendant, because he must be presumed to know his own qualification, and to be able to prove it. . . . But if the onus of proving the negative is to lie on the other party, it seems to me that it will be the cause of many offenders escaping conviction. I cannot help thinking, therefore, that the onus must lie on the defendant, and that when the prosecutor has proved everything which, but for the defendant's being qualified, would subject the defendant to the penalty, he has done enough; and the proof of qualification is to come in as matter of defence. . . .

HOLROYD, J. It is a general rule, that the affirmative is to be proved, and not the negative, unless under peculiar circumstances, where the general rule does not apply. Therefore, it must be shown, that this is a case which ought to form an exception to the general rule. Now all the qualifications mentioned in the statute are peculiarly within the knowledge of the party qualified. If he be entitled to any such estate as the statute requires, he may prove it by his title deeds, or by receipt of the rents and profits; or if he is son and heir-apparent, or servant to any lord or lady of a manor appointed to kill game, it will be a defence. All these qualifications are peculiarly within the knowledge of the party himself, whereas the prosecutor has probably no means whatever of proving a disqualification. . . .

Note.—The law on the subject-matter of this case is not free from doubt, and the above case has itself been criticised. It is generally a question of construction of a particular statute. If the negative averment be a simple one, as doing something "without consent of the owner;" the burden of proof would undoubtedly be upon the person so alleging, as he could easily satisfy it. But if the averment be complex, as in the above case, it may be held that the burden, after proof of the physical act alleged, is upon the other person. It is much a question of degree.

Some statutes expressly put upon the person charged the burden of proof of exemption, qualification, absence of fraudulent intent, and similar matters. The following may be mentioned:—

1. The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 14 (post, p. 424).
2. The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, ss. 8, 9.
3. The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, s. 17 (3) (post, p. 446).
4. The Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, ss. 5, 24.
5. The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 39 (post, p. 452).
6. The Explosive Substances Act, 1883, s. 4.
7. The Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, s. 2.
8. The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 457, 697 (post, pp. 465, 467).
9. The Money-Lenders Act, 1910, s. 5.

Many other examples might be given, there being a growing tendency to put such proof upon the person charged.

Also there are many statutes which declare that certain matters or positions are to be "presumed," "deemed," etc. These may be said also to affect the burden of proof (see post, p. 145).

MERCER v. WHALL.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1845.

14 L. J. Q. B. 267; 9 JUR. 576; 5 Q. B. 447.

Whenever, on the pleadings, the plaintiff has to prove any of the facts in issue, or the damages which he claims are unliquidated, he has the right to begin, although the affirmative of all the other matters in issue is upon the other party.

In an action by an attorney's clerk for wrongful dismissal, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had been guilty of certain misconduct, for which he was dismissed. The plaintiff put in a replication de injuria (which put in issue the misconduct). It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to begin.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included PATTESON, WILLIAMS and COLERIDGE, JJ.). The natural course would seem to be, that the plaintiff should bring his own cause of complaint before the Court and jury, in every case where he has anything to prove, either as to the facts necessary for his obtaining a verdict, or as to the amount of damage to which he conceives the proof of such facts may entitle him. . . . It appears expedient that the plaintiff should begin, in order that the Judge, the jury, and the defendant himself, should know precisely how the claim is shaped. This disclosure may convince the defendant that the defence which he has pleaded cannot be established. . . . If in an action for damages the damages are ascertained, and the plaintiff has a prima facie case on which he must recover that known amount, and no more, unless the defendant proves what he has affirmed in pleading; here is a satisfactory ground for the defendant's proceeding at once to establish that fact. But if the extent of damage is not ascertained, the plaintiff is the person to ascertain it, and his doing so will have the good effect of making even the defence, in a vast majority of cases, much more easily understood for all who are interested with the decision. . . .

Note.—There is an acknowledged difficulty in cases where the proof of all the issues of a fact is upon the defendant, and that of the amount of damages is upon the plaintiff. Formerly the authorities were conflicting, but the above case seems to have settled the rule as stated.

PONTIFEX v. JOLLY.

NISI PRIUS. 1839.

9 C. & P. 202.

The right to begin is settled by the pleadings, and cannot be altered by any admissions made at the trial.

The plaintiff sued upon a bill of exchange. On the pleadings, acceptance and indorsement of the bill were denied. At the trial, Mr. Richards, for the defendant, said he would admit the acceptance and indorsement, and he proposed to open the case on the other pleas, the burden of which lay upon the defendant. He was not allowed to do so.

ALDERSON, B. I think Mr. Richards now admitting the acceptance and indorsement will not entitle him to begin. On this record the plaintiff is entitled to begin.

THE QUANTUM OF PROOF.

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL CASES.

The rules of law cannot, with advantage, deal generally and directly with the quantity or amount of evidence required in proof of any particular question, its cogency or its weight. Such matters must, as a rule, be left for the Court itself to determine in each particular case; the law concerning itself mainly with questions of admissibility of evidence. But it may be stated, as a clear proposition, that a greater degree of conviction, or a nearer approach to certainty, is required to establish a criminal charge than is required in a civil case. The individual rules of evidence are, indeed, generally the same, whether in civil or criminal cases (see post, pp. 176, 394), in the Superior or the Inferior Courts (see post, p. 157), subject to certain exceptions (see post, p. 142). But the ultimate result of the whole evidence must, on a criminal charge, be weightier and more convincing than the minimum upon which a civil claim might be held to be established. It is commonly said that a civil claim may be proved by preponderance of evidence, whilst a criminal charge must be established beyond all reasonable doubt. It is the duty of the Judge in the latter case to tell the jury that they should not convict a prisoner unless they are satisfied of his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt; they must not convict because they think there is rather more evidence against him than for him. The rules also as to corroboration (see post, p. 146), evidence of character (see ante, p. 99), evidence of prisoners, their husbands and wives (see post, p. 260), and confessions (see post, p. 188), all show a leaning in favour of the prisoner.

Sometimes there appears an allegation of criminality in civil proceedings (see ante, p. 26). Then the question occurs whether it must be proved with as much strictness as in actual criminal proceedings. There appears to be some doubt upon this, although there is said to be an equal presumption of innocence (see ante, p. 26). Taylor (s. 112) and Stephen (art. 94) consider there must be the same strict proof, but Phipson (p. 10) says the weight of opinion is to the contrary. (See Chalmers v. Shackell, 6 C. & P. 475; Willmet v. Harmer, 6 C. & P. 695; Vaughton v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co., L. R. 9 Ex. 93).

The differences between civil and criminal cases, as regards evidence, may be shortly summarised, thus:—

- (1) Stricter proof is required to prove crimes than civil claims. They must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt. Corroboration is more frequently required, as in treason (see post, p. 146), and perjury (see post, p. 147). In practice, the evidence of an accomplice is not sufficient to convict (see post, p. 149).
- (2) A prisoner can always give evidence of his good character, which can be answered by evidence of his bad character (see ante, p. 114). In civil cases evidence of the plaintiff's character is only admissible when it is in issue (see ante, p. 111), or when damages depend on it (see ante, p. 113), but evidence of the defendant's character seems never to be admissible.
- (3) The rules as to the evidence of the parties themselves are somewhat different. In civil cases, the parties and their husbands and wives are generally both competent and compellable witnesses. In criminal cases, prisoners and their husbands and wives were, until 1898, generally incompetent. Now they are competent, but only with the prisoner's consent, except in a few cases (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, see post, pp. 260, 468).
- (4) Admissions made by the parties for the purposes of the trial are freely admitted in civil cases, but not in criminal cases (see ante, p. 38); and even confessions are not admitted unless they are proved to be quite voluntary (see post, p. 188).

(5) Depositions of absent witnesses are more readily available in criminal than in civil cases (see post, p. 396). On the other hand, the evidence of witnesses abroad is more available in civil cases (Order 37, r. 5, see post, p. 515).

(6) In civil proceedings unstamped documents cannot be given in evidence. In criminal proceedings they can be (see Stamp Act, 1891, s. 14, post, p. 462).

(7) In trials for homicide, dying declarations are admitted (see post, p. 232). In civil cases they never are.

(8) Generally, the rules of evidence may, by consent of the parties or order of the Court, be relaxed in civil cases (see for instance, Order 30, r. 7, post, p. 509; Order 32, rr. 1, 2, 4, post, p. 511; Order 33, r. 3, post, p. 511; Order 37, rr. 1, 5, post, pp. 512, 513); but they cannot generally be so relaxed in criminal cases.

(9) In the event of improper admission or rejection of evidence, a judgment in a civil case cannot be set aside, and a new trial granted, unless the Court of Appeal is of opinion that "some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned" (Order 39, r. 6, post, p. 516). Not applicable to Habeas-tunc.

Formerly, it was held that a conviction in a criminal case, in such event, must be quashed, as it is the duty of the Judge to see that the prisoner is not convicted upon any but legal evidence. But it is now provided that the Court of Criminal Appeal may dismiss an appeal if they consider that "no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred" (Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 4 (1), post, p. 479).

(See generally hereon Best, §§ 94-99; Phipson, 10-11; Kenny, Criminal Law, Ch. xxvi; Harris, Criminal Law, 454.)

COGENCY AND WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Although, as we have seen, the law does not itself generally deal with cogency and weight of evidence, it may be useful to refer to certain matters the Court would naturally witnesses and the reliance to be placed upon them, the Court would obviously consider their (a) age, (b) apparent intelligence, (c) opportunities of observation, (d) memory, (e) interest or bias, (f) manner of answering questions, (g) confidence or nervousness, and such like matters. As regards the nature of the evidence, something may depend upon whether it is direct or circumstantial (see ante, p. 64); or upon whether it is oral, documentary or real (see post, p. 255). Moreover, certain evidence, although legally admissible, may be practically worthless (see post, pp. 151, 208), even to such an extent that the Judge might properly tell the jury to disregard it altogether, as the uncorroborated evidence of accomplices (see post, p. 149), or admissions by prisoners (see post, p. 179).

In some cases the sufficiency of evidence is dealt with by Statute; mainly in three ways, viz., by providing that:—

(a) certain matters may be proved by specified or pre-appointed evidence.

(b) certain matters may not be proved without corroborative evidence.

(c) certain matters may not be proved without written evidence.

It is proposed to consider these matters shortly. Further particulars can be ascertained by reference to the various provisions quoted.

PRE-APPOINTED EVIDENCE.

With regard to the first class of such provisions, there is some confusion and uncertainty. There would seem to be only two positions to be provided for; those in which certain matters are to be primâ facie evidence, and those in which they are to be conclusive evidence. But no fewer than six different expressions are used in this connection in various Statutes, and the matter is further complicated by the addition of such words as "unless he proves," "unless he can show," etc., in some cases, while they are absent in other cases. Thus, by the various sections of Statutes mentioned after the several expressions following, certain matters are:—

"Evidence."—Industrial Societies Act, 1893, s. 75; Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, ss. 64 (2), 239, 240, 691 (3), 695 (2), 719 (see post, p. 464); Friendly Societies Act, 1896, s. 100; Companies Act, 1908, ss. 71 (2), 111 (see post, p. 492); Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 137 (1), 138 (1), 139, 141 (see post, p. 500).

"Primâ facie Evidence."—Partnership Act, 1890, s. 2 (3) (see post, p. 461); Coinage Act, 1891, s. 1 (3); Industrial Societies Act, 1893, s. 34; Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, s. 24 (see post, p. 476); Children Act, 1908, ss. 12 (7), 124 (see post, p. 487); Companies Act, 1908, ss. 23, 33, 220 (see post, p. 492).

"Sufficient Evidence."—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, s. 21; Companies Act, 1908, s. 17 (2).

"Conclusive Evidence."—Companies Act, 1908, ss. 17 (1), 168 (1), 236 (2) (see post, p. 492); Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 137 (2), 143, 144 (2) (see post, p. 500).

"Presumed."—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, s. 23 (3) (see post, p. 476); Children Act, 1908, ss. 14 (2), 38 (2), 123 (2) (see post, p. 487).

"Deemed."—Money-Lenders Act, 1900, s. 5; Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, s. 17 (see post, p. 475); Children Act, 1908, ss. 12 (1), 13, 120 (3), 123 (1), (see post, p. 487); Companies Act, 1908, ss. 71 (3), 236 (1) (see post, p. 492); Official Secrets Act, 1911, s. 1 (2) (see post, p. 496); Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, s. 5 (2), (3); Bankruptcy Act, 1914, ss. 138 (2), 144 (1) (see post, p. 501).

Some of the above provisions might properly be put under the heads of "Relevancy," "Presumptions" and "Burden of Proof," but they all appear to affect the question of quantity of Proof, and it is convenient to consider them under a single head. The provisions themselves are mostly set out at the pages given above.

CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE.

With regard to the second class of statutory provisions respecting the quantity of proof required; those requiring corroboration, the result can be clearly and definitely stated. The general rule is that the Court can act upon the uncorroborated evidence of a single witness if satisfied with such evidence, and there appears to have been only one case in which the Judges themselves, without statutory provision, required corroboration, that is in prosecutions for perjury, for the obvious reason stated in 1716 by Holt, C.J., in the case of R. v. Muscot, 10 Mod. 192, where he said that the evidence for the prosecution must be "more numerous than the evidence given for the defendant; for else there is only oath against oath." This rule is now made statutory by the Perjury Act, 1911, s. 13 (see post, p. 495), the result being that corroboration is now legally required only by Statute, as follows.

Corroboration is required by Statute, as a matter of law, in the following cases:—

- (1) Offences under the Act of Supremacy, 1558 (see post, p. 409).
- (2) High Treason, by the Treason Acts, 1695. (see post, p. 412), and 1795 (see post, p. 412).
- (3) Offences under the Blasphemy Act, 1697 (see post, p. 412).

(4) Personation, at Elections, by the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843 (see post, p. 417).

(5) Affiliation, by the Bastardy Acts, 1845 (see post, p. 419) and 1872 (see post, p. 448).

(6) Breach of Promise of Marriage, by the Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (see post, p. 445).

(7) Removal of Paupers, by the Divided Parishes Act, 1876 (see post, p. 449).

(8) Offences under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (see post, p. 457).

(9) Exceeding the speed limit under the Motor Car Act, 1903 (see post, p. 475).

(10) Perjury and subornation of Perjury, by the Perjury Act, 1911 (see post, p. 495).

(11) Generally, in all offences, the unsworn evidence of a child of tender years, given on behalf of the prosecution, must be corroborated; by the Children Act, 1908, s. 30, and the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 28 (2) (see post, p. 499).

It should be observed that in the first four cases two witnesses are expressly required. In the other seven cases corroboration only is required, which may be not only by a second witness, but in any other manner, as by conduct or admission (Bessela v. Stern, post, p. 163), or circumstances. The kind of corroboration must depend upon the nature of the particular charge (R. v. Winkel, 76 J. P. 191). Sir J. Stephen draws the distinction between "corroboration" and "number of witnesses," but puts the case of perjury under the latter head, although showing, by the language used, that it is out of place there (Dig. Ev., Arts. 121, 122).

In the eleven cases already mentioned corroboration is a matter of law; the charge or position in question in such cases cannot be legally established without it. But there are a few cases in which it has become the practice of the Courts, as a matter of precaution or prudence, to require corroboration. Thus—

Corroboration is required by practice, as a matter of precaution, in the following cases:—

(1) In criminal cases, as regards the evidence of an accomplice on behalf of the prosecution (see post, p. 149).

(2) In civil cases, where a claim is made against the estate of a deceased person (see post, p. 151).

(3) In divorce cases, on behalf of the petitioner (see post, p. 153).

WRITTEN EVIDENCE.

The Law not only, in many cases, requires certain transactions to be actually in writing, or created by writing; it also requires, by various Statutes, written evidence of certain transactions, which may actually be created verbally, and may legally exist prior to and independently of any writing (see, e.g., Marine Insurance Act, 1906, s. 21, post, p. 477), although writing may be required to render them actionable. Transactions, such as assignments, requiring writing for their creation or existence appear to be quite outside the Law of Evidence.

Written evidence is required by the following Statutes (inter alia) for the matters specified in the particular sections referred to:—

- (1) Statute of Frauds, 1677, ss. 4, 7, 9 (see post, p. 411).
- (2) Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828, ss. 1, 6 (post, p. 415).
- (3) Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 4 (see post, p. 463).
- (4) Marine Insurance Act, 1906, s. 22 (see post, p. 477).

R. v. BASKERVILLE.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1885.

L. R. [1916] 2 K. B. 658; 86 L. J. K. B. 28; 115
L. T. 453; 60 S. J. 696.

It is a rule of practice, though not of strict law, that a person should not be convicted on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. The Judge ought, therefore, to advise the jury not to convict on such evidence, although the jury may legally convict in spite of such advice.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD READING, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court). There is no doubt that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law But it has long been a rule of practice at common law for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, and, in the discretion of the Judge, to advise them not to convict upon such evidence; but the Judge should point out to the jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence. . . . This rule of practice has become virtually equivalent to a rule of law, and since the Court of Criminal Appeal Act came into operation this Court has held that, in the absence of such a warning by the Judge, the conviction must be quashed (R. v. Tate, [1908] 2 K. B. 680). If after the proper caution by the Judge the jury nevertheless convict the prisoner, this Court will not quash the conviction merely upon the ground that the accomplice's testimony was uncorroborated. . . . In considering whether or not the conviction should stand, this Court will review all the facts of the case, and will bear in mind that the jury had the opportunity of seeing and hearing the witnesses when giving their testimony. But this Court, in the exercise of its powers, will quash a conviction even when the Judge has given to the jury the warning or advice above mentioned if this Court, after considering all the circumstances of the case, thinks the verdict unreasonable, or that it cannot be supported, having regard to the evidence (Court of Criminal Appeal Act, 1917, s. 4, sub-s. 1). This jurisdiction gives larger powers to interfere with verdicts than had heretofore existed in criminal cases. In addition to the rule of practice above mentioned, there are, with regard to certain offences, statutory provisions that no person shall be convicted upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular implicating the accused, e.g., the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, ss. 2—3. In these cases, the law is that the Judge, in the absence of such corroborative evidence, must stop the case at the close of the prosecution and direct the jury to acquit the accused. Where no such statutory provision is applicable to the offence charged, and the evidence for the prosecution consists of the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the law is that the Judge should leave the case to the jury after giving them the caution already mentioned. . . . As to the nature and extent of the corroboration required . . . we have come to the conclusion that the better opinion of the law upon this point is that stated in R. v. Stubbs, Dears. C. C. 555, by Parke, B., namely, that the evidence of an accomplice must be confirmed not only as to the circumstances of the crime, but also as to the identity of the prisoner. The learned Baron does not mean that there must be confirmation of all the circumstances of the crime, that is unnecessary. It is sufficient if there is confirmation as to a material circumstance of the crime and of the identity of the prisoner. . . . The test applicable to determine the nature and extent of the corroboration is thus the same whether the case falls within the rule of practice at common law or within that class of offences for which corroboration is required by statute. . . . The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. . . . The question was discussed on the hearing of this appeal whether the evidence of an accomplice against two prisoners, corroborated as to one prisoner's participation in the crime, but not as to the other, can be regarded as corroboration with regard to both prisoners. We think the law is correctly stated by Alderson, B., in R. v. Jenkins, 1 Cox, C. C. 177. The learned Baron said: "Where there is one witness of bad character giving evidence against both prisoners, a confirmation of his testimony with regard to one, is no confirmation of his testimony as to the other."

Note.—The distinction between corroboration required strictly by law, and that required as a matter of practice or prudence merely, should be specially noted. A conviction on uncorroborated evidence would, in the former case, be illegal, in the latter case, it is perfectly legal, although improper. Sir James Stephen's arrangement (Dig. Ev., Art. 121), where the case of an accomplice is put with the cases where corroboration must be had, and is separated from the case of claims against estates of deceased persons, which stand on the same footing as the case of an accomplice (see next case), is misleading.

"Accomplices" are all those jointly concerned in a crime, either as principal or accessories.

"Corroboration by another accomplice, or even by several accomplices, does not suffice." [Testimony by the wife of an accomplice requires corroboration, if the latter has himself given evidence; otherwise not (R. v. Willis, [1916] 1 K. B. 933).]

In re HODGSON.

BECKETT v. RAMSDALE.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1885.

L. R. 31 C. D. 177; 55 L. J. CH. 241; 54 L. T. 222;
34 W. R. 127.

A claim against the estate of a deceased person will not generally be allowed on the uncorroborated evidence of the claimant, although there is no rule of law against allowing it.

In an administration action, the evidence of a member of the plaintiff firm was held admissible without corroboration. But it was also considered that there actually was some corroboration.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

SIR J. HANNEN. . . . It is said on behalf of the defendants that the evidence is not to be accepted by the Court because there is no corroboration of it, and that in the case of a conflict of evidence between living and dead persons there must be corroboration to establish a claim advanced by a living person against the estate of a dead person. We are of opinion that there is no rule of English law laying down such a proposition. The statement of a living man is not to be disbelieved because there is no corroboration, but we must take into account the necessary absence through death of one of the parties to the transaction, and in considering the statement of the survivor it is natural to look for corroboration in support of it; but if the evidence given by the living man does bring conviction to the tribunal which has to try the question, then there is no rule of law which prevents that being acted upon. . . .

BOWEN and FRY, L.JJ., concurred.

Note.—"There is in England no rule of law precluding a claimant from recovering against the estate of a deceased person on his own testimony without corroboration; but the Court will always regard such evidence with jealous suspicion, and, it is said, will in general receive such corroboration, and in Ireland it has been said that there is a positive rule of law admitting of no exception, that a claim upon the assets of a deceased person cannot be allowed on the uncorroborated evidence of the claimant. In Scotland, the general rule is that the testimony of one witness is not full proof of any ground of action or defence whatever" (Best, 12th ed., § 621).

DIVORCE CASES.

CURTIS v. CURTIS.

DIVORCE. 1905.

21 T. L. R. 676.

The Divorce Court will not generally act upon the uncorroborated evidence of a petitioner. But it is only a rule of practice to require corroboration; there is no rule of law which prohibits the Court from acting on uncorroborated evidence if it is satisfied that the story told is true and that there is no collusion.

A wife petitioned for divorce, on account of cruelty, desertion and adultery. There was conflicting evidence, and the respondent denied or explained the facts adduced by the petitioner as corroboration of her evidence. The Judge was satisfied on the evidence and granted a decree.

BARGRAVE DEANE, J., said . . . As a general rule the Court would not act upon the uncorroborated evidence of a petitioner, but there was no rule which prohibited it from so acting if, on consideration of the whole of the materials before it, the Court was satisfied that the story put forward was a true one. . . . He did not believe the respondent's evidence, while he did believe that of the petitioner. . . .

[Note.—A similar rule obtains in undefended cases: see e.g., Riches v. Riches, 35 T. L. R. 141.]

THE NATURE OF EVIDENCE REQUIRED.

DIRECT TESTIMONY.

A rule known as the "Best evidence rule" appears to have been formerly of very wide application. It is understood to have excluded circumstantial evidence if direct evidence were available; proof of handwriting by other witnesses if the writer himself were available; proof of a person's consent by other witnesses if he were available, and other like evidence.

It still excludes secondary evidence of documents if the originals are available (see post, p. 326), but this seems to be the only surviving application of the rule. The rule against "hearsay" evidence, is also sometimes placed under the Best evidence rule. This seems scarcely correct. The rule against hearsay is that such evidence is not legal evidence at all, not that it is, as in the other cases mentioned, legal evidence postponed to or excluded by other, or the "best" evidence.

The rule respecting hearsay is clear and definite. It is, except in a few clearly defined cases, inadmissible, and direct testimony is generally the only permissible evidence. The witness must have perceived the fact of which he speaks with one of his five senses; he must say in effect that he saw, heard, felt, smelt or tasted, that of which he speaks—not that he heard of its existence from another person.

For good general discussions of the "Best evidence rule," see Best, §§ 87—92; Phipson, 45—48; Taylor, §§ 391—427; Thayer, Pr. Tr. Ev., 484—507.

STOBART v. DRYDEN.

EXCHEQUER. 1836.

5 L. J. Ex. 218; 1 M. & W. 615; 2 GALE, 146; 1
TYR. & GR. 899; 46 R. R. 424.

Facts must, in general, be proved by the testimony of witnesses who actually perceived them, and not by the reported statements of unsworn persons.

The plaintiff sued the defendant on a mortgage deed. The defendant pleaded that the deed had been fraudulently altered by one of the attesting witnesses, who had since died. In support of this plea, the defendant called a witness to prove statements and letters made and written by the deceased attesting witness, tending to show that he had fraudulently altered the deed. It was held that the evidence was inadmissible.

The following is from Meeson and Welsby:—

PARKE, B. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD ABINGER, C.B., PARKE, BOLLAND and GURNEY, BB.) . . . The general rule is, that hearsay evidence is not admissible as proof of a fact which has been stated by a third person. This rule has been long established as a fundamental principle of the law of evidence; but certain exceptions have also been recognised, some from very early times, upon the ground of necessity or convenience. The simple question for us to decide is, whether such a declaration as this be one of the allowed exceptions to the general rule. . . . Is evidence of what the subscribing witness has said admissible?

It was contended on the argument that it was, and that it formed an exception to the general rule, and on two grounds; one of them, which I shall mention first, in order to dispose of it, was that, as the plaintiff used the declaration of the subscribing witness, evidenced by his signature, to prove the execution, the defendant might use any declaration of the same witness to disprove it. The answer to this argument is, that evidence of the handwriting in the attestation is not used as a declaration by the witness, but to show the fact that he put his name in that place and manner, in which in the ordinary course of business he would have done, if he had actually seen the deed executed. A statement of the attesting witness by parol, or written on any other document than that offered to be proved, would be inadmissible. The proof of actual attestation of the witness is, therefore, not the proof of a declaration, but of a fact.

The other ground, and the principal one, on which the most reliance was placed was, that it was in the nature of a substitute for the loss of the benefit of the cross-examination of the subscribing witness, if he had been alive and personally examined; by which, either the fact confessed would have been proved; or, if not, the witness would have been liable to be contradicted by proof of his admission: and it was contended that every declaration was admissible which might have been given in evidence to impeach the credit of the witness himself on his personal examination.

Let us inquire what the authorities are in support of this exception. If we should find them numerous, and of long standing, we should be bound to give effect to them, though we might doubt the policy of introducing such a departure from the established rule: if we find them few, and of comparatively recent origin, and not supported by the deliberate judgment of any Court, we ought not to sanction the introduction of such an exception, especially if its convenience and practical utility be of a doubtful nature. . . .

(His Lordship here considered the authorities.)

Such is the state of the authorities, which are very limited indeed in point of number . . . it is impossible to say that there is any such weight or authority, however great our respect for the eminent Judges whose names have been mentioned, as to induce us to hold that this case is established and recognised as an exception from the great principle of our law of evidence, that facts, the truth of which depends on parol evidence, are to be proved by testimony on oath.

If we had to determine the question of the propriety of admitting the proposed evidence, on the ground of convenience, apart from the consideration of the expediency of abiding by general rules, we should say that it was at the least very doubtful, whether, generally speaking, it would not cause greater mischief than advantage in the investigation of truth. An extreme case might occur, as there seems to have done before Mr. Justice Heath, where the exclusion of evidence of a death-bed declaration would probably have been the exclusion of one mode of discovering the truth. The same may, perhaps, be said of all solemn assertions in extremis by deceased witnesses. But, on the other hand, if any declarations at any time from the mouth of subscribing witnesses who are dead are to be admitted in evidence (and you cannot stop short of that, for no one contends that the exception is to be confined to death-bed declarations, and if so confined, the evidence would be inadmissible in the present case), the result would be that the security of solemn instruments would be much impaired. The rights of parties under wills and deeds would be liable to be affected at remote periods by loose declarations of attesting witnesses, which those parties would have no opportunity of contradicting, or explaining by the evidence of the witnesses themselves. The party impeaching the validity of the instrument would, it is true, have an equivalent for the loss of his power of cross-examination of the living witness; but the party supporting it would have none for the loss of his power of re-examination. We cannot help feeling, therefore, that it is at least very doubtful whether the establishment of such an exception would be productive of any advantage: and when the great benefit to the administration of justice, of abiding by general rules and acting upon general principles, is taken into consideration, we feel no doubt but that it would be inexpedient to sanction this additional exception to the established rule of evidence.

Note.—The only case in which evidence may be given of a statement made by a dying person is on a trial for homicide (see post, p. 232). [This is not quite correct. Other cases may occur under the res gesta rule, or in statements by testators, or in depositions under the Cr. L. Amdt. Act, 1867, s. 6, post, p. 442.]

R. v. INHABITANTS OF ERISWELL.

KING'S BENCH. 1790.

3 T. R. (D. & E.) 707.

Subject to the exceptions enumerated post, pp. 160, 161, hearsay evidence is not admissible even though it be shown that the statement in question was made on oath and at a former trial, The evidence must be given under oath administered at the trial.

Two justices of the peace took the evidence of a pauper as to his place of legal settlement, but made no order for his removal. About five years later, other justices made an order for his removal solely upon such evidence. The Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed such order. The Court of King's Bench, on appeal, was equally divided on the question, so the order stood. But the judgments against the admissibility of the evidence are generally approved as correct.

GROSE, J. . . . Is such evidence competent? Is it what is commonly called hearsay evidence of a fact. Now it is a general rule that such evidence is not admissible, except in some few particular cases where the exception (for aught we know) is as ancient as the rule. . . . No principle was stated to take this out of the general rule, to show why hearsay evidence of the agreement should be permitted in this case any more than any other. But cases have been cited both to prove that this evidence was admissible as hearsay evidence, and as given upon oath before the magistrates. . . . An idea has prevailed that such hearsay evidence is sufficient; but I can make no difference between evidence necessary to prove an hiring, that is, an agreement to hire, and any other agreement; the law of evidence must be the same at the Quarter Sessions as in the Courts of Westminster Hall; and no one ever conceived that an agreement could be proved by a witness swearing that he heard another say that such an agreement was made.

Is the evidence better upon the ground that it was upon oath administered by two justices? Evidence, though upon oath, to affect an absent person, is incompetent, because he cannot cross-examine; as nothing can be more unjust than that a person should be bound by evidence which he is not permitted to hear.

But it may be said that it is in this case wise and discreet to depart from the general rule of evidence, and in this instance to admit hearsay evidence of a fact, or evidence on oath administered in the absence of the adverse party. I dread that rules of evidence shall ever depend upon the discretion of Judges; I wish to find the rule laid down, and to abide by it. In this case I find the general rule; I find no decided authority that forms an exception to it; and nothing but a clear uncontrovertible decision upon the point; and not the concession of counsel or the obiter dictum of a Judge, ought to form an exception to a general rule of law framed in wisdom by our ancestors, and adopted in every case except where the exception is as ancient as the rule. . . .

LORD KENYON, C.J. . . . The evidence should be given under the sanction of an oath legally administered and in a judicial proceeding depending between the parties affected by it, or those who stand in privity of estate or interest with them. . . . Examinations upon oath, except in the excepted cases, are of no avail unless they are made in a cause or proceeding depending between the parties to be affected by them, and where each has an opportunity of cross-examining the witness; otherwise it is res inter alios acta, and not to be received. . . .

BULLER and ASHHURST, JJ., dissented.

Note.—The two judgments from which extracts have been given are generally treated as correct expositions of the law. The two contrary judgments have been omitted as being generally discredited. In a later case (R. v. Ferry Frystone, 2 East, 54) (1801), Lord Kenyon said—"The point upon which the Court were divided in opinion, in the case of The King v. Eriswell, has been since considered to be so clear against the admissibility of the evidence . . . that it was abandoned by the counsel at the bar in the case of The King v. Nuneham Courtney, 1 East, 373, without argument."

It should be remembered that evidence may be taken out of Court by special order, before a commissioner or examiner (see post, p. 396).

HEARSAY EVIDENCE. WHEN ADMISSIBLE.

It will be observed that in the two last cases given, reference was made to certain exceptions from the rule that hearsay evidence is not admissible. The law has, indeed, from early times allowed several exceptions, practically in most cases on the ground of necessity, but it has invariably taken care that the exception shall be guarded by some security which makes the evidence really reliable. We shall therefore find, generally, there is (1) some special necessity for the admission of such evidence, and (2) some special guarantee of its credibility, to take the place of those incidental to direct evidence, viz., the oath and cross-examination.

Such special necessity for the admission of the hearsay evidence is particularly noticeable in the case of the several instances of admissible statements made by deceased persons, generally called "declarations," hereinafter noticed. If such statements were not admitted, frequently most material evidence, perhaps the only evidence on the subject, would be unavailable, the only persons who could give direct evidence being dead. But it will be noticed that in every case the law is careful to secure some guarantee of credibility, and generally the rules for the admission of such evidence are strictly construed.

The word "declaration" may suggest formality; but really the most informal statements, written or verbal, are generally admissible, where the circumstances are otherwise proper.

The instances of admissible hearsay may be stated as follows:—

- (1) Admissions. ✓
- (2) Confessions. ✓

- (3) Declarations in course of duty.
 - (4) Declarations against interest.
 - (5) Declarations as to pedigree.
 - (6) Declarations as to public and general rights.
 - (7) Declarations as to cause of death.
 - (8) Declarations as to contents of wills.
 - (9) Evidence given in former proceedings.
 - (10) Statements in public documents.
- Mr. Taylor gives another exception—
- (11) Statements in ancient documents.

Referring to documents thirty years old, he writes:—"as these furnish the only attainable evidence of ancient possession, the law, on the principle of necessity, allows them to be read . . . provided they are not mere narratives of past events, but that they purport to have formed a part of the act of ownership, exercise of right, or other transaction to which they relate" (Taylor, §§ 658—666). But he afterwards says,—“Though they are usually spoken of as hearsay evidence of ancient possession, and, as such, are said to be admitted in exception to the general rule; yet they seem rather to be parts of the res gestæ, and therefore admissible as original evidence” (ibid. § 667). It is certainly not usual now to treat them as hearsay.

(As to (8), supra, being treated as hearsay, see post, p. 242.)

It would appear that hearsay evidence may be rendered admissible by special order, on a summons for Directions. See Order 30, r. 7, post, p. 509.

ADMISSIONS.

Perhaps the most important instance of admissible hearsay is to be found in the case of "admissions," or statements made by either party to a suit against his interest, as tending either to the proof of his opponent's case or to the disproof of his own. At first sight admissions may not appear to be hearsay, but in reality, it is submitted, they are. For instance, a witness for the plaintiff, who may himself know nothing of the facts, proves that the defendant told him something which is against his case. This would appear to be clearly hearsay, although some writers do not treat it as such. Phipson, Stephen, and Wills treat admissions and confessions as hearsay; Taylor, Powell, and Best do not.

The admissions here referred to are what may be called informal admissions, as distinguished from express or formal admissions—those made for the purposes of the trial—dealt with ante, p. 38, where an attempt has been made to explain the difference. Informal admissions, unlike formal admissions, may occur in criminal as well as in civil cases. In criminal cases they are usually treated under the general head of “confessions” (see post, p. 188).

① Informal admissions may be made in various ways, e.g., by express statement, written or verbal, by implied statement, by conduct, by silence; in various kinds of documents, such as wills, deeds, receipts, negotiable instruments, account books of tradesmen and others, or on maps or plans. (See Doe v. Lakin, 7 C. & P. 481.)

Such admissions are admissible if made by—the parties themselves, whether real or nominal, their privies, persons jointly interested with the parties, their agents, referees, partners and others, according to circumstances. They may be made to any person, generally, even a stranger, who may afterwards be called as a witness; and, as regards time, if made by the party himself, at any time; if by any representative, during his right to represent or bind the party. A wife, unless acting as her husband's agent, clearly has no authority to bind him by admissions.

It should be observed that the above admissions are not conclusive, but only evidence, so that they can be explained or rebutted by other evidence.

MALTBY v. CHRISTIE.

NISI PRIUS. 1795.

1 ESP. 340.

Statements made by either party to a suit tending to prove his opponent's case or disprove his own are admissible in evidence as admissions. Admissions need not be in writing, or even in express words, or by way of express statement. They may be gathered from a narrative or descriptive words, or implied statement.

In an action brought against an auctioneer, to recover the proceeds of sale of goods belonging to one Durouveray, a bankrupt, the plaintiff (being the assignee of the bankrupt) put in evidence, as an admission of the bankruptcy by the defendant, the catalogue of sale issued by him in which he described the goods as "the property of Durouveray, a bankrupt."

LORD KENYON, C.J., held, that this superseded the necessity of going through the different steps, the defendant being thereby precluded from disputing the bankruptcy of Durouveray.

BESSELA v. STERN.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1877.

L. R. 2 C. P. D. 265; 46 L. J. C. P. 467; 37 L. T. 88;
25 W. R. 561.

Silence or conduct may amount to an admission, when it is natural to expect a reply or statement. (Similar to art. 67 of the Majalla)

In an action for breach of promise of marriage, it was proved that the plaintiff said to the defendant, "You always promised to marry me, and you don't keep your word," and the defendant made no answer (beyond saying he would give her money to go away); his silence on the point was held to be an admission.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . If that conversation took place, no doubt it is not conclusive; for a man might think it not worth while to contradict the assertion of the promise and raise a dispute. On the other hand, it might be said he made no reply to the accusation, because he could not with truth deny it. . . .

BRAMWELL, L.J. . . . If in such a case it would not have been natural to deny it, it is no evidence of an admission that he does not. But, if a denial is what one would naturally expect, it is strong evidence of an admission and must be considered as corroboration of the claim set up.

BRETT, L.J. . . . The question is, would it have been natural at the time when the woman made the statement, that the man should have contradicted it? If so, the jury had a right to consider his not denying it evidence of the truth of what she said. . . .

Note.—The above case should be compared with the next case. See note thereto. It will be remembered that breach of promise of marriage is one of the cases in which corroboration is required (see ante, p. 147). The defendant's admission in the above case was held to be corroboration of the plaintiff's evidence.

WIEDEMANN v. WALPOLE.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1891.

L. R. [1891] 2 Q. B. 534; 60 L. J. Q. B. 762; 40 W. R. 114.

When the circumstances are such that a reply cannot naturally or reasonably be expected, the party's silence in face of a charge or assertion will not amount to an admission.

In an action for breach of promise of marriage, the fact that the defendant had not answered a letter written to him by the plaintiff, calling upon him to perform his promise of marriage, was held not to be any admission by him.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD Esher, M.R. . . . The letter could only be put in as some evidence of an admission of the truth of the statements contained in it. . . . There are no doubt mercantile and business cases in which it is the ordinary course of mankind to answer a letter written upon a matter of business, and, if the letter were not answered, the Court would take notice of the ordinary course adopted by men of business—namely, to answer a letter where it is not intended to admit the truth of the statements contained in it; and if it were not answered, would take it as some evidence of the truth of the statements in it. But that is not like the case of a letter charging a man with some offence or impropriety. It could not be said that a man must answer such a letter at once, and that if he did not do so it must be taken as an admission that the statements are true. Life would not be bearable if a man had to answer such letters, and if it were to be taken as an admission of guilt if he did not do so. It is the ordinary and wise practice of mankind not to answer such a letter, because, if a man answered it, a correspondence would be entered into, and he would be lost. I have no doubt that the mere fact of not answering a letter containing a statement of a promise to marry is not an admission. . . .

BOWEN, L.J. . . . It would be a monstrous thing if it were the law that the mere fact of a man not answering a letter charging him with some offence, or making some claim against him, would necessarily and in all circumstances be evidence of admission of the truth of the charge or statement contained in the letter. There must be some limit placed upon such a proposition to make it consonant with common sense. I think the limit to be placed upon it is, that silence upon the receipt of a letter cannot be taken as evidence of admission of the truth of its contents, unless there are some circumstances in the case which would render it probable that the person receiving the letter, who dissented from the statements, would answer it and deny them. . . .

KAY, L.J. . . . I decline to lay down any general rule. There are certain business letters, the not answering of which by the persons who received them has been taken to be an admission by those persons of the truth of the statements contained in them. In other cases, all the circumstances under which the letter was written and received must be looked at in order to determine whether the omission to reply to it does fairly amount to an admission. . . .

Note.—This case appears to have been much misunderstood; and it has been treated in some text-books as laying down the broad rule that the omission to answer a letter is no admission (see Best, § 401; Stephen, art. 121). But the case clearly does not lay down so broad a rule. It is plain from the judgments that the whole question depends upon whether it was natural to expect a reply or not. If it were, silence is an admission; if it were not, silence is no admission (see Phipson, 6th ed. 257—8). In the above case, the Court held it was not natural, under the circumstances, to expect a reply, therefore the silence was no admission. But the Judges all admitted that there might be cases in which silence to a letter would be an admission. The Master of the Rolls appears to have taken a very low view of human nature, when he suggests that a man would more naturally reply to a business letter than repudiate a charge of some offence or impropriety. It is suggested that a man of high character would act otherwise, and the man whose life would “not be bearable” if he had to answer such letters would be one for whom the Court should have no sympathy; as only a man who had by his conduct provoked such letters would be likely to receive enough to render his life unbearable. No man who leads a decent life is likely to be troubled with many letters accusing him of offences or impropriety.

MORIARTY v. L. C. & D. RY. CO.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1870.

L. R. 5 Q. B. 314; 39 L. J. Q. B. 109; 22 L. T. 163;
18 W. R. 625.

An admission may be by conduct only; and it may relate not only to specific facts, but even show that the party's whole case is bad.

Thus, where the plaintiff sued a Railway Company for personal injury, evidence was given that he had gone about suborning false witnesses who had not been present at the accident, and it was held that such conduct amounted to an admission that he had no case.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . Here, if you can show that a man has been suborning false testimony, and has endeavoured to have recourse to perjury, it is strong to show that he knew perfectly well that his cause of action was an unrighteous one. . . .

BLACKBURN, J. . . . The jury should be cautioned against giving the evidence too much weight, which they might possibly do, and directed that they were not to punish a man for giving false testimony by taking away his right of action, but only to see whether it shook their belief in his evidence. . . .

LUSH, J. . . . This species of evidence is receivable as an admission by the party that the case he is putting forward is not the true one. It was an admission by conduct, and receivable on that ground. . . .

R. v. NORTON.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1910.

L. R. [1910] 2 K. B. 496; 79 L. J. K. B. 756; 102
L. T. 926; 74 J. P. 375; 26 T. L. R. 550.

Admissions made by a prisoner may be proved against him on a criminal charge. Such admissions may be made by his answer to, or words used in reply to, an accusation or statement made in his presence, or by his silence, conduct or demeanour when such statement is made, according to the circumstances.

But statements made in his presence are not, in themselves, evidence of the facts stated. They are admissible only as introductory to, or explanatory of, the accompanying words, conduct or demeanour of the prisoner at the time.

Such conduct or demeanour may render such statement admissible even if the prisoner, in words, denies its truth.

On a charge of an offence against a girl under thirteen, the evidence in question was to the effect that, on being asked by the prisoner who had done the act, she said "You"; and, being asked by another person, she said "Stevie Norton," and pointed to the prisoner; that the prisoner said, "No, Madge, you are mistaken"; and then she said, "You have done it, Stephen Norton," and pointed to him again. According to one witness he then lifted his arms and said, "If I have done it I hope the Lord will strike me dead"; and according to another witness, "If you say so I might as well put my clothes on and go home." There was, therefore, nothing in his answers necessarily amounting to an admission of the girl's statements.

The evidence was admitted on the trial and the prisoner convicted. On appeal it was held that the evidence did not amount to an admission, and the conviction was quashed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

PICKFORD, J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., PICKFORD and LORD COLERIDGE, J.J.). . . . As a general rule, statements as to the facts of a case under investigation are not evidence unless made by witnesses in the ordinary way, but to this rule there are exceptions. One is that statements made in the presence of a prisoner upon an occasion on which he might reasonably be expected to make some observation, explanation, or denial are admissible under certain circumstances. We think it is not strictly accurate, and may be misleading, to say that they are admissible in evidence against the prisoner, as such an expression may seem to imply that they are evidence of the facts stated in them and must be considered upon the footing of other evidence. Such statements are, however, never evidence of the facts stated in them; they are admissible only as introductory to, or explanatory of, the answer given to them by the person in whose presence they are made. Such answer may, of course, be given either by words or by conduct, e.g., by remaining silent on an occasion which demanded an answer.

If the answer given amount to an admission of the statements or some part of them, they or that part become relevant as showing what facts are admitted; if the answer be not such an admission, the statements are irrelevant to the matter under consideration and should be disregarded. This seems to us to be correctly and shortly stated in Taylor on Evidence, s. 814, p. 574: "The statements only become evidence when by such acceptance he makes them his own statements."

No objection was taken in this case to the admission of the statements in evidence, but as the prisoner may be tried again on an indictment on which that question may arise, we think it well to state in what cases such statements can be given in evidence. We think that the contents of such statements should not be given in evidence unless the Judge is satisfied that there is evidence fit to be submitted to the jury that the prisoner by his answer to them, whether given by word or conduct, acknowledged the truth of the whole or part of them. If there be no such evidence, then the contents of the statement should be excluded; if there be such evidence, then they should be admitted, and the question whether the prisoner's answer, by words or conduct, did or did not in fact amount to an acknowledgment of them left to the jury.

In trials of prisoners on indictment, in which the most numerous and important of these cases arise, there is, as a rule, no difficulty in deciding whether there be such evidence or not, as the prisoner's answer appears upon the depositions, and the chance that the evidence with regard to it may be different on the trial is so small that it may be disregarded. When, however, the evidence of the prisoner's answer does not appear, there does not seem to be any practical difficulty in applying the rule above stated. The fact of a statement having been made in the prisoner's presence may be given in evidence, but not the contents, and the question asked, what the prisoner said or did on such a statement being made. If his answer, given either by words or conduct, be such as to be evidence from which an acknowledgment may be inferred, then the contents of the statement may be given and the question of admission or not in fact left to the jury; if it be not evidence from which such an acknowledgment may be inferred, then the contents of the statements should be excluded. To allow the contents of such statements to be given before it is ascertained that there is evidence of their being acknowledged to be true must be most prejudicial to the prisoner, as, whatever directions be given to the jury, it is almost impossible for them to dismiss such evidence entirely from their minds. It is perhaps too wide to say that in no case can the statements be given in evidence when they are denied by the prisoner, as it is possible that a denial may be given under such circumstances and in such a manner as to constitute evidence from which an acknowledgment may be inferred; but, as above stated, we think they should be rejected unless there is some evidence of an acknowledgment of the truth. Where they are admitted we think the following is the proper direction to be given to the jury:—That if they come to the conclusion that the prisoner had acknowledged the truth of the whole or any part of the facts stated they might take the statement, or so much of it as was acknowledged to be true (but no more), into consideration as evidence in the case generally, not because the statement standing alone afforded any evidence of the matter contained in it, but solely because of the prisoner's acknowledgment of its truth; but unless they found as a fact that there was such an acknowledgment they ought to disregard the statement altogether. . . .

R. v. CHRISTIE.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1914.

L. R. [1914] A. C. 545; 83 L. J. K. B. 1097;
111 L. T. 220; 30 T. L. R. 471; 10 CR. APP. R. 141.

A statement or accusation made to or in the presence of a prisoner may be evidence against him although he actually denied or repudiated it at the time, if by his conduct or demeanour he may be held to have admitted it or, apparently, if it be relevant otherwise to his conduct or demeanour at the time it was made, although it could not be held admitted, either by words, conduct or demeanour. But when a prisoner actually denies such statement or accusation, the Judge should, in the absence of special circumstances, intimate to the prosecution that such evidence, although legally admissible, has little value, and might prejudice the prisoner unfairly, and should, therefore, not be given against him.

Such evidence may be given in the first instance without proof of any words or acts of admission; it being left to the Judge to warn the jury to disregard it altogether if the subsequent evidence render it unreliable.

A statement made by a person, previous to the trial, cannot be taken as corroboration of the evidence he gives at the trial.

Christie was convicted of indecent assault on a small boy, who gave his evidence, without being sworn, under s. 30 of the Children Act, 1908 (see post, p. 489), describing the assault and identifying the prisoner, but he was not questioned as to previous identification, nor was he cross-examined. The boy's mother then gave evidence that, shortly after the act alleged, she and the boy went towards the prisoner, and the boy said "That is the man"; that a constable present made him go up to Christie and identify him, which he did; and that Christie said "I am innocent." She was not cross-examined. The constable was then called and confirmed the mother's story, saying that the boy went up to Christie, touched him, and said "That is the man," describing the assault, and that Christie said "I am innocent." He was cross-examined, but his evidence on this point was not affected.

The Court of Criminal Appeal held, on the authority of R. v. Norton (ante, p. 167) that the boy's statement in Christie's presence was improperly admitted, as he had denied its truth, and they quashed the conviction. The House of Lords held:

1. That the first statement by the boy, but not the second describing the assault, was admissible as part of the act of identification.

2. That the second was admissible, as made in his presence and in view of the accused's demeanour; but that, in general, where the evidence of a prisoner's assent to the truth of such statements is very slight, the Judge should exclude them.

3. That the second statement was not admissible either as part of the res gestæ, or to corroborate the boy's testimony.

The order quashing the conviction was affirmed on the ground of want of such corroboration.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

VISCOUNT HALDANE, L.C. My Lords, I have had the advantage of considering the opinions which three of your Lordships are about to express. . . . In the opinions about to be delivered by Lord Atkinson, Lord Moulton, and Lord Reading the true view of the law appears to me to be expressed. The only point on which I desire to guard myself is the admissibility of the statement in question as evidence of identification. For the boy gave evidence at the trial, and if his evidence was required for the identification of the prisoner that evidence ought, in my opinion, to have been his direct evidence in the witness-box and not evidence of what he said elsewhere. . . . Had the boy, after he had identified the accused in the dock, been asked if he had identified the accused in the field as the man who assaulted him, and answered affirmatively, then that fact might also have been proved by the policeman and the mother who saw the identification. Its relevancy to show that the boy was able to identify at the time and to exclude the idea that the identification of the prisoner in the dock was an afterthought or a mistake. But beyond the mere fact of such identification the examination ought not to have proceeded. subject to this observation I concur in the judgments about to be delivered.

LORD ATKINSON. . . . The Attorney-General contended that the entire statement of the boy was admissible on each of four separate grounds:—

- (1) As part of the act of identification, or as explanatory of it.
- (2) As a statement made in the presence of the prisoner in circumstances calling for some denial or explanation from him, the truth of which he admitted by his conduct and demeanour.
- (3) As proof of the consistency of the boy's conduct before he was examined with his testimony at the trial.
- (4) As part of the res gestæ.

Your Lordships intimated during the course of the argument that you would not consider this third point. It is, therefore, unnecessary to allude to it further.

Of course, it will suffice for the Attorney-General's purpose if the statement be admissible on any of these grounds. It is, I think, clear that the principle laid down in Reg. v. Lillyman (ante, p. 80), and in those cases which followed it, has no application to the present case. . . .

As to the first point, it cannot, I think, be open to doubt that if the boy had said nothing more, as he touched the sleeve of the coat of the accused, than "That is the man," the statement was so closely connected with the act which it accompanied, expressing, indeed, as it did, in words little if anything more than would have been implied by the gesture simpliciter, that it should have been admitted as part of the very act of identification itself. It is on the admissibility of the further statement made in answer to the question of the constable that the controversy arises. On the whole, I am of opinion, though not without some doubt, that this statement only amplifies what is implied by the words "That is the man," plus the act of touching him. . . .

I think that the entire statement was admissible on these grounds, even although the boy was not asked at the trial anything about the former identification. The boy had in his evidence at the trial distinctly identified the accused. If on another occasion he had in the presence of others identified him, then the evidence of these eye-witnesses is quite as truly primary evidence of what acts took place in their presence as would be the boy's evidence of what he did, and what expressions accompanied his act. . . .

As to the second ground, the rule of law undoubtedly is that a statement made in the presence of an accused person, even upon an occasion which would be expected reasonably to call for some explanation or denial from him, is not evidence against him of the facts stated save so far as he accepts the statement, so as to make it, in effect, his own. If he accepts the statement in part only, then to that extent alone does it become his statement. He may accept the statement by word or conduct, action or demeanour, and it is the function of the jury which tries the case to determine whether his words, action, conduct, or demeanour at the time when a statement was made amounts to an acceptance of it in whole or in part. It by no means follows, I think, that a mere denial by the accused of the facts mentioned in the statement necessarily renders the statement inadmissible, because he may deny the statement in such a manner and under such circumstances as may lead a jury to disbelieve him, and constitute evidence from which an acknowledgment may be inferred by them.

Of course, if at the end of the case the presiding Judge should be of opinion that no evidence has been given upon which the jury could reasonably find that the accused had accepted the statement so as to make it in whole or in part his own, the Judge can instruct the jury to disregard the statement entirely. It is said that, despite this direction, grave injustice might be done to the accused, inasmuch as the jury, having once heard the statement, could not, or would not, rid their mind of it. It is, therefore, in the application of the rule that the difficulty arises. The question then is this: Is it to be taken as a rule of law that such a statement is not to be admitted in evidence until a foundation has been laid for its admission by proof of facts from which, in the opinion of the presiding Judge, a jury might reasonably draw the inference that the accused had so accepted the statement as to make it in whole or in part his own, or is it to be laid down that the prosecutor is entitled to give the statement in evidence in the first instance, leaving it for the presiding Judge, in case no such evidence as the above-mentioned should be ultimately produced, to tell the jury to disregard the statement altogether?

In my view the former is not a rule of law, but it is, I think, a rule which, in the interest of justice, it might be most prudent and proper to follow as a rule of practice.

The course suggested by PICKFORD, J., in Rex v. Norton (ante, p. 167) where workable, would be quite unobjectionable in itself as a rule of practice, and equally effective for the protection of the accused. . . .

The boy's statement was so separated by time and circumstances from the actual commission of the crime that it was not, I think, admissible as part of the res gestæ.

(His Lordship here considered the cases, Thompson v. Trevanion (ante, p. 67), R. v. Bedingfield (ante, p. 68), R. v. Foster (ante, p. 69), etc.).

Even, however, if the boy's statement was admissible in evidence, if properly dealt with, I think the verdict should be quashed. The deputy chairman never properly explained to the jury that it is what the accused accepts as his own of the statement made in his presence that is evidence against him, not the statement itself. Again, he treated the evidence of the mother of the boy and the constable, as to what the boy said and did on the occasion of the identification, as corroboration of his testimony at the trial, within the meaning of the 30th section of the Children Act of 1908. This is, of course, wholly erroneous. If the boy himself had been examined, either in chief or on cross-examination, and had detailed what took place at the identification, this portion of his evidence could not be treated as corroboration of the other portion proving the charge. He could not be his own corroborator. It can make no possible difference when others tell what he did and said on that occasion. Their evidence is no more "material corroborative evidence in support of his evidence at the trial implicating the accused" than his would be. . . .

My Lords, I have been requested by my noble and learned friend LORD PARKER to express his concurrence in this judgment.

LORD MOULTON. . . . I have great difficulty in seeing how this evidence is admissible on the ground that it is part of the evidence of identification. To prove identification of the prisoner by a person, who is, I shall assume, an adult, it is necessary to call that person as a witness. Identification is an act of the mind, and the primary evidence of what was passing in the mind of a man is his own testimony, where it can be obtained. It would be very dangerous to allow evidence to be given of a man's words and actions, in order to show by this extrinsic evidence that he identified the prisoner, if he was capable of being called as a witness and was not called to prove by direct evidence that he had thus identified him. Such a mode of proving identification would, in my opinion, be to use secondary evidence where primary evidence was obtainable, and this is contrary to the spirit of the English rules of evidence.

There remains the second ground, namely, that it is evidence of a statement made in the presence of the accused, and of his behaviour on that occasion. Now, in a civil action evidence may always be given of any statement or communication made to the opposite party, provided it is relevant to the issues. The same is true of any act or behaviour of the party. The sole limitation is that the matter thus given in evidence must be relevant. I am of opinion that, as a strict matter of law, there is no difference in this respect between the rules of evidence in our civil and in our criminal procedure. But there is a great difference in the practice. The law is so much on its guard against the accused being prejudiced by evidence which, though admissible, would probably have a prejudicial influence on the minds of the jury which would be out of proportion to its true evidential value, that there has grown up a practice of a very salutary nature, under which the Judge intimates to the counsel for the prosecution that he should not press for the admission of evidence which would be open to this objection, and such an intimation from the tribunal trying the case is usually sufficient to prevent the evidence being pressed in all cases where the scruples of the tribunal in this respect are reasonable. Under the influence of this practice, which is based on an anxiety to secure for every one a fair trial, there has grown up a custom of not admitting certain kinds of evidence which is so constantly followed that it almost amounts to a rule of procedure. It is alleged on the part of the respondent that an instance of this is the case of the accused being charged with the crime and denying it, or not admitting it.

It is common ground that, if on such an occasion he admits it, evidence can be given of the admission and of what passed on the occasion when it was made. It seems quite illogical that it should be admissible to prove that the accused was charged with the crime if his answer thereto was an admission, while it is not admissible to prove it when his answer has been a denial of the crime, and I cannot agree that the admissibility or non-admissibility is decided as a matter of law by any such artificial rule. Going back to first principles as enunciated above, the deciding question is whether the evidence of the whole occurrence is relevant or not. If the prisoner admits the charge the evidence is obviously relevant. If he denies it, it may or may not be relevant. For instance, if he is charged with a violent assault and denies that he committed it, that fact might be distinctly relevant if at the trial his defence was that he did commit the act, but that it was in self-defence. The evidential value of the occurrence depends entirely on the behaviour of the prisoner, for the fact that some one makes a statement to him subsequently to the commission of the crime cannot in itself have any value as evidence for or against him. The only evidence for or against him is his behaviour in response to the charge, but I can see no justification for laying down as a rule of law that any particular form of response, whether of a positive or negative character, is such that it cannot in some circumstances have an evidential value. I am, therefore, of opinion that there is no rule of law that evidence cannot be given of the accused being charged with the offence and of his behaviour on hearing such charge where that behaviour amounts to a denial of his guilt. This is said to have been laid down as a rule of law in Rex v. Norton, and to have been followed by the Courts since that decision. If this be so, I think that the decision was wrong, but I am by no means convinced that it was intended in that case to lay down any such rule of law.

But while I am of opinion that there is no such rule of law, I am of opinion that the evidential value of the behaviour of the accused where he denies the charge is very small either for or against him, whereas the effect on the minds of the jury of his being publicly or repeatedly charged to his face with the crime might seriously prejudice the fairness of his trial. In my opinion, therefore, a Judge would in most cases be acting in accordance with the best traditions of our criminal procedure if he exercised the influence which he rightly possesses over the conduct of a prosecution in order to prevent such evidence being given in cases where it would have very little or no evidential value. Subject to these words of caution, I am of opinion that this appeal should be allowed upon this point, because we have to decide upon the admissibility as a matter of law, and so regarded I have no doubt that the evidence in question was rightly admitted.

I am, however, of opinion that the direction of the magistrate as to corroboration was wrong, and therefore, notwithstanding my opinion on the admissibility of the evidence, the conviction cannot stand. ✓

LORD READING. . . . As to the first ground. No objection was raised by Mr. Dickens, for the respondent, to the admission of the first part of the statement, namely, "That is the man." It implied that Christie was the man designated by the boy as the person who had committed the offence, and meant little, if anything, more than the act of touching the sleeve of Christie or pointing to him. The importance is as to the admission of the additional words, describing the various acts done by Christie. These were not necessary to complete the identification or to explain it. . . . At the trial, and before the statement was admitted, the boy identified Christie in Court, and was not cross-examined. The additional statement was not required by the prosecution for the purpose of proving the act of identification by the boy. The statement cannot, in my judgment, be admitted as evidence of the state of the boy's mind when in the act of identifying Christie, as that would amount to allowing another person to give in evidence the boy's state of mind, when he was not asked, and had not said anything about it in his statement to the Court.

If the prosecution required the evidence as part of the act of identification it should have been given by the boy before the prosecution closed their case. In my judgment it would be a dangerous extension of the law regulating the admissibility of evidence if your Lordships were to allow proof of statements made, narrating or describing the events constituting the offence, on the ground that they form part of or explain the act of identification, more particularly when such evidence is not necessary to prove the act, and is not given by the person who made the statement. I have found no case in which any such statement has been admitted.

As to the second ground. A statement made in the presence of one of the parties to a civil action may be given in evidence against him if it is relevant to any of the matters in issue. And equally such a statement made in the presence of the accused may be given in evidence against him at his trial.

The principles of the laws of evidence are the same whether applied at civil or criminal trials, but they are not enforced with the same rigidity against a person accused of a criminal offence as against a party to a civil action. There are exceptions to the law regulating the admissibility of evidence which apply only to criminal trials, and which have acquired their force by the constant and invariable practice of judges when presiding at criminal trials. They are rules of prudence and discretion, and have become so integral a part of the administration of the criminal law as almost to have acquired the full force of law. A familiar instance of such a practice is to be found in the direction of judges to juries strongly warning them not to act upon the evidence of an accomplice unless it is corroborated. . . .

Such practice has found its place in the administration of the criminal law because judges are aware from their experience that in order to ensure a fair trial for the accused, and to prevent the operation of indirect but not the less serious prejudice to his interests, it is desirable in certain circumstances to relax the strict application of the law of evidence. Nowadays, it is the constant practice for the Judge who presides at the trial to indicate his opinion to counsel for the prosecution that evidence which, although admissible in law, has little value in its direct bearing upon the case, and might indirectly operate seriously to the prejudice of the accused, should not be given against him, and speaking generally counsel accepts the suggestion and does not press for the admission of the evidence unless he has good reason for it.

That there is danger that the accused may be indirectly prejudiced by the admission of such a statement as in this case is manifest, for however carefully the Judge may direct the jury, it is often difficult for them to exclude it altogether from their minds as evidence of the facts contained in the statement.

In general, such evidence can have little or no value in its direct bearing on the case unless the accused, upon hearing the statement, by conduct and demeanour, or by the answer made by him, or in certain circumstances by the refraining from an answer, acknowledged the truth of the statement either in whole or in part, or did or said something from which the jury could infer such an acknowledgment, for if he acknowledged its truth, he accepted it as his own statement of the facts. If the accused denied the truth of the statement when it was made, and there was nothing in his conduct and demeanour from which the jury, notwithstanding his denial, could infer that he acknowledged its truth in whole or in part, the practice of the Judges has been to exclude it altogether. In Rex v. Norton, PICKFORD, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal, said (see ante, p. 169): "If there be no such evidence" (that is of acknowledgment by the accused), "then the contents of the statement should be excluded; if there be such evidence, then they should be admitted." If it was intended to lay down rules of law to be applied whenever such a statement is tendered for admission, I think the judgment goes too far; they are valuable rules for the guidance of those presiding at trials of criminal cases when considering how the discretion of the Court, with regard to the admission of such evidence, should be exercised, but it must not be assumed that the judgment in Rex v. Norton exhausts all the circumstances which may have to be taken into consideration by the Court when exercising its judicial discretion.

It might well be that the prosecution wished to give evidence of such a statement in order to prove the conduct and demeanour of the accused when hearing the statement as a relevant fact in the particular case, notwithstanding that it did not amount either to an acknowledgment or some evidence of an acknowledgment of any part of the truth of the statement. I think it impossible to lay down any general rule to be applied to all such cases, save the principle of strict law to which I have referred.

Upon the whole, therefore, I come to the conclusion that the rules formulated in *Rex v. Norton, and followed in this and other cases, must be restricted in their application as above indicated, and cannot be regarded as strict rules of law regulating the admissibility of such evidence.

I think, therefore, that this statement was in law admissible as evidence against Christie.

As to the fourth point. The statement under review formed no part of the incidents constituting the offence. It was not made whilst the offence was being committed or immediately thereafter. It took place after Christie had left the boy, and the mother had found him and taken him across the fields and had spoken to another man. In my view it was not so immediately connected with the act of assault as to form part of the res gestæ. . . .

Assuming that your Lordships were of opinion that the boy's statement was admissible, this conviction, for other reasons, could not stand, and was properly quashed. . . . By virtue of s. 30 of the Children Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 67), Christie could not be convicted unless the boy's testimony was "corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused." There was no sufficient direction, and there was misdirection to the jury of the requisites of corroboration under this statute. Such direction as was given by the deputy chairman was erroneous, inasmuch as it treated the statement by the boy, given in evidence by the mother and the constable, as corroboration of the boy's evidence implicating the accused. This is manifestly wrong. It was for the deputy chairman to satisfy himself that there was evidence of corroboration fit to be submitted to the jury within the meaning of the statute, and then to direct them not to convict unless they accepted the evidence of corroboration. . . . I have been requested by LORD DUNEDIN to say that he concurs in this judgment.

[Note.—This case came before the H. L. under s. 1 (6) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, on the certificate of the Attorney-General that an important point of law was involved. He remarked: "If the appeal is successful it is not proposed to take any steps to get the respondent punished, his conviction having been quashed by the Court of Appeal" (10 C. A. R. 141, 142). As to corroboration by prisoner's admission, see R. v. Hook, Dears. & B. 606.]

WILLIAMS v. INNES.

KING'S BENCH. 1808.

1 CAMPBELL, 364; 10 R. R. 702.

Admissions may be made by agents. If one party directs or requests another party to apply to any other person for information on a certain matter, such reference may constitute such other person an agent in such matter for such purpose.

In an action against executors, who pleaded that they had fully administered the estate, the plaintiff, in order to prove assets, put in a letter from the defendants, telling her that if she wanted further information concerning the affairs of the deceased she should apply to a Mr. Ross, and she proposed to give in evidence what he said on the matter. The evidence was held admissible.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. If a man refers another upon any particular business to a third person, he is bound by what this third person says or does concerning it, as much as if that had been said or done by himself. This was agreed to be law by all the Judges on the trial of Mr. Hastings.

Note.—This case is generally quoted as an authority for the proposition stated, but the judgment is very short and general in its terms. It must, doubtless, be taken as applying only to cases of real "particular business," not to every case of mere casual inquiry. In another case the same Judge said—"Wherever a party refers to the evidence of another, he is bound by it—and this is constantly good evidence" (Daniel v. Pitt, 1 Camp. 366).

KIRKSTALL BREWERY CO. v. FURNESS
RY. CO.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1874.

L. R. 9 Q. B. 468; 43 L. J. Q. B. 142; 30 L. T. 783;
22 W. R. 876.

Whatever an agent or servant does or says, within the scope of his authority, express or implied, in carrying out the business in which he is employed binds his principal.

An agent or servant may therefore bind his principal by admissions made within the scope of his authority or duty.

In an action against a railway company for loss of a parcel of money, statements made by the station-master to a police officer, tending to show theft thereof by one of the company's servants, were received as admissions against the company, the station-master being the proper agent to make such statements.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . I think it impossible to say that a man who has the sole management of a railway station, and had authority to cause a person to be apprehended if he had reasonable and probable cause to suppose that a felony had been committed, could not have authority to give instructions to the police, and could not make such communications as would be admissible in evidence just as if they were made by his principals.

QUAIN, J. . . . In putting the police in motion he was acting within his duty, and within the scope of the authority given to him. . . .

ARCHIBALD, J. . . . Being in charge of the station at the time a felony was committed, it was his duty to put the police in motion. That being so, I think that he was acting within the scope of his duty, that he had power to bind the company, and therefore that the evidence was admissible.

Note.—This appears to be scarcely a case of “course of employment,” but of “scope of authority.” The master may be responsible in tort for acts of his servant quite unauthorised by him, if done in the course of employment. But, in contract, and as regards admissions, the question appears to be one of authority. See post, p. 185.

G. W. RY. CO. v. WILLIS.

COMMON PLEAS. 1865.

34 L. J. C. P. 195; 12 L. T. 349; 18 C. B. (N.S.) 748.

Statements made by agents or servants are not necessarily admissions against the principal, although they would have been admissions if made by the principal himself. Such statements, in order to bind the principal, must have been within the scope of the agent's authority, and made at the time of the transaction in question.

In an action against a railway company for not delivering cattle promptly, the plaintiff gave evidence of a conversation a week after the transaction between himself and the company's night inspector, who had charge of the night cattle trains at a certain station, in the course of which the night inspector said the cattle had been forgotten. It was held that this statement was not an admission against the company, as the night inspector was a subordinate servant without authority to make such a statement, and also the statement was made some time after the transaction.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

ERLE, C.J. I am of opinion that this night inspector is not to be presumed to have been authorised by the company to make admissions on their behalf of things gone by. . . .

BYLES, KEATING and SMITH, JJ., concurred.

The following is from Common Bench Reports:—

ERLE, C.J. I am of opinion that this night inspector is not to be presumed to have had authority to make admissions relative to transactions gone by, so as to bind his employers. . . .

The following is from the Law Times:—

By the Court. There is no doubt that the night inspector had no authority to answer any inquiries. . . .

In re DEVALA PROVIDENT GOLD MINING CO.

CHANCERY. 1883.

L. R. 22 CH. D. 593; 52 L. J. CH. 434; 48 L. T. 259;
31 W. R. 425.

Summons by shareholder for removal of his name from the share register by reason of misrepresentation in the company's prospectus. The only evidence of the untruth of the representation was a statement made by the chairman in a speech to a meeting of the shareholders. It was claimed that the statement was material, that it was made by an agent of the company, and that the company themselves had put the report in evidence as a true report of what the chairman said. Held, that the statement was not admissible against the company.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

FRY, J. . . . The only ground upon which, in my view, this statement could possibly be admitted would be that the chairman was the agent of the company, and that he was making the statement in the course of a transaction with a third party in which he was acting as the agent of the company, and that it was within the scope of his agency. If that were so, the statement would be admissible against the company. It appears to me, however, that it was not admissible, for it was made by the agent, not in a transaction between the company and a third party, but at a meeting of the company. It is the case of an agent making a report to his own principal, and in my view when an agent is making a confidential report to his principal, the report is not admissible evidence against a third party. It is said that the applicant was not a third party, but was a member of the company, and in that view the chairman was making the report to him as one of his principals. It does not appear to me that there is either principle or authority which justifies the use of a statement made by the common agent of two principals as evidence on behalf of one of the principals against the other. ✓

PETO v. HAGUE.

NISI PRIUS. 1804.

5 ESP. 134.

Statements made by an agent about past transactions will not bind the principal as admissions. When the agent's authority to act in the particular matter has ceased, the principal cannot be affected by his subsequent statements.

The defendant was a coal-merchant who was sued for a penalty for selling short measure. A witness was proceeding to state what was said to him by one Peely, the defendant's manager, as to a sale about to take place. This was objected to, but was held admissible.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., ruled that it was evidence; he said that Peely appeared to be the manager and conductor of the defendant's business; what he might have said respecting a former sale made by the defendant, or on another occasion, would not be evidence to affect his master; but what he said respecting a sale of coals, then about to take place, and respecting the disposition of the coals then lying at the wharf, which were the object of sale, was in the course of witness's employment for the defendant, and was evidence to affect his master.

Note.—The Judge here uses the expression "course of employment," but it would appear that statements outside the scope of authority of an agent would not bind the principal although made in course of employment. But, to be within scope of authority, the statement must, apparently, be made in course of employment. See note, ante, p. 183.

WOOLWAY v. ROWE.

KING'S BENCH. 1834.

1 A. & E. 114; 3 L. J. K. B. 121; 3 N. & M. 849;
40 R. R. 264.

Admissions made by predecessors in title, or other persons in privity with a party, may be given in evidence against such party.

The statement of the plaintiff's father, the former owner of the plaintiff's land, that he had not the right claimed by the plaintiff in respect of it, was held admissible; although the father was living and in court at the time.

The following is from Adolphus and Ellis:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD DENMAN, C.J., LITLEDALE, PARKE and PATTESON, JJ.). The first question raised in this case was, whether the declarations of a person formerly interested in the estate now the plaintiff's were admissible in evidence, when the party himself might have been called. We think they were receivable, on the ground of identity of interest. The fact of his being alive at the time of the trial, when perhaps his memory of facts was impaired, and when his interest was not the same, does not, in our opinion, affect the admissibility of those declarations which he formerly made on the subject of his own rights. . . .

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. (as above). . . . We are of opinion that these declarations are admissible against the plaintiff, on the principle of identity of interest between the plaintiff and the party making the declarations. . . .

Note.—As to "privies," see ante, p. 45.

R. v. SIMONS.

OXFORD CIRCUIT. 1834.

6 C. & P. 540.

A statement made by a party to the proceedings to any person, even to his wife or himself, may be proved as an admission against him.

On a charge of arson it was proposed to call a witness to prove what the prisoner said to his wife on leaving the magistrates' room after committal.

ALDERSON, B. What a person is overheard saying to his wife, or even saying to himself, is evidence.

SLATTERIE v. POOLEY.

EXCHEQUER. 1840.

6 M. & W. 664; 10 L. J. Ex. 8; 4 JUR. 1038; 1
HURL. & WALM. 18; 55 R. R. 760.

Admissions are considered primary evidence against a party, and they are admissible to prove even the contents of written documents, without notice to produce, or accounting for the absence of, the originals.

The plaintiff sued upon a deed by which the defendant covenanted to indemnify him against all debts set out in a certain deed and schedule which itself was inadmissible as not being duly stamped. A verbal admission of the defendant, that a debt in question in the action was the same as one mentioned in such schedule was admitted.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

PARKE, B. . . . The rule as to the production of the best evidence is not at all infringed. It does not apply to the present case. That rule is founded on the supposition that a party is going to offer worse evidence than the nature of the case admits. But what is said by a party to the suit is not open to that objection. . . . We therefore think it is a sound rule that admissions made by a party to a suit may be received against him, although they relate to the contents of a written document.

LORD ABINGER, C.B., GURNEY AND ROLFE, BB., concurred.

The following is from Meeson and Welsby:—

PARKE, B. . . . the reason why such parol statements are admissible, without notice to produce, or accounting for the absence of the written instrument, is, that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth, arising from the very nature of the case, where better evidence is withheld; whereas what a party himself admits to be true, may reasonably be presumed to be so. The weight and value of such testimony is quite another question. . . . It is enough for the present purpose to say, that the evidence is admissible.

Note.—As to the rules concerning the “production of the best evidence,” and notices to produce, see post, pp. 326 and 336.

CONFESSIONS.

In criminal cases it may appear that the prisoner has admitted or confessed his guilt of the crime alleged. But, before such confession is put in evidence, the prosecution must prove that such confession was free and voluntary, as the following cases show. And even when such a confession is admitted, it is not treated as conclusive. It is open to the prisoner to rebut or explain it.

In serious offences, the Court will sometimes advise that a prisoner's plea of "guilty" should be withdrawn, that a plea of "not guilty" should be entered for him, and that he should be duly tried thereon. It may then happen that when the whole facts are gone into a verdict of acquittal may result.

"With respect to the effect of extra-judicial confessions or statements when received, the rule is clear that, unless otherwise directed by statute, no such confession or statement, whether plenary or not plenary, whether made before a justice of the peace, or other tribunal having only an inquisitorial jurisdiction in the matter, or made by deed, or matter in pais, either amounts to an estoppel, or has any conclusive effect against an accused person, or is entitled to any weight beyond that which the jury in their conscience assign to it" (Best, § 552).

"Of the credit and effect due to a confessional statement the jury are the sole judges; they must consider the whole confession, together with all the other evidence of the case, and if it is inconsistent, improbable or incredible, or is contradicted or discredited by other evidence, or is the emanation of a weak or excited state of mind, they may exercise their discretion in rejecting it, either wholly or in part, whether the rejected part make for or against the prisoner" (Wills, Circ. Ev., 6th ed., 118).

It should be noted that the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, sect. 18, requires the magistrate, after taking the evidence for the prosecution, to warn the prisoner that he need not say anything in reply; that what he does say may be used in evidence against him at the trial, and that he has nothing to hope or fear from any promise or threat (see post, p. 422).

R. v. BALDRY.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1852.

2 DENISON, 430; 21 L. J. M. C. 130; 16 JUR. 599;
5 COX, C. C. 523.

In criminal cases a confession made by the prisoner can be given in evidence against him, if the prosecution show it was free and voluntary; not otherwise.

It will be held not to be free and voluntary if it were induced by any threat or promise made by a person in authority. Any expressions suggesting that it would be "better" for the prisoner to tell the truth import a threat or promise.

On the part of the prosecution a police constable was called, whose evidence began thus: "I went to the prisoner's house on the 17th December. I saw the prisoner. Dr. Vincent, and Page, another constable, were with me. I told him what he was charged with. He made no reply, and sat with his face buried in his handkerchief. I believe he was crying. I said he need not say anything to criminate himself; what he did say would be taken down and used as evidence against him." It was held that such words did not amount to any threat or promise to induce the prisoner to confess; that it could have no tendency to induce him to say anything untrue; and that in spite of it if he did afterwards confess the confession must be considered voluntary and admissible.

The following is from Denison:—

POLLOCK, C.B. . . . The ground for not receiving such evidence is that it would not be safe to receive a statement made under any influence or fear. There is no presumption of law that it is false or that the law considers such statement cannot be relied upon; but such confessions are rejected because it is supposed that it would be dangerous to leave such evidence to the jury. A simple caution to the accused to tell the truth if he says anything has been decided not to be sufficient to prevent the statement made being given in evidence; and although it may be put that when a person is told to tell the truth, he may possibly understand that the only thing true is that he is guilty, that is not what we ought to understand. He is reminded that he need not say anything, but if he says anything let it be true. . . . But where the admonition to speak the truth has been coupled with any expression importing that it would be better for him to do so, it has been held that the confession was not receivable, the objectionable words being that it would be better to speak the truth, because they import that it would be better for him to say something. . . . The true distinction between the present case and a case of that kind is, that it is left to the prisoner a matter of perfect indifference whether he should open his mouth or not. . . .

The question now is, whether the words employed by the constable "he need not say anything to criminate himself; what he did say would be taken down and used as evidence against him," amount either to a promise or a threat. We are not to torture this expression. . . . The words are to be taken in their obvious meaning. . . . It is proper that a prisoner should be cautioned not to criminate himself; but I think that what he says ought to be adduced either as evidence of his guilt, or as evidence in his favour. For these reasons I think that the Lord Chief Justice properly received the confession at the trial.

PARKE, B. . . . In order to render a confession admissible in evidence it must be perfectly voluntary; and there is no doubt that any inducement in the nature of a promise or of a threat held out by a person in authority vitiates a confession. The decisions to that effect have gone a long way; whether it would not have been better to have allowed the whole to go to the jury, it is now too late to inquire, but I think there has been too much tenderness towards prisoners in this matter. . . . The rule has been extended quite too far, and justice and common sense have, too frequently been sacrificed at the shrine of mercy. . . .

ERLE, J. . . . I am of opinion that when a confession is well proved it is the best evidence that can be produced; and that unless it be clear that there was either a threat or a promise to induce it, it ought not to be excluded. . . .

WILLIAMS, J. . . . What was said to the prisoner was nothing more than that what he said would not be kept secret, but would be used in evidence; and it is an over-refinement to say that a statement made after such a caution was inadmissible.

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. . . . If there be any worldly advantage held out, or any harm threatened, the confession must be excluded. The reason is, not that the law supposes that the statement will be false, but that the prisoner has made the confession under a bias, and that, therefore, it would be better not to submit it to the jury. . . .

Note.—It would seem that if there were no such illegal inducement the confession would be legally admissible although the witness promised, or even swore, not to disclose it, or obtained it by any mean trick (see R. v. Shaw, 6 C. & P. 372; R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 187).

R. v. THOMPSON.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1893.

[1893] 2 Q. B. 12; 62 L. J. M. C. 93; 69 L. T. 22;
41 W. R. 525; 57 J. P. 313; 17 Cox, C. C. 641.

The prisoner was convicted of embezzling the money of a company which employed him. It was proved that, on being taxed with the crime by the chairman of the company, he said, "Yes, I took the money," and afterwards made out a list of the sums and, with the help of his brother, paid back a part of them. The chairman admitted that before receiving the confession he had said to the prisoner's brother, "It will be the right thing for your brother to make a statement" or "to make a clean breast of it"; but he also said that at the time of the confession no promise or threat was made to the prisoner with regard to his prosecution, and there was no evidence that the chairman's statement had, in fact, been communicated to the prisoner prior to his confession. Held, that the confession was not admissible.

The following judgment, which was concurred in by four other Judges, is from the Law Reports:—

CAVE, J. . . . By the law of England to be admissible a confession must be free and voluntary. If it proceeds from remorse and a desire to make reparation for the crime, it is admissible. If it flows from hope or fear, excited by a person in authority, it is inadmissible. . . . The material question consequently is whether the confession has been obtained by the influence of hope or fear; and the evidence to this point being in its nature preliminary, is addressed to the judge, who will require the prosecutor to show affirmatively, to his satisfaction, that the statement was not made under the influence of an improper inducement, and who, in the event of any doubt subsisting on this head, will reject the confession. . . . If these principles and the reasons for them are, as it seems impossible to doubt, well founded, they afford the magistrates a simple test by which the admissibility may be decided. They have to ask, is it proved affirmatively that the confession was free and voluntary—that is, was it preceded by any inducement to make a statement held out by a person in authority? If so, and the inducement has not clearly been removed before the statement was made, evidence of the statement was inadmissible. In the present case . . . there is, indeed, no evidence that any communication was made to the prisoner at all; but it seems to me that after the chairman's statement that he had spoken to the prisoner's brother about the desirability of the prisoner making a clean breast of it, with the expectation that what he said would be communicated to the prisoner, it was incumbent on the prosecution to prove whether any, and if so what, communication was actually made to the prisoner, before the magistrates could properly be satisfied that the confession was free and voluntary. The magistrates go on to say that they inferred that the details of the interview would be, by which I suppose they intend to say that they inferred they were, communicated to the prisoner, which seems to have been the right inference to draw under the circumstances. Conviction quashed. ✓

R. v. JARVIS.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1867.

L. R. 1 C. C. R. 96; 37 L. J. M. C. 1; 16 W. R. 111.

A "threat or promise" must offer some temporal advantage or disadvantage connected with the result of the prosecution in order to render a confession involuntary.

Exhortations to confess on moral or religious grounds are not sufficient to exclude a confession.

One of a firm who employed the prisoner, having called him up into the private counting house of the firm, in the presence of another of the firm and two officers of police, said, "I think it is right that I should tell you that, besides being in the presence of my brother and myself, you are in the presence of two officers of the police: and I should advise you that, to any question that may be put to you, you will answer truthfully, so that if you have committed a fault you may not add to it by stating what is untrue"; and having shown a letter to him, which he denied having written, added, "Take care, we know more than you think we know." The prisoner thereupon made a confession, which was held admissible.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

KELLY, C.B. . . . The question is, do the words before us in substance and fairly considered import a threat of evil, or hold out a hope of benefit to the accused in case he should state the truth? . . . In the first place, this appears to me to be advice given by a master to a servant, and when he adds, "So that if you have committed a fault you may not add to it by stating what is untrue," he appears to me to be giving further advice on moral grounds. It is neither a threat that evil shall befall him, nor is it an inducement or holding out of advantage. . . .

As to the words "you had better," referred to in the argument, there are many cases in which those words have occurred, and they seem to have acquired a sort of technical meaning, that they hold out an inducement or threat within the rule that excludes confessions under such circumstances. It is sufficient to say that those words have not been used on this occasion; and that the words used appear to me to import advice given on moral grounds, and not to infringe upon the rule of law prohibiting a threat in these cases.

WILLES, J. I agree; but if it had appeared that the prisoner could have supposed the words meant "you had better," I think the case would have been different.

BRAMWELL, B., BYLES and LUSH, JJ., concurred.

Note.—If a magistrate were to tell a prisoner that if he did not confess he would get six months' longer sentence, a confession induced thereby would undoubtedly be inadmissible. But, if he told him he would go to Hell, that would not render it inadmissible, apparently. The latter threat might appear the worse, but it would scarcely have the same effect on the mind of the prisoner, who would for the moment be more troubled with his immediate difficulty of getting out of his present trouble, than with his affairs thereafter. Moreover, the magistrate has no jurisdiction with reference to the place mentioned in the latter threat. The prisoner therefore might naturally ignore it.

R. v. LLOYD.

OXFORD CIRCUIT. 1834.

6 C. & P. 393.

The offer of some merely collateral convenience, or temporal advantage unconnected with the result of the prosecution, or an appeal to a man's moral feelings, is not such an inducement as will render a confession inadmissible. The promise, or words, to have such effect, must have reference to the result of the prosecution; suggesting a more favourable determination of the proceedings.

The prisoner and his wife were both in custody for larceny, but in separate rooms. A person who was in the room where the former was in custody, said, "I hope you will tell, because Mrs. Gurner can ill afford to lose the money"; and the constable said, "If you will tell where the property is, you shall see your wife." A statement made afterwards by the prisoner was held admissible.

PATTESON, J. I think that this is not such an inducement to confess as will exclude the evidence of what the prisoner said. It amounts only to this, that if he would tell where the money was, he should see his wife.

Note.—"The cases on the subject of what is an illegal inducement to confess are very numerous, and far from consistent with each other; and there can be little doubt that the salutary rule which excludes confessions unlawfully obtained has been applied to the rejection of many not coming within its principle, although Judges are now less disposed than they formerly were to hold that the language used amounts even to an inducement" (Best, § 551).

A few further illustrations, drawn from decided cases, may be useful.

The confession was rejected where the following expressions were used—

"Tell me where the things are, and I will be favourable to you." (R. v. Thompson, 1 Leach. 291.)

"If you do not tell me all about it, I will send for a constable." (R. v. Richards, 5 C. & P. 318.)

"If you don't tell me, I will give you in charge of the police till you do tell me." (R. v. Luckhurst, 6 Cox, 243.)

"If you don't tell, you may get yourself into trouble and it will be the worse for you." (R. v. Coley, 10 Cox, 536.)

"You had better tell all you know." (R. v. Kingston, 4 C. & P. 387.)

"Speak the truth, it will be better for you if you do." (R. v. Rose, 78 L. T. 119.)

The confession was admitted where the following expressions were used—

"Don't run your soul into more sin, but tell the truth." (R. v. Sleeman, 6 Cox, 245.)

"Be sure to tell the truth." (R. v. Court, 7 C. & P. 486.)

"I must know more about it." (R. v. Reason, 12 Cox, 228.)

"You had better, as good boys, tell the truth." (R. v. Reeve, L. R. 1 C. C. 96.)

It would really appear to be rather a question of circumstances than of words, regard being had particularly to the position and authority of the person using the words.

R. v. GIBBONS.

OXFORD CIRCUIT. 1828.

1 C. & P. 97.

The term "person in authority," in connection with confessions by prisoners, includes the prosecutor, officers of justice, and other persons directly connected with the prosecution only.

On a charge of murder, Mr. Cozens, a surgeon, was called to prove certain confessions made by the prisoner to him. He objected to giving such evidence on the ground that, at the time of the statement, he was attending the prisoner as a surgeon.

PARK, J. That is no sufficient reason to prevent a disclosure for the purposes of justice.

The witness also said that he held out no threat or promise to the prisoner, but a woman present said that she had told the prisoner she had better tell all; and then the prisoner confessed to the witness.

PARK, J. (after consulting with HULLOCK, B.) laid down that, as no inducement had been held out by Mr. Cozens, to whom the confession was made; and the only inducement had been held out (as was alleged) by a person having no sort of authority; it must be presumed that the confession to Mr. Cozens was a free and voluntary confession. If the promise had been held out by any person having any office or authority, as the prosecutor, constable, etc., the case would be different; but here some person, having no authority of any sort, officiously says, You had better confess. No confession follows; but some time afterwards, to another person (the witness), the prisoner, without any inducement held out, confesses. They (the Judges) had not the least doubt that the present evidence was admissible.

Note.—The following have been held to be "persons in authority"—magistrates, even those not acting as such in the case, their clerks, coroners, police constables, warders and others having custody of the prisoners, searchers, prosecutors and their wives and attorneys. Masters and mistresses are only so considered if they are themselves prosecuting, or the charge is connected with the employment.

R. v. GOULD.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT. 1840.

9 C. & P. 364.

Notwithstanding that a confession has been obtained by the threat or inducement of a person in authority, it seems that facts discovered in consequence thereof, and so much of such confession as distinctly relates to such facts, may be proved.

A prisoner, charged with burglary, made a statement to a policeman under some peculiar circumstances, which induced the prosecution, with the approbation of the Court, to decline offering it in evidence; but in consequence of the statement containing some allusion to a lantern, which was afterwards found in a particular place, the policeman was asked whether, in consequence of something which the prisoner had said, he made search for the lantern.

TINDAL, C.J., and PARKE, B., were both of opinion that the words used by the prisoner, with reference to the thing found, ought to be given in evidence, and the policeman accordingly stated that the prisoner told him that he had thrown a lantern into a certain pond. The other parts of the statement were not given in evidence.

Note.—The rule as above stated is apparently considered correct now, although earlier cases are inconsistent with it. Such rule apparently gives the prisoner away altogether in such cases, notwithstanding that the confession was extorted. Perhaps there is still some doubt on the point.

But the finding of articles, etc., in consequence of the confession certainly appears to render it trustworthy.

DECLARATIONS BY DECEASED PERSONS.

It has long been recognised that the exclusion of evidence of statements made by deceased persons would frequently lead to a defeat of justice, and that they might in some cases be properly admitted when the circumstances were such that they could fairly be relied upon. In many cases there might be no other evidence available, the deceased person having been solely acquainted with the facts. In the six following instances the law recognises that there is sufficient guarantee of the credibility of such hearsay statements to allow that they shall be admitted as evidence :—

1. Declarations in course of duty.
2. " against interest.
3. " as to pedigree.
4. " " public rights.
5. " " cause of death.
6. " " contents of wills.

For the principle underlying these exceptions, see the remarks of Jessel, M.R., post, p. 241.

It should be observed that, although the term " declaration " may suggest rather a formal statement, yet statements made in any manner are generally admissible.

The cases in which such declarations are admissible vary according to their nature, but it would appear that declarations in course of duty and against interest are admissible on any matter in issue whatever; those as to pedigree, only in pedigree cases (see post, p. 217); those as to public rights in cases of strictly public rights (see post, p. 224); those as to cause of death in cases of homicide (see post, p. 234); and those as to contents of wills in cases in which questions arise as to such contents (see Phipson, 6th ed., 276).

DECLARATIONS IN COURSE OF DUTY.

PRICE v. TORRINGTON.

NISI PRIUS. 1703.

1 SALKELD, 285; 2 LD. RAYMOND, 873; HOLT, 300.

Statements made by a person in the regular course of his business or duty are admissible evidence, after his death, of the facts stated. Such statements are known as "declarations in the course of duty."

The following is from Lord Raymond:—

In indebitatus assumpsit for beer sold and delivered to the defendant, upon non assumpsit pleaded, at the trial at Guildhall before Holt chief justice, the evidence against the defendant was, that the usual way of the plaintiff's trading was, that the drayman came every night to the plaintiff's clerk, and gave account to him of all the beer that he had delivered that day; and an entry was made of it in a book, which the drayman and clerk subscribed; and that there was such an entry of — barrels of beer delivered to the defendant, etc., and that the drayman was dead, and the subscription was proved to be of his writing.

HOLT, C.J., held this good evidence to charge the defendant.

The following is from Salkeld:—

The plaintiff, being a brewer, brought an action against the Earl of Torrington for beer sold and delivered, and the evidence given to charge the defendant was, that the usual way of the plaintiff's dealing was that the draymen came every night to the clerk of the brewhouse and gave him an account of the beer they had delivered out, which he set down in a book kept for that purpose, to which the draymen set their hands; and that the drayman was dead, but that this was his hand set to the book; and this was held good evidence of a delivery; otherwise of the shop-book itself, without more.

DOE d. PATTESHALL v. TURFORD.

KING'S BENCH. 1832.

3 B. & Ad. 890; 37 R. R. 581.

A declaration in the course of duty is admissible although the duty was only temporarily assumed by the person who made such declaration, if it be proved that there was in fact such a duty upon another person whose duty was thus assumed for the occasion.

In consequence of the absence of his clerk, a solicitor, named Patteshall, had on one occasion performed the clerk's duty for him, and served and indorsed a notice as his clerk would have done. The indorsement of service on such notice was admissible as evidence of service.

LORD TENTERDEN, C.J. . . . I take it to be proved that the practice in Messrs. Bellamy and Patteshall's office was that any person who undertook to serve a notice to quit, indorsed on the duplicate, at the time of the service, the fact of his having served the original. Notices to quit were usually served by the clerks, and not by the principals; but a principal might occasionally serve such a notice, and we must assume that when a principal served the notice, he would do what he required his clerk to do. Now, here it is proved that Patteshall took the notice with him when he went out, and that the indorsement on it is in his handwriting. Then the indorsement, having been made in the discharge of his duty, was, according to the authority cited, admissible evidence of the fact of the service of the original.

LITTLEDALE, J. . . . If the notice in question had been served by a deceased clerk, his indorsement on the duplicate, coupled with proof of the practice of the office, would have been sufficient evidence of the service. Then the next question is, whether Patteshall having served it himself, his indorsement is tantamount to a clerk's. I think it is; for it must be assumed that he would do what he required his clerk to do. . . .

PARKE, J. . . . The only question in the case is, whether the entry made by Mr. Patteshall was admissible in evidence, and I think it was, not on the ground that it was an entry against his own interest, but because the fact that such an entry was made at the time of his return from his journey was one of the chain of facts (there are many others) from which the delivery of the notice to quit might lawfully be inferred. . . . It was proved to be the ordinary course of this office that when notices to quit were served, indorsements like that in question were made; and it is to be presumed that Mr. Patteshall, one of the principals, observed the rule of the office as well as the clerks. . . .

TAUNTON, J. . . . A minute in writing like the present, made at the time when the fact it records took place, by a person since deceased, in the ordinary course of his business, corroborated by other circumstances which render it probable that that fact occurred, is admissible in evidence. . . .

Note.—But, although the duty may thus, apparently, be assumed for the occasion by a principal, it seems that a mere personal custom of a principal, to do a certain act and to record it, would not be sufficient. There must, it is said, be a duty towards another person, to do and to record the matter in question. See Massey v. Allen, 13 Ch. D. 558.

THE HENRY COXON.

ADMIRALTY. 1878.

L. R. 3 P. D. 156; 47 L. J. ADM. 83; 38 L. T. 819.

Declarations in the course of duty, in order to be admissible, must be contemporaneous, must be made by a person who has no interest to misrepresent, and must relate to his own acts only.

In an action against the owners of a ship for collision, entries made in the log book of a ship by the first mate, since deceased, were rejected on three grounds: (1) they were made two days after the occurrence recorded, whereas the "duty" was to make them immediately; (2) the first mate had an interest to misrepresent, so as to negative the idea of negligence of himself and the ship's crew;

(3) the entries referred not only to his own acts, but to those of the crew, and such declarations are not admissible as to the acts of others.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE, J. . . . Neither do I think that the entry can be considered as contemporaneous; also it was in the interest of the party who made it; and the authorities point to this, that when such evidence is admitted, it must relate to acts done by the person who makes the entry and not by others, but the mate must enter, not only the manœuvres on his own ship, but also the consequences of the manœuvres and navigation of the other ship. These different sets of facts are so inextricably mixed up that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to separate them. I therefore, for these reasons, reject this evidence. . . .

Note.—The case of Mercer v. Denne, [1904] 2 Ch. 534, 540-2, illustrates the point that the acts recorded must be those of the declarant and not of other persons.

With regard to log books, the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, secs. 239, 240, should be noticed (see post, p. 464). It will be observed that entries in the "official log" required thereby to be kept must be made "as soon as possible after the occurrence."

CHAMBERS v. BERNASCONI.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 1834.

3 L. J. Ex. 373; 1 C. M. & R. 347; 4 Tyr. 531; 40 R. R. 604.

Declarations in the course of duty are evidence only of the precise facts which it was the writer's duty to state or record, and not of other matters which, though contained in the same statement, were merely collateral.

The question being whether A. was arrested in a certain parish; a certificate by a deceased officer, stating the fact, time and place of the arrest, was held inadmissible, as to the place, it being his duty merely to record the fact and time, not the place of his arrest.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD DENMAN and TINDAL, C.JJ., LITLEDALE, TAUNTON, PATTESON, PARKE, GASELEE and BOSANQUET, JJ.). . . . We are all of opinion that, whatever effect may be due to an entry made in the course of any office reporting facts necessary to the performance of a duty, the statement of other circumstances, however naturally they might be thought to find a place in the narrative, is no proof of those circumstances. Admitting, then, for the sake of argument, that the entry tendered was evidence of the fact, and even of the day when the arrest was made (both which facts it might be necessary for the officer to make known to his principal), we are all clearly of opinion that it is not admissible to prove in what particular spot within the bailiwick the caption took place, that circumstance being merely collateral to the duty done.

Note.—It was shown in the above case to be the actual custom and practice of the officer to record the place of arrest, although it was not his strict duty to do so. This case has been much questioned. See, for instance, the observations in Smith's Leading Cases, II. 324. But, in the later case of Smith v. Blakey, L. R. 2 Q. B. 326, Blackburn, J., said—"It is an essential fact to render such an entry admissible, that not only it should have been made in the due discharge of the business about which the person is employed, but the duty must be to do the very thing to which the entry relates, and then to make a report or record of it."

With regard to declarations against interest a different rule as to the extent of the admissibility of the declaration has been laid down—the whole being admissible (see post, pp. 207-8).

R. v. BUCKLEY.

CHESTER ASSIZES. 1873.

13 Cox, 293.

Declarations in the course of duty may be either written or verbal.

The question being whether A. murdered B., a policeman, at a certain time and place; a verbal report made by B. in the course of his duty to his inspector, that he was about to go to that place at that time, in order to watch A.'s movements, was, by LUSH, J., held admissible evidence to show that the prisoner and the deceased had met on that occasion.

DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST.

1. PECUNIARY INTEREST.

HIGHAM v. RIDGWAY.

KING'S BENCH. 1808.

10 EAST, 109; 10 R. R. 235.

Statements made by a person against his "pecuniary" interest are admissible evidence, after his death, not only of the facts against such interest, but also of all other facts in the same statement. Such statements are known as "declarations against interest."

Any statement by a person tending to show that he owes money, or has received money owing to him, is considered to be against his interest in this sense.

An entry made by a deceased surgeon, who had delivered a woman of a child, of his having done so on a certain day, and referring to his ledger, in which he had made a charge for his attendance which was marked as "paid," was held evidence of the date of birth of such child; the word "paid" being held to be a statement against the pecuniary interest of the surgeon, as affording evidence against him if he had sued for his charges. All the facts stated in the same entry including those in the ledger to which it referred, which were considered part of the same entry, was held admissible in evidence.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. . . . I think the evidence here was properly admitted, upon the broad principle on which receiver's books have been admitted; namely, that the entry made was in prejudice of the party making it. In the case of the receiver, he charges himself to account for so much to his employer. In this case the party repelled by his entry a claim which he would otherwise have had upon the other for work performed, and medicines furnished to the wife; and the period of her delivery is the time for which the former charge is made, the date of which is the 22nd April; when it appears by other evidence that the man-midwife was in fact attending at the house of Wm. Fowden. If this entry had been produced when the party was making a claim for his attendance, it would have been evidence against him that his claim was satisfied. It is idle to say that the word "paid" only shall be admitted in evidence, without the context, which explains to what it refers; we must, therefore, look to the rest of the entry, to see what the demand was which he thereby admitted to be discharged. By the reference to the ledger, the entry there is virtually incorporated with and made a part of the other entry of which it is explanatory. . . . The discharge in the book in his own handwriting repels the claim which he would otherwise have had against the father from the rest of the evidence as it now appears. Therefore, the entry made by the party was to his own immediate prejudice, when he had not only no interest to make it, if it were not true, but he had an interest the other way, not to discharge a claim, which it appears from the evidence that he had. . . .

LE BLANC, J. On inquiring into the truth of facts which happened a long time ago, the Courts have varied from the strict rules of evidence applicable to facts of the same description happening in modern times, because of the difficulty or impossibility, by lapse of time, of proving those facts in the ordinary way by living witnesses. On this ground, hearsay and reputation (which latter is no other than the hearsay of those who may be supposed to have been acquainted with the fact, handed down from one to another) have been admitted as evidence in particular cases. On that principle stands the evidence, in cases of pedigree, of declarations of the family who are dead, or of monumental inscriptions, or of entries made by them in family Bibles. The like evidence has been admitted in other cases where the Court were satisfied that the person whose written entry or hearsay was offered in evidence, had no interest in falsifying the fact, but, on the contrary, had an interest against his declaration or written entry; as in the case of receiver's books. . . . Here the entries were made by a person who, so far from having any interest to make them, had an interest the other way; and such entries against the interest of the party making them are clearly evidence of the fact stated. . . .

BAYLEY, J. This is no officious entry made by one who had no concern in the transaction; he had no interest in making it; and as he thereby discharged an individual against whom he would otherwise have had a claim, I think the entry was evidence by all the authorities. . . . If he had brought an action for his work, and had received notice to produce his books, this entry would have discharged the father. Now, all the cases agree that a written entry, by which a man discharges another of a claim which he had against him, or charges himself with the debt of another, is evidence of the fact which he so admits against himself, there being no interest of his own to advance by such entry. . . .

GROSE, J., concurred.

Note.—It should be particularly observed that such statements, in order to be admissible, must be against “pecuniary” or “proprietary” interest. It is not sufficient, for instance, that the statement was made under circumstances which show that the person making it would be liable to a criminal prosecution (Sussex Peerage Case, 11 C. & F. 108); although that would seem to be a case in which he would be liable to a pecuniary penalty, by way of fine, or to something admittedly worse, i.e., imprisonment.

The entry in the above case must not be confounded with a declaration in “course of duty,” as there was no duty towards another person to make such entry (see ante, p. 202).

The above case and the next one refer to pecuniary interest, the two subsequent cases to proprietary interest.

TAYLOR v. WITHAM.

CHANCERY. 1876.

L. R. 3 CH. D. 605; 45 L. J. CH. 798.

If any part of a statement by a deceased person is against such person's pecuniary interest, the whole statement is admissible, even such parts thereof as prove to be actually in such person's interest. But though admissible, it may be of no weight as evidence.

The question being whether A. (deceased) had lent money to B.; an entry by A. in his book, "B. paid me three months' interest," followed by other entries connected therewith, and pointing to such a loan, was held admissible as evidence of the loan. The entry of such payment, by itself being against interest, was held to render admissible all the other entries, although the latter were actually for the declarant's interest.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

JESSEL, M.R. . . . It is, no doubt, an established rule in the Courts of this country that an entry against the interest of the man who made it is receivable in evidence after his death for all purposes. . . . Of course, if you can prove aliunde that the man had a particular reason for making it, and that it was for his interest, you may destroy the value of the evidence altogether, but the question of admissibility is not a question of value. The entry may be utterly worthless when you get it, if you show any reason to believe that he had a motive for making it, and that though apparently against his interest, yet really it was for it; but that is a matter for subsequent consideration when you estimate the value of the testimony. . . .

Why should a man enter in his book "Interest paid me," intending to make an entry for himself, and not against himself? Obviously the natural meaning of it is that it is against himself. "Interest" standing alone would not help him; but these entries appear to be connected with two other entries: "December 27. Paid off £20"; that is against his interest, but following that there is this, "Left £1,980," and that enables you to carry your eye to the connecting entry, which is, "January, 1872. J. Witham acknowledged loan to this date £2,000," and then you see you connect the entries with the £1,980. No doubt, if admissible, it becomes very important evidence by reason of connecting it with the rest of the entry, but the entry itself is only an entry, "Interest paid me." It would not, standing alone, have been evidence of a debt from any particular person independent of the connection, and it appears to me when a man puts "Interest paid me," or "Paid off £20," it is prima facie a clear entry against interest which ought to be admitted, and I admit it on the general ground. But, independently of the general ground, there is proof that the £2,000 was paid to J. Witham, and there is proof that every one of these four sums of £20 was actually paid to the testator, so that here again we have this fact, that there are entries not standing alone, but connected with the facts proved. I have no hesitation in saying that it is not only admissible as evidence, but is evidence of a very material character.

Note.—This rule as to the admissibility of the whole declaration should be compared with the rule that, in the case of declarations in course of duty, only so much thereof as it was strictly the declarant's duty to state is legally admissible (see ante, pp. 203-4).

It should also be noted that the above case only deals with the question of admissibility of such evidence, not its weight, which is quite another matter.

2. PROPRIETARY INTEREST.

PEACEABLE v. WATSON.

COMMON PLEAS. 1811.

4 TAUNTON, 16; 13 R. R. 552.

Statements made by a person against his "proprietary" interest are admissible evidence after his death.

Statements made by any one in possession of land tending to limit his interest therein to any less estate than a fee simple are admissible as declarations against his proprietary interest, possession being evidence of ownership in fee simple, until the contrary appears.

In an action of ejectment, in order to prove the seisin of a person through whom the plaintiff claimed, a witness was asked whether he had ever heard one Clarke (since deceased) say of whom he rented certain houses; but the identity of the houses was not established. Grose, J., rejected the evidence and nonsuited the plaintiff. A new trial was granted on the ground appearing below.

SIR J. MANSFIELD, C.J. The opinion of Grose, J., is unanswerable. The ground of the rejection is this. Possession is prima facie evidence of seisin in fee simple; the declaration of the possessor that he is tenant to another makes most strongly, therefore, against his own interest, and consequently is admissible, but it must be first shown that he was in possession of the premises for which the ejectment is brought. The learned Judge's report, however, seems to go further, and to intimate that he should have rejected the evidence of the declarations whether there had or had not been other evidence to identify the premises which Clarke held, as those that were sued for.

LAWRENCE, J. . . . Since the learned Judge was of opinion that, after those facts were proved, the declarations still would not be evidence, there ought to be a new trial.

Note.—This rule is based on the rule that possession of land is evidence of ownership in fee simple (see ante, p. 89). Otherwise it would be impossible to say that any statement was against the occupier's proprietary interest. The statement of a deceased lord of a manor, as to the extent of the manor, was rejected on the ground that he was not at the time in possession, Crease v. Barrett, 1 C. M. & R. 919.

PAPENDICK v. BRIDGWATER.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1855.

24 L. J. Q. B. 289; 3 W. R. 490; 1 JUR. N. S. 657;
5 E. & B. 166.

A declaration against proprietary interest is admissible only against those persons who are privity to the estate of the person making it.

A declaration by a deceased tenant of a farm, to the effect that he was not entitled to common of pasture in respect of the farm, was held not to be admissible in evidence against the reversioner, his landlord.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. . . . You cannot receive in evidence a declaration of a tenant which derogates from the title of the landlord. Such evidence, if receivable, would be most mischievous, because a tenant might thus destroy a valuable easement or be enabled to impose a servitude. . . .

COLERIDGE, J. . . . Several exceptions have been established to the general rule that what is said by one person is no evidence against another person not in parity of estate and interest with him; but the present case is not within any of the exceptions recognised by the authorities. . . . Nothing, I think, would lead to greater inconvenience than that the landlord by loose declarations of his tenant should be ousted of his rights and burthened with a servitude. . . .

ERLE, J. . . . This does not come within any of the exceptions which were introduced for general convenience, such as entries made in discharge of legal duty, or in the course of business, nor, what is more apposite, declarations binding privies. . . . This kind of evidence is of a most dangerous character, because, though prima facie it is against the interest of the declarant, it is easy to suggest circumstances under which a tenant going out from one farm and coming into another might wish to burden the farm he was about to leave, with a view to benefit the latter, and be induced to make a declaration which, under the actual circumstances, was not against his interest at the moment, but in furtherance of it. I am, therefore, of opinion that we ought not to extend the exception to this case.

Note.—These cases as to declarations against proprietary interest should be compared with the case as to admissions by predecessors in title, Woolway v. Rowe, ante, p. 186.

DECLARATIONS AS TO PEDIGREE.

BERKELEY PEERAGE CASE.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1811.

4 CAMPBELL, 401; 14 R. R. 782.

In "pedigree cases," the statements, verbal or written, and conduct of deceased persons, who were related by blood or marriage with the family in question, if made "ante litem motam," are admissible to prove relationship, or family succession, or facts upon which such matters depend, such as births, marriages and deaths.

Entries in family Bibles, being looked on as family registers, to which the family have general access, are of special weight in this connection.

Such statements and conduct are known as "declarations as to pedigree."

In a claim before the Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords, the legitimacy of the claimant was disputed, the question being whether his parents were privately married before his birth. The judges were summoned to give their opinions upon the following questions submitted to them by the Lords.

1. "Upon the trial of an ejectment respecting Black Acre, between A. and B., in which it was necessary for A. to prove that he was the legitimate son of J. S., A. after proving by other evidence that J. S. was his reputed father, offered to give in evidence a deposition made by J. S. in a cause in Chancery, instituted by A. against C. D., in order to perpetuate testimony to the alleged fact disputed by C. D., that he was the legitimate son of J. S., in which character he claimed an estate in remainder in White Acre, which was also claimed in remainder by C. D. B., the defendant in the ejectment, did not claim Black Acre under either A. or C. D., the plaintiff and defendant in the Chancery suit.

"According to law, could the deposition of J. S. be received upon the trial of such ejectment, against B., as evidence of declarations of J. S. the alleged father in matters of pedigree?"

2. "Upon the trial of an ejectment respecting Long Acre, between E. and F., in which it was necessary for E. to prove that he was the legitimate son of W., the said W. being at that time dead, E. after proving by other evidence that W. was his reputed father, offered to give in evidence an entry in a Bible in which Bible W. had made such entry in his own handwriting, that E. was his eldest son, born in lawful wedlock from G., the wife of W., on the 1st day of May, 1778, and signed by W. himself.

"Could such entry in such Bible be received to prove that E. is the legitimate son of W., as evidence of the declaration of W. in matter of pedigree?"

3. " Upon the trial of an ejectment respecting Little Acre, between N. and P., in which it was necessary for N. to prove that he was the legitimate son of T., the said T. being at that time dead; N., after proving by other evidence that T. was his reputed father, offered to give in evidence an entry in a Bible, in which Bible T. had made such entry in his own handwriting that N. was his eldest son, born in lawful wedlock from J., the wife of T., on the 1st day of May, 1778, and signed by T. himself; and it was proved in evidence on the said trial that the said T. had declared: that he, T., had made such entry for the express purpose of establishing the legitimacy, and the time of the birth, of his eldest son N., in case the same should be called in question, in any case or in any cause whatsoever, by any person, after the death of him the said T.

" Could such entry in such Bible be received, to prove that N. is the legitimate son of T., as evidence of the declaration of T. in matter of pedigree?"

In the opinion of the majority of the Judges, the deposition, referred to in the first question, was inadmissible, as it was made after the dispute had arisen, post litem motam, when the party making the same had an interest to misrepresent the facts.

In the unanimous opinion of the Judges, the entries in the Bibles, referred to in the second and third questions, were admissible, as they were made ante litem motam; the entry, however, referred to in the third question being liable to suspicion on account of the reason stated therein for the making of it. The Lords gave judgment accordingly.

LORD ELDON, L.C. . . . There does seem a hardship in rejecting the declarations of the late Lord Berkeley after the dispute had arisen; for there was no way in which the claimant as heir apparent to his titles could have availed himself of his testimony. . . . Upon the admissibility of this evidence, Judges have held different opinions, and it might appear remarkable that a declaration under no sanction was receivable, and a declaration upon oath was not. . . . The previous existence of the dispute would be a sufficient ground to proceed upon. I have known no instance in which declarations post litem motam have been received. . . . Therefore, although the authorities are at variance, principle and practice unite in rejecting the evidence.

I introduced the Bible into the second and third questions, as the book in which such entries are usually made. If the entry be the ordinary act of a man in the ordinary course of life, without interest or particular motive, this, as the spontaneous effusion of his own mind, may be looked at without suspicion, and received without objection. Such is the contemporaneous entry in a family Bible, by a father, of the birth of a child. But a doubt had been entertained upon this point, and it was fit that it should be solemnly decided. I agree to the admissibility of similar entries in other books. There is a great difference between the competency of evidence and the credit to which it is entitled.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. I had conceived some doubts whether this deposition could not be received as a declaration: but the arguments of the learned Judges have convinced me that it is inadmissible. It is only the answer to particular interrogatories, and may be very different from the genuine reputation upon the subject. I agree with the Judges that an entry made in a Bible does not therefore become evidence; but I cannot say it is not greatly strengthened by being found there, that being the ordinary register in families. . . .

LORD REDESDALE. The circumstance of an entry being in a family Bible, to which all the family have access, gives it that solidity which it would not have if made in a book which remained in the exclusive possession of the father. Entries in family Bibles have therefore become common evidence of pedigree in this country; and in America, where there is no register of births or baptisms, hardly any other is known. With regard to the main question of the admissibility of the deposition as a declaration, one circumstance is in my mind decisive. In cases of reputation, the attorney takes down what old witnesses will prove, and it often happens that some of them afterwards die before the trial. But what was taken down from their mouths is never offered in evidence. And why? Because declarations post litem motam are not receivable. . . .

Note.—“Matters of pedigree,” provable by declarations, appear to include also—legitimacy, celibacy, intestacy, failure of issue, and the like.

BUTLER v. MOUNTGARRETT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1859.

7 H. L. CASES, 633; 115 R. R. 306.

A controversy in a family, though not at that moment the subject of a lawsuit, is sufficient to exclude evidence of declarations as to pedigree made at the time of such controversy, on the ground that they were not made "ante litem motam."

There was offered in evidence a letter written by one member of the family to another, stating that the writer said he knew of a certain alleged marriage, material to the issue. This letter itself showed that a dispute had then arisen with reference to such marriage. It was held inadmissible as evidence.

LORD CAMPBELL, L.C. . . . The question is this, whether there had been a marriage in Scotland between Henry Butler and Mrs. Colebrooke. It was to prove that there had been such a marriage that the letter was proposed to be given in evidence. Had there not been a controversy upon that subject before the letter was written? And at the time when the letter was written, did it not subsist?

It was for the Judge to say whether the letter was admissible or inadmissible, and in order to come to a right conclusion upon that question he was to consider whether there was evidence of lis mota, independently of the letter. And, moreover, he was bound to look at the letter, and to read it, and to see from its contents whether it was admissible or not. Without entering minutely into the evidence, I think that there was, independently of the letter, evidence to show that before the letter was written there had been a controversy in the Butler family as to whether there had been this Scotch marriage or not. But the letter itself, I think, is quite conclusive on the subject, because the whole scope of it shows that there had been such a controversy. And it was in my opinion a controversy which was likely to create a bias one way or the other upon the mind of every member of the family. . . . It was a matter of great interest to them, as to which no doubt each might take one side or another; and, according to the established rules of the law of England, if there is such a controversy, it is supposed to create a bias upon the minds of those who make statements upon the subject, and it renders hearsay evidence upon the subject inadmissible. . . .

LORD BROUGHAM. . . . If the letter had been produced and tendered, and there had been nothing else in the cause to lead the learned Judge's mind to the conclusion of the existence of lis mota at the time, and if he had therefore admitted the letter, the moment that letter was read, it would so clearly have proved that there was a lis mota at the time, that it must at once have been struck out of the evidence.

LORD CREANWORTH. . . . If the letter itself shows that at that time there was a lis mota, then the letter is inadmissible. Now, upon the question whether this letter does show that or not, it appears to me that not only does it show that, but it shows nothing else. . . . It appears to me that to admit that letter would be directly at variance with the principle upon which this sort of evidence is received, and which is stated by Lord Eldon to be, that such declarations are admitted upon the ground that they are the natural effusions of parties who must know the truth, "upon occasions when their minds stand in an even position without any temptation to exceed or to fall short of the truth." As to every one of these propositions, the case here would fail. . . .

LORD CHELMSFORD. . . . The very commencement of the letter shows that the parties were entering into a consideration of the state of the family with reference to the devolution of the honours and the estates which were involved in the discussion. The writer of the letter says, "I think it fair and just to tell you what I know of the circumstances connected with Henry and Mrs. Colebrooke." Then it was for the Judge to determine whether the letter itself, if there was no other evidence in the case, was not sufficient to establish the fact of there being a lis mota. The learned Judge was of that opinion, and rejected the evidence. I think the learned Judge was perfectly justified in so doing. I think the letter shows, in the strongest possible way, that there was a controversy existing. . . .

LORD WENSLEYDALE concurred.

HAINES v. GUTHRIE.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1884.

L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 818; 53 L. J. Q. B. 521; 51 L. T. 645; 33 W. R. 99; 48 J. P. 756.

A "pedigree case," in which evidence of declarations by deceased relations is admissible, must be one in which the question of pedigree or relationship is directly in issue. In such cases only, any fact upon which such relationship depends may be so proved, e.g., the date of a birth.

In an action for goods sold, to which the defence of infancy was pleaded, the date of birth being thus in question, a declaration made by defendant's deceased father as to such date was not admissible, it not being a pedigree case. If it had been, then such fact could have been proved thus.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

BRETT, M.R. . . . It is obvious that in this case the question of family is immaterial, that the question whose son the defendant was is immaterial, and so were all such questions as whether he was a legitimate or a natural son, an elder or a younger son, or as to what relation he occupied with regard to the rest of the family. There was, therefore, no question which could be called a question of family; the only question is, what was the date of the birth . . . ?

This evidence is prima facie hearsay evidence, and the general rule of law is that hearsay evidence is not admissible; it is therefore sought to bring this case within some recognised exception to that rule. . . . The exception which applies to this case is that the evidence is admissible in cases where it is a question of pedigree. Here there is no question as to pedigree, no question as to descent, none as to relationship, none as to the position of any person in any family—all these questions are wholly immaterial—so that in this case no question of pedigree could arise, and therefore this case does not fall within the recognised exception to the general rule of evidence. . . .

BOWEN, L.J. . . . No question is raised as to the family of the defendant, or as to his position in that family; the only question raised was as to the age of this particular individual.

FRY, L.J. . . . The exception is confined to questions of pedigree, and no such question is raised in this case. . . .

Note.—The evidence of the date of birth in this case was rejected merely on the ground that it was not a "pedigree case," i.e., not a case in which a question of relationship was in issue. If it had been such a case, then the date of birth would have been a proper matter to prove in such manner.

JOHNSON v. LAWSON.

COMMON PLEAS. 1824.

2 BINGHAM, 86; 9 MOORE, 183; 27 R. R. 558.

Declarations as to pedigree must have been made by, or with the approval of, members of the family. If made by servants or intimate acquaintances, whatever their position or knowledge, they are not admissible, unless adopted by the family.

The question being, who was heir-at-law of one Henry Lidgbird, it was proposed to give in evidence declarations by a person, then deceased, who had been his housekeeper for twenty-four years. Such declarations were held inadmissible.

The following is from Bingham:—

BEST, C.J. . . . As a general rule, hearsay is not admissible evidence, but to this general rule pedigree-causes form an exception, from the very nature of the case. Facts must be spoken of which took place many years before the trial, and of these, traditional evidence is often the only evidence which can be obtained; but evidence of that kind must be subject to limitation, otherwise it would be a source of great uncertainty, and the limitation hitherto pursued, namely, the confining such evidence to the declarations of relations of the family, affords a rule at once certain and intelligible. If the admissibility of such evidence were not so restrained, we should on every occasion, before the testimony could be admitted, have to enter upon a long inquiry as to the degree of intimacy or confidence that subsisted between the party and the deceased declarant. . . . If we look into the cases, we shall find that the rule has always been confined to the declarations of kindred . . . it has been carried as far as it can with safety, and we must not extend it farther.

PARK, J. . . . It has been urged that great confidence is often reposed in servants; but it is not confidence of this kind, nor is it usual for a man to confer with his domestics on the situation of the various members of his family. My objection to the proposed evidence is, that if it were to be admitted, the practice would be so loose as to occasion great inconvenience; whereas, if the rule be confined to members of a family, the path to be pursued is clear and certain. . . .

BURROUGH, J. . . . This exception from the general rule, that hearsay shall not be admitted, must be construed strictly, and the natural limits of it are the declarations of members of the family. If we go beyond, where are we to stop? Is the declaration of a groom to be admitted? of a steward? of a chambermaid? of a nurse? may it be admitted if made a week after they have joined the family? and if not, at what time after? We should have to try in every case the life and habits of the party who made the declaration, and on account of this uncertainty such evidence must be excluded. . . .

Note.—It might well be that an old family servant had greater knowledge of the family affairs than a member of the family had; but it is considered that a servant would not have the same interest in keeping up a correct record of the family. Also, the admission of a servant's evidence would, as Burrough, J., said in the above case, involve the further inquiry as to the position and means of knowledge of the servant, after he was dead; not an easy matter.

DOE v. GRIFFIN.

KING'S BENCH. 1812.

15 EAST, 293; 13 R. R. 474.

Declarations in pedigree cases are not confined to matters within the personal knowledge of the deceased relation or declarant. The matter stated may be mere family tradition or reputation, or hearsay upon hearsay, so long as it is confined to the statements and belief of deceased members of the family. Even a statement to the effect that there was absence of information in a family concerning one of its members would be admissible.

In an ejectment case the question arose whether a certain person had died without issue. Evidence by an elderly lady, one of the family, was admitted to the effect that the person in question "had many years before, when a young man, gone abroad, and according to the repute of the family, had afterwards died in the West Indies, and that she had never heard in the family of his having been married."

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. The evidence was sufficient to call upon the defendant to give prima facie evidence at least that Thomas was married; for what other evidence could the lessor be expected to produce that Thomas was not married, than that none of the family had ever heard that he was?

GOODRIGHT v. MOSS.

KING'S BENCH. 1777.

COWPER, 591.

Declarations as to pedigree may be in any form, oral, written, carved on tombstones, inscribed on portraits, or on written or printed pedigrees, or even by conduct, as, for instance, by treating a child as legitimate or otherwise.

In an action of ejectment, the question was whether a certain person was the legitimate child of his parents. Declarations by his father and mother, then deceased, that he was born before marriage were held admissible.

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. . . . The question is, whether the declarations of the father and mother in their lifetime can be admitted in evidence after their death? Tradition is sufficient in point of pedigree; circumstances may be proved. For instance, suppose from the hour of one child's birth to the death of its parent, it had always been treated as illegitimate, and another introduced and considered as the heir of the family; that would be good evidence. An entry in a father's family Bible, an inscription on a tombstone, a pedigree hung up in the family mansion, are all good evidence. So the declarations of parents in their lifetime. . . .

ASTON and WILLES, JJ., concurred.

Note.—Inscriptions on tombstones, portraits, etc., would naturally be made by strangers, but with family approval, and would amount to declarations by relations.

The above case was thus commented on by Lord Eldon in White-locke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 514: "I accede to the doctrine of Lord Mansfield, as it has been stated from Cowper; but it must be understood, as it has been practised, and acted upon; and one word in that passage wants explanation. It was not the opinion of Lord Mansfield, or of any Judge, that tradition, generally, is evidence of pedigree; the tradition must be from persons having such a connection with the party to whom it relates that it is natural and likely, from their domestic habits and connections, that they are speaking the truth, and that they could not be mistaken." ✓

DECLARATIONS AS TO PUBLIC AND GENERAL RIGHTS.

WEEKS v. SPARKE.

KING'S BENCH. 1813.

1 M. & S. 679; 14 R. R. 546.

In proof of public or general rights or customs, or matters of public or general interest, statements made by deceased persons of competent knowledge, as to the existence of such rights, etc., and as to the general reputation thereof in the neighbourhood, if made "ante litem motam," are admissible. Such statements are known as "declarations as to public and general rights."

So, on a question of prescriptive right of common, in which many persons had an interest, such evidence was allowed, on the ground that it was, in some degree, a public right. (But see note at end of this case.)

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. The admission of hearsay evidence upon all occasions, whether in matters of public or private right, is somewhat of an anomaly, and forms an exception to the general rules of evidence. The question here is whether this is a case of a public or merely private right. . . . I confess myself at a loss fully to understand upon what principle, even in matters of public right, reputation was even deemed admissible evidence. It is said, indeed, that upon questions of public right all are interested, and must be presumed conversant with them; and that is the distinction taken between public and private rights; but I must confess I have not been able to see the force of the principle on which that distinction is founded so clearly as others have done, though I must admit its existence; and it has not been controverted in argument to-day, that in the case of public rights reputation is to be received in evidence. . . .

Reputation is in general weak evidence; and when it is admitted, it is the duty of the Judge to impress on the minds of the jury how little conclusive it ought to be, lest it should have more weight with them than it ought to have. . . .

LE BLANC, J. . . . The question arose upon a claim of a prescriptive right of common; such a right as the party alleged to have existed beyond the time of legal memory; and the question is how that right is to be proved. First, it is to be proved by acts of enjoyment within the period of living memory. And when that foundation is laid, then inasmuch as there cannot be any witnesses to speak to acts of enjoyment beyond the time of living memory, evidence is to be admitted from old persons (not any old persons, but persons who have been conversant with the neighbourhood where the waste lies over which the particular right of common is claimed), of what they have heard other persons of the same neighbourhood, who are deceased, say respecting the right. Thus far it is evidence as applicable to this prescriptive right, it being a prescription in which others are concerned as well as the person claiming it; because a right of common is to a certain degree a public right. And the only evidence of reputation which was received was that from persons connected with the district.

In the same manner in questions of pedigree, although they are not of a public nature, the evidence of what persons connected with the family have been heard to say, is received, as to the state of that family. In like manner, also upon questions of boundary, though the evidence of perambulations may be considered to a certain degree as evidence of an exercise of the right, yet it has been usual to go further and admit the evidence of what old persons who are deceased have been heard to say on those occasions.

The rule generally adopted upon questions either of prescription or custom is this, that after a foundation is once laid of the right by proving acts of ownership, then the evidence of reputation becomes admissible, such evidence being confined to what old persons who were in a situation to know what these rights are, have been heard to say concerning them. The issue here was on the prescriptive right of common, and the evidence admitted was as to a right derogatory to that prescriptive right; which must be governed by the same rules.

BAYLEY, J. . . . In cases of prescription, which must have originated beyond the time of legal memory, and of which it is impossible to establish the claim by evidence of the grant, reputation seems to be admissible, and therefore for that reason, when instances have been adduced to show the exercise of the right claimed, it is usual to admit it. . . . I take it that where the term "public right" is used, it does not mean public in the literal sense, but is synonymous with general; that is what concerns a multitude of persons. Now this is a general right exercised by a variety of persons, though not a public right of common.

DAMPIER, J. . . . In public rights it is not disputed that reputation is admissible; and that it has been extended to other rights which cannot be strictly called public, such as manors, parishes, and a modus, which comes the nearest to this case. That, strictly speaking, is a private right, but has been considered as public, as it regards the admissibility of this species of evidence, because it affects a large number of occupiers within a district. . . .

Note.—The above case is generally taken as the leading one, which first laid down the law clearly, although it has been disapproved of on the point whether the right in question was public or private (see the next case).

Although such evidence is not admissible as to private rights, it is admissible both as to public and as to general rights.

Public rights are those common to all the community, such as rights to use highways, ferries, and public fisheries.

General rights are those common to a considerable class of the community, such as parochial or manorial rights. The latter, however, may be private rights.

With reference to the remark of Le Blanc, J., in the above case, that the right is first proved "by acts of enjoyment within the period of living memory," Sir James Stephen remarks: "This seems superfluous, as no jury would ever find that a public right of way existed, which had not been used in living memory, on the strength of a report that some deceased person had said that there once was such a right" (Dig. Ev., Note XX).

But the declarations must be made ante litem motam. As to the meaning of such expression, see ante, p. 211—16.

Such declarations may be made in any manner or form, as in oral statements, writings, deeds, depositions, maps, plans, books, presentments of Manorial Courts, or verdicts, judgments, orders or convictions of competent Courts, such as Quarter Sessions.

As to maps and plans, see Hammond v. Bradstreet, 10 Ex. 390; Pipe v. Fulcher, 28 L. J. Q. B. 12.

LORD DUNRAVEN v. LLEWELLYN.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 1850.

19 L. J. Q. B. 388; 14 JUR. 1089; 15 Q. B. 791; 81 R. R. 809.

A public or general right, or matter of public or general interest, to be evidenced by reputation, or by declarations of deceased persons, must be one which is common to all persons interested, as to all the inhabitants of a particular manor. A right is not within the rule simply because it is enjoyed by many persons in their own individual capacities, such as a right of common enjoyed by several persons in the same manor in their individual capacities ; or an aggregate of private rights.

Evidence of reputation, or declarations, is admissible although no actual enjoyment of the right be proved.

On a question between the lord of a manor and the owner of a freehold estate within the manor, whether a piece of land was part of the lord's waste or part of the defendant's land, after proof had been given that there were many lands held of the manor the tenants of which had always exercised rights of common on the waste of the manor, evidence was offered, on the part of the lord, of declarations of deceased tenants that the land was parcel of the waste. It was held that these declarations were not admissible in evidence, as there is no common law right for all tenants of a manor to have common on the waste of the manor, but that each tenant who has the right has it as an incident by law attached to his particular grant, and that the numerous private rights of common of the several tenants do not compose one public right so as to render evidence of reputation admissible. It was also held that evidence of actual enjoyment of a right need not be given in order to render evidence of reputation admissible.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

PARKE, B. (delivering the judgment of the Court, PARKE, ALDERSON and PLATT, BB., MAULE, CRESSWELL and TALFOURD, JJ.). . . . In the course of the argument we intimated our opinion that the want of evidence of acts of enjoyment of the rights did not affect the admissibility of the evidence, but only its value when admitted. We also stated that no objection could be made to the evidence, on the ground that it proceeded from persons who had not competent knowledge upon the subject, or from persons who were themselves interested in the question. The main inquiry was, whether this was a subject of a sufficiently public nature to justify the reception of hearsay evidence relating to it.

If this question had been one in which all the inhabitants of the manor, or all the tenants of it, or of a particular district of it, had been interested, reputation from any deceased inhabitant or tenant, or even deceased residents in the manor, would have been admissible, such residents having presumably a knowledge of such local customs ; and if there had been a common law right for every tenant of the manor to have common on the wastes of a manor, reputation from any deceased tenant as to the extent of those wastes, and therefore as to any particular land being waste of the manor, would have been admissible. But . . . it is not to be understood that every tenant of a manor has by the common law such a right, but only that certain tenants have a right, not by prescription, but as a right by common law, incident to the grant. . . .

This right, therefore, is not a common right of all tenants, but belongs only to each grantee of arable land by virtue of his individual grant, and is an incident thereto. . . . We are therefore of opinion that this case is precisely in the same situation as if evidence had been offered that there were many persons, tenants of the manor, who had separate prescriptive rights over the lord's wastes, and reputation is not admissible in the case of such separate rights, each being private and depending on each separate prescription, unless the proposition can be supported, that because there are many such rights, the rights have a public character, and the evidence therefore becomes admissible. We think this position cannot be maintained.

It is impossible to say in such a case where the dividing point is. What is the number of rights which is to cause their nature to be changed and to give them a public character? But it is said that there are cases which have decided that where there are numerous private prescriptive rights, reputation is admissible, and the case of Weeks v. Sparke (ante, p. 221) is relied upon as establishing that proposition. The reasons given by the different Judges in that case would certainly not be satisfactory at this day. . . .

We are of opinion, therefore, that the evidence of reputation offered in this case was, according to the well-established rule in the modern cases, inadmissible, as it is in reality in support of a mere private prescription, and the number of these private rights does not make them to be of a public nature.

Note.—Matters of public or general interest within the rule under discussion include, among others—rights of highway, ferry, fishing, tolls, and landing places; boundaries of towns, parishes, counties, hamlets and manors; manorial, borough or district customs; and rights of common.

R. v. BLISS.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1837.

7 A. & E. 550; 7 L. J. Q. B. 4; 2 N. & P. 464; W. W. & D. 624; 45 R. R. 757.

Declarations as to public or general rights must relate directly to the existence of the right itself, and not to particular facts which may support or negative it. The latter are liable to be misrepresented or misunderstood.

Thus, the question being whether a road was public or private, a statement made by a deceased resident that he had planted a tree to mark the boundary of the road, was inadmissible.

The following is from Neville and Perry:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. . . . Is it then evidence of reputation? Everything which depends upon hearsay should be received with great caution. Hearsay evidence in matters of this sort was received by Lord Ellenborough in the first case with great reluctance. It is only to be received as showing general reputation, and not as evidence of particular facts. Here the hearsay evidence relates to a particular fact, and therefore is inadmissible. The statement did not describe the road as public or private.

PATTESON, J. To determine whether it was receivable as evidence of reputation, it is necessary to see what was the issue. It was whether this was or was not a public road. If the issue had been as to the boundary of a public road it might have been receivable in evidence, but evidence of reputation as to boundary cannot be given in evidence where the question is whether the road is public or private. If the witness had said this always was a public road as far as this place, it would have been receivable. The statement is clearly not receivable as evidence of reputation. . . .

WILLIAMS, J. . . . The declaration in this case related to a particular fact, and was not, therefore, admissible. . . .

COLERIDGE, J. . . . No rule is more universal than that statements admissible in evidence on the ground that they are evidence of reputation must relate to general matters and not to particular facts. . . .

NEWCASTLE v. BROXTOWE.

KING'S BENCH. 1832.

4 B. & Ad. 273; 1 N. & M. 598.

Persons whose statements are receivable in evidence as declarations as to public and general rights must be shown to have been "competent declarants"; that is, they must have been so situated as to the place in question, by residence, duty or other connection that it may be concluded they had both the means and the motive for giving a true account of the matter.

In order to prove that a public building was within the hundred of Broxtowe, ancient orders made by justices at Quarter Sessions for the county, so describing it, were admissible without proof that such justices resided in the hundred or county, their competency being presumed from their office.

The following is from Neville and Manning:—

PARKE, J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, PARKE, TAUNTON and PATTESON, JJ.). . . . These documents were admitted, not as orders upon matters over which the magistrates had jurisdiction, but as evidence of reputation; in that point of view we are of opinion that they were admissible. Four of them contain an express statement, the fifth an implied one, that the Castle (or the Brewhouse, or the Park of Nottingham, which belong to it) is within the wapentake or hundred of Broxtowe. The statement is made by the justices of the peace assembled in Sessions who, though they were not proved to be residents within the county or hundred, must from the nature of their offices alone be presumed to have sufficient acquaintance with the subject to which these declarations relate; and the objection cannot prevail that they were made after a controversy upon that subject had arisen, because there appears to have been no dispute upon the particular question, whether the Castle and its precincts were in the hundred of Broxtowe. These statements, therefore, fall within the established rule as to the admission of evidence of reputation. . . .

Note.—It would appear, however, that all persons are strictly competent declarants as to public, as distinct from general, rights, as all persons are legally interested in them. But their declarations would be worthless, even if admissible, unless they were shown to have had competent knowledge.

MERCER v. DENNE.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1905.

L. R. [1905] 2 CH. 538; 74 L. J. CH. 71.

In an action to establish an immemorial custom for fishermen at Walmer to dry their nets on a plot of land owned by the defendant near the seashore, the defendant tendered the following documents as evidence of reputation: (1) A Survey made in 1616 of the reparations required to protect Walmer Castle from the sea, and estimates of the costs thereof; (2) Depositions taken in an Information brought by the Attorney-General in 1639 against persons who claimed to be entitled to the Manor of Walmer for destroying a bank between the sea and Walmer and thereby causing expense to the King; (3) Old Maps and Plans of the same locality prepared by the Board of Ordnance between 1641 and 1647. All these documents were produced from the War Office, and were tendered to show that the land in question was, at the various dates above mentioned, below high-water mark, so that the custom claimed could not have been immemorial. Held, affirming Farwell, J., that none of these documents was admissible.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

[As to No. 1.] STIRLING, L.J. It does not appear by whom the survey was made, nor is there any evidence of the instructions given for it, beyond what appears from the document itself. . . . Now the action relates to the existence of a custom for the fishermen of Walmer to dry their nets on a particular plot of land, and the nature of the action is certainly such that evidence of reputation would be admissible. But what is the purpose for which it is sought to have this evidence admitted? The evidence does not in any way relate to the alleged custom, nor even to the plot of land over which the custom is said to be exercisable. It relates to the state of the foreshore adjoining the Castle of Walmer in the early part of the 17th century. The object is to establish that at that period the sea flowed twice a day over the locus in quo, the plot over which the custom is said to be exercisable, and it is said that, by establishing where the sea flowed at that time, . . . it will be shown that that plot of land was, at that time, subject to the flux and reflux of the sea, and therefore the custom must have arisen at a subsequent date, and consequently does not satisfy the requirements of the law as to period of time at which it began. In my opinion, that is not a matter of reputation. It is laid down in all the cases that, when reputation is admissible, evidence of particular acts ought not to be allowed (pp. 561, 564).

[As to No. 2.] VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. . . . These depositions showed that the sea then came up close to the Castle. . . . The parties to the present action are in no sense the successors of any party to that Information, and, therefore, if these depositions are admissible as against strangers to that proceeding, it can only be, as Farwell, J., said, if they relate to some subject-matter as to which evidence of reputation would be admissible. . . . In my judgment, both Newcastle v. Broxtowe (supra) and Thomas v. Jenkins, 6 A. & E. 525, go far to show that, as regards evidence of reputation, it is sufficient, when a question arises which is directly affected by the document tendered, if the subject-matter of the reputation is one in which the public is interested. Sometimes the word "public" means the public at large; sometimes it means a section of the public, such as the tenants of a manor, or the conventional free tenants in the district of Cornwall mentioned in Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737. Therefore, if it had been shown that these depositions were made by persons to whom it was right to impute knowledge of these matters without any special proof, I should have thought that they might be admitted, not quâ depositions, but as something written by the deponents in reference to a subject-matter of public interest. Therefore, in my view, what we have to ask is, first, was the subject-matter dealt with by that information one of public interest? Otherwise these depositions could not be admitted as evidence of reputation against strangers to the information. And the second question is, were the deponents persons to whom we ought to impute such knowledge of the subject-matter as would render their statements evidence of reputation? In Newcastle v. Broctowe the documents were orders of magistrates with regard to matters over which it was said they had no judicial jurisdiction, but the orders were made by the justices assembled in session, who, although they were not proved to be residents in the county or hundred, must, it was held "from the nature and character of their offices, alone, be presumed to have sufficient acquaintance with the subject to which the declarations related." Were, then, these deponents persons to whom knowledge ought to be thus imputed so as to make their statements in their depositions admissible in the present action? In my opinion, they were not; and this being so, I think their depositions were not admissible (pp. 559—560).

STIRLING, L.J. In my judgment, these statements (as to the flux and reflux of the sea at Walmer Castle) could only be admitted as evidence of reputation, and the matters to which they relate are, for the reasons I have already given with reference to the survey, not matters of reputation, but are evidence with regard to particular facts which it is intended to use, not for the purpose of establishing the custom or destroying it, but from which, by way of inference, the custom is to be negated. I think, therefore, that on that ground these depositions are inadmissible (p. 567).

[As to No. 3.] VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. Farwell, J., thought that, so far as these plans are evidence at all, they are evidence of particular facts and not of reputation. I agree, and I think they are not admissible in evidence (pp. 560—561).

STIRLING, L.J. For the reasons which I have already given with reference to the other documents, I think these plans are not admissible as evidence of reputation (pp. 567—568).

[Note.—The surveys, maps and plans were also held not admissible as Public Documents, post, 250.]

DYING DECLARATIONS.

R. v. JENKINS.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1869.

L. R. 1 C. C. R. 187; 38 L. J. M. C. 82; 20 L. T. 372;
17 W. R. 621; 11 Cox, 250.

In trials of homicide, statements made by the deceased person, whose death is the subject of the charge, relating to the cause and circumstances of his death are admissible in evidence, provided it is clearly proved by the party offering it in evidence that the deceased had at the time abandoned all hope of recovery. Such statements are known as "dying declarations."

The prisoner was charged with the murder of a woman, who, on her death-bed, accused him of the crime. A magistrate's clerk attended her to take down her statement, writing down that it was made "with no hope of my recovery." He then read it over to her, but, before she signed it, she desired the addition of the words "at present," so that the words read "with no hope at present of my recovery." It was held that such statement could not be received in evidence, as her objection to sign the statement without the words "at present" suggested some faint hope of recovery.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

KELLY, C.B. . . . I am of opinion that the result of the cases is, that there must be an unqualified belief, without any hope of recovery, that the declarant is about to die. According to the language of Eyre, C.B., every hope of this world must be gone. According to Tindal, C.J., any hope of recovery, however slight, must exclude the evidence. Then the burden of proof lies entirely on the prosecution. The Judge must be perfectly satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the declarant was under the belief that no hope of recovery existed. Now, in the statement as it read at first it was "no hope of recovery"; then she herself desires the insertion of the important words "at present." We have to consider the effect of those words under the circumstances under which they were uttered. For the prosecution we were asked to give no importance to these words; but the woman must have had some meaning, and, if so, we have to give effect to the meaning we think she had. It might have meant only that as the clerk had used the word "present" when he first put the question to her, she thought it more correct that the same form should be adhered to in the written statement. She may, however, have meant to say, not that she had absolutely no hope, but that at present she had not, but she hoped still that ultimately a change might come, and then she might recover. We should have to solve the doubt, if we had any, in favorem vite in favour of the prisoner; but we think the circumstances call upon us to give our decision in his favour.

BYLES, J. . . . These dying declarations are to be received with scrupulous, I had almost said with superstitious, care. The declarant is subject to no cross-examination. No oath need be administered. There can be no prosecution for perjury. There is always danger of mistake which cannot be corrected. I think there should be the sense of danger of an almost immediate impending death. Here the woman said, in effect, "I have no hope at present." The clerk wrote it down "I have no hope." She said "That is not what I mean; I mean I have no hope at present." That merely means, If I don't get better soon, I shall not recover.

LUSH and BRETT, JJ., and CLEASBY, B., concurred.

Note.—The question in the above case apparently turned upon the woman's refusal to sign the statement without the words "at present," although such words in themselves are apparently meaningless. If the statement had, in the first instance, been drawn up with such words, it might well be argued that it would have been admissible.

In R. v. Perry, [1909] 2 K. B. 697 it was laid down that the real test is not that the person making the statement should believe that he was at the immediate point of death, but merely that he should have given up every hope of life (see post, p. 236).

R. v. MEAD.

KING'S BENCH. 1824.

2 B. & C. 605; 4 D. & R. 120; 26 R. R. 484.

A dying declaration is only admissible in trials for murder and manslaughter.

The defendant was convicted of perjury. A rule for a new trial was obtained by the Attorney-General, in opposition to which were tendered affidavits, stating a dying declaration of the prosecutor, James Law, who was shot by the defendant after conviction. Such declaration gave an account of the shooting and then proceeded to state certain facts material to the charge of perjury.

The following is from Barnewall and Cresswell:—

ABBOTT, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, ABBOTT, C.J., BAYLEY, HOLROYD and BEST, JJ.). We are all of opinion that the evidence cannot be received. . . . Here the dying declaration of Law was for the purpose not of accusing, but of clearing himself. It therefore falls . . . within the general rule, that evidence of this description is only admissible where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death the subject of the dying declarations.

Note.—This rule is also illustrated, as to a civil case, by Stobart v. Dryden, ante, p. 155.

R. v. WOODCOCK.

OLD BAILEY. 1789.

1 LEACH, C. C. 500.

A dying declaration is admissible although the deceased did not expressly refer to his expectation of death. It is sufficient if the circumstances show that he expected speedy death, and was without hope.

The prisoner was charged with the murder of his wife, whose statement was taken on oath by a magistrate. She died in about forty-eight hours afterwards. It was proved to be impossible from the first that she could live long, but that although she retained her senses to the last moment, and repeated the circumstances of the ill usage she had received, she never expressed any apprehension or seemed sensible of her approaching dissolution. The statement was held admissible.

EYRE, C.B. . . . The general principle on which this species of evidence is admitted is, that they are declarations made in extremity, when the party is at the point of death, and when every hope of this world is gone; when every motive to falsehood is silenced, and the mind is induced by the most powerful considerations to speak the truth; a situation so solemn and so awful is considered by law as creating an obligation equal to that which is imposed by a positive oath administered in a court of justice. But a difficulty also arises with respect to these declarations; for it has not appeared, and it seems impossible to find out, whether the deceased herself apprehended that she was in such a state of mortality as would inevitably oblige her soon to answer before her Maker for the truth or falsehood of her assertions. The several witnesses could give no satisfactory information as to the sentiments of her mind upon this subject. The surgeon said that she did not seem to be at all sensible of the danger of her situation, dreadful as it appeared to all around her, but lay, submitting quietly to her fate, without explaining whether she thought herself likely to live or die. Upon the whole of this difficulty, however, my judgment is, that inasmuch as she was mortally wounded, and was in a condition which rendered almost immediate death inevitable; as she was thought by every person about her to be dying, though it was difficult to get from her particular explanations as to what she thought of herself and her situation; her declarations, made under these circumstances, ought to be considered by a jury as being made under the impression of her approaching dissolution; for, resigned as she appeared to be, she must have felt the hand of death, and must have considered herself as a dying woman. She continued to repeat, rationally and uniformly, the facts which she had disclosed from the moment her senses had returned, until her tongue was no longer capable of performing its office. Declarations so made are certainly entitled to credit; they ought therefore to be received in evidence; but the degree of credit to which they are entitled must always be a matter for the sober consideration of the jury, under all the circumstances of the case. . . .

Note.—The case of R. v. Bedingfield, ante, p. 68, might be referred to in connection with the above case. It was there held that notwithstanding the dying condition of the woman, her statement was not admissible as a dying declaration.

R. v. PERRY.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL. 1909.

[1909] 2 K. B. 697; 78 L. J. M. C. 1034; 101 L. T. 127; 25 T. L. R. 676; 53 S. J. 810; 22 Cox, C. C. 154.

If proof be given that the declarant's death was imminent and that he had abandoned all hope of living, it is not necessary to show that he believed his death would ensue immediately.

Appeal of Perry against her conviction for murder by means of an illegal operation performed on 9th April. On 14th April the deceased had a miscarriage, and on the 16th, early in the morning, the deceased, in answer to her sister's question, "Maggie, what did you have that woman for?" replied, "Oh, Gert, I shall go. But keep this a secret. Let the worst come to the worst," adding a statement of what the prisoner had done to her. The deceased died the same evening. Lawrence, J., admitted the statement as a dying declaration.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J. . . . In R. v. Peel, 2 F. & F. 21, Willes, J., said: "It must be proved that the man was dying and there must be a settled hopeless expectation of death in the declarant." That sentence expresses in very clear and crisp language the rule which I have been trying to explain. In R. v. Gloster, 16 Cox, C. C. 471, Charles, J., examining the cases, . . . said, "In the latest case of all, R. v. Osman, 15 Cox, C. C. 1, Lush, L.J., lays down the principle in these terms: 'A dying declaration is admitted in evidence because it is presumed that no person who is immediately going into the presence of his Maker, will do so with a lie on his lips. But the person making the declaration must entertain a settled hopeless expectation of immediate death. If he thinks he will die to-morrow it will not do.' That is the judgment of Willes, J., with this addition, that Lush, L.J., inserts the word 'immediate' before 'death.' With the greatest deference I would prefer to adopt the language of Willes, J., and say that the declarant must be under a 'settled hopeless expectation of death.' 'Immediate death' must be construed in the sense of death impending, not on the instant, but within a very, very short distance indeed." In other words, the test is whether all hope of life has been abandoned so that the person making the statement thinks that death must follow. I now propose to apply that principle to the present case. . . . If the expression "I shall go" is taken alone, it might mean "I shall die some day"; but, taking into consideration the whole sentence, we concur with Lawrence, J., that the statement was made by the deceased with the hopeless expectation of death.

Appeal dismissed.

[Note.—If the above conditions are proved, the fact that the deceased subsequently entertained hope will not exclude the declaration (R. v. Austin, 8 Cr. App. R. 27).]

R. v. PIKE.

SHROPSHIRE ASSIZES. 1829.

3 C. & P. 598.

A dying declaration is not admissible unless the declarant would have been competent as a witness, if living, and was mentally capable of appreciating his condition. Thus, imbecility or tender age may exclude the declaration.

The prisoner being indicted for murder of a child aged four years, it was proposed to put in evidence, as a dying declaration, what the child said shortly before her death. It was held that it was inadmissible.

PARK, J. We allow the declaration of persons in articulo mortis to be given in evidence, if it appear that the person making such declaration was then under the deep impression that he was soon to render an account to his Maker. Now, as this child was but four years old, it is quite impossible that she, however precocious her mind, could have had that idea of a future state which is necessary to make such a declaration admissible. . . .

Note.—As to the competency of deceased declarants generally, see Phipson, 276—7.

DECLARATIONS AS TO WILLS.

SUGDEN v. ST. LEONARDS.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1876.

L. R. 1 P. D. 154; 45 L. J. P. 49; 34 L. T. 369;
24 W. R. 479.

When a question arises as to the contents, genuineness or identity of a will, whether existing, lost or destroyed, statements or declarations made by the testator concerning such will, either prior thereto, as to his testamentary intentions, or (perhaps) subsequent thereto, as to his testamentary acts, are admissible in proof thereof.

The will of Lord St. Leonards (the celebrated Lord Chancellor) was missing at his death, and was never found. A daughter of the deceased wrote out the contents of the will from memory, there being no draft or copy of it. The daughter had lived with the testator all her life; he had constantly consulted her about the will and explained its provisions to her, and she had from time to time assisted him to make and alter it. Her statement of the will was in some degree corroborated by other papers of the testator, and also by his verbal statements made after the execution of the will to his friends and relatives.

The Court held that such statements or declarations made by the testator, whether before or after the execution of the will, were admissible as evidence of its contents, and granted probate of the will as written down by the daughter.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . When the idea of the testator's having himself destroyed the will is done away with, the next question is, whether the will having been lost, secondary evidence can be given of its contents? Now that question is disposed of by the authority of the case of Brown v. Brown (8 E. & B. 876), which, as I think, has been recognised as perfectly sound. There Lord Campbell says, "Parol evidence of the contents of a lost instrument may be received as much when it is a will as if it were any other document," and in that I, for one, most entirely concur. The consequence of a contrary ruling would be most mischievous. It would enable any person who desired, from some sinister motive, to frustrate the testamentary dispositions of a dead man. . . .

. . . The third question is, whether we have before us sufficient evidence of the contents of the will. This depends upon the evidence of Miss Sugden, and, I must say, upon her evidence alone, to this extent, that if we had not her evidence, all the other parol, and even the documentary evidence in the case, would not enable us to say that we had ascertained the contents of the will so as to give effect to it. . . .

The question presents itself whether the declarations of the testator can be received as secondary evidence of the contents of the lost will. No doubt, generally speaking, where secondary evidence is admissible, if oral, it must be given on oath; if documentary, it must be verified on oath. Nevertheless, the declarations of deceased persons are, in several instances, admitted as exceptions to the general rule, when such persons had peculiar means of knowledge, and may be supposed to have been without motive to speak otherwise than according to the truth. It is obvious that a man who has made his will stands pre-eminently in that position. He must be taken to know the contents of the will he has made. If he speaks of its provisions, he can have no motive for misrepresenting them, except in the rare instances in which a testator may have the intention of misleading by his statements respecting his will. Generally speaking, statements of this kind are honestly made, and this class of evidence may be put on the same footing with the declarations of members of a family in matters of pedigree, evidence not always to be relied upon, yet sufficiently so to make it worth admitting, leaving its effect to be judged of by those who have to decide the case. . . .

I entertain no doubt that prior instructions, or a draft authenticated by the testator, or verbal declarations of what he was about to do, though of course not conclusive evidence, are yet legally admissible as secondary evidence of the contents of a lost will. . . . The question is simply one of the admissibility of secondary evidence, and has to be determined by the rules of evidence alone. I am, therefore, decidedly of opinion that all statements or declarations, written or oral, made by a testator prior to the execution of the will are admissible as evidence of its contents. . . .

See below ↗

The admissibility of declarations made subsequently to the execution of the will creates greater difficulties by reason of a dictum of Lord Campbell and a decision of Lord Penzance. In principle there appears to me to be no distinction. The position of the testator is the same, both as respects peculiar knowledge and motive for speaking the truth, which can be no less than the motives which he has for making statements as to his intentions prior to the execution of the will. . . .

I am therefore of opinion that the various statements of Lord St. Leonards, whether before or after the execution of his will, are admissible to prove the contents of the will. . . .

JESSEL, M.R. . . . Can we admit, as a matter of course, secondary evidence in proof of a will? Now I should have thought there could be but one answer to that question. . . . The meaning of secondary evidence is to supply the loss by accident or otherwise of primary evidence. . . . The whole theory of secondary evidence depends upon this, that the primary evidence is lost, and that it is against justice that the accident of the loss should deprive a man of the rights to which he would otherwise be entitled. I am at a loss to discover any reason whatever for distinguishing between the loss of a will and the loss of a deed. . . .

The next point, and one no doubt also of great importance, is what secondary evidence is admissible. In this particular instance there is the evidence of a person who had seen the will, and the real point to be considered and decided is, whether that evidence can be confirmed or corroborated by declarations of the testator made either to that witness or to other persons, and, if so, whether those declarations to be admissible in evidence must be limited to declarations made at or before the execution of the will, or may be extended to declarations made after the execution of the will. . . .

As a rule the declarations, whether in writing or oral, made by deceased persons, are in our law not admissible in evidence at all. But so inconvenient was the law upon this subject, so frequently has it shut out the only obtainable evidence, so frequently would it have caused a most crying and intolerable injustice, that a large number of exceptions have been made to the general rule. . . .

(His Lordship here deals with the exceptions.)

Now I take it that the principle which underlies all these exceptions is the same. In the first place, it must be a case in which it is difficult to obtain other evidence, for no doubt the ground for admitting the exceptions was that very difficulty. In the next place, the declarant must be disinterested; that is, disinterested in the sense that the declaration was not made in favour of his interest. And, thirdly, the declaration must be made before dispute or litigation, so that it was made without bias on account of the existence of dispute or litigation which the declarant might be supposed to favour. Lastly, and this appears to me one of the strongest reasons for admitting it, the declarant must have had peculiar knowledge—knowledge not possessed in ordinary cases.

Now you will find that all these reasons . . . exist in this case, that is the case of a testator declaring the contents of his will. Of course, as in the case of pedigree, the Courts must be careful and cautious in admitting such evidence. From its very nature it is evidence not open to the test of cross-examination, it is very often produced at second or third hand, and is therefore particularly liable to lose something of its colour in the course of transmission. It is so easily and so frequently fabricated that all Courts which dispose of such cases must be especially on their guard. But that only goes to the question as to the weight to be attributed to the evidence when admitted; it does not go to the question of admitting the evidence itself, and I must say it appears to me that, having regard to the reasons and principles which have induced the tribunals of this country to admit exceptions in the other cases to which I have referred, we should be equally justified and equally bound to admit it in this case. . . .

I should, therefore, entirely concur with the Lord Chief Justice's conclusion that this evidence would be admissible, not only as regards that portion which was anterior to the execution of the will, but also as regards that portion of it which is posterior to its execution. . . .

JAMES, L.J., and BAGGALLAY concurred.

MELLISH, L.J., dissented as regarded the post-testamentary statements only.

Note.—It is very doubtful whether this case should be put under the head of "Hearsay." It might certainly be placed under the head of "Secondary Evidence" of documents (see post, p. 339). For a good discussion of the question see Phipson, 6th ed., 324—6. It should also be observed particularly that the admissibility of the evidence of the testator's post-testamentary statements has been seriously questioned (Id.; Woodward v. Goulstone, 11 App. Cas. 469; Atkinson v. Morris, [1897] P. 40; Quick v. Quick, 3 S. & T. 442).

IN THE GOODS OF RIPLEY.

PROBATE. 1858.

1 Sw. & Tr. 68; 6 W. R. 460; 4 JUR. (N.S.) 342.

Declarations or statements made by a testator are not admissible as evidence to prove the due execution of his will, or an interlineation or alteration.

In 1850, the deceased, when in India, sent to his brother, in England, a copy of his will, which did not contain testator's signature, names of witnesses or attestation clause. In 1857, the deceased sent to his brother a copy of a codicil, headed "Codicil No. 1, to my will, written at Delhi, 18th February, 1857." It bore the signatures of the testator and of two witnesses. A letter accompanying it referred to the will of 1850. After testator's death neither will nor codicil could be found. Probate of the same was refused.

The following is from the Jurist:—

SIR C. CRESSWELL. I have great difficulty as to the execution of these papers. There is no doubt as to their contents; the only proof of the execution is the statement of the deceased himself. . . . Upon principle, it seems to me, that there being no proof of the factum of the will, except the declaration of the supposed testator, the prayer must be refused. But as the circumstances of the case made me anxious to grant probate if possible, I have caused inquiries to be made whether any precedent could be found in the registry, but no such is forthcoming. There is a case at common law (Doe d. Shallcross v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747) which inclines the other way. The Court there refused to admit declarations of a testator made after the execution of a will, as to an interlineation it contained; à fortiori such declarations could not be received as to the whole will. I must therefore reject the motion.

EVIDENCE IN FORMER PROCEEDINGS.

MAYOR OF DONCASTER v. DAY.

COMMON PLEAS. 1810.

3 TAUNTON, 262; 12 R. R. 650.

When a witness, who gave evidence in a former proceeding between the same parties, or their privies, involving the same issue and subject to cross-examination, is dead, or unable to attend, or to give reliable evidence at, the second trial (for certain recognised reasons), his evidence so given may be proved by any person who heard it.

A new trial having been granted, application was made that, if any of the witnesses, many of whom were very aged, should die or become unable to attend the second trial, their evidence given on the former occasion might be read at the next trial.

SIR J. MANSFIELD, C.J. You do not want a rule of Court for that purpose. What a witness, since dead, has sworn upon a trial between the same parties, may, without any order of the Court, be given in evidence, either from the Judges's notes, or from notes that have been taken by any other person, who will swear to their accuracy; or the former evidence may be proved by any person who will swear from his memory to its having been given.

HEATH, J., concurred.

Note.—[Stephen treats testimony given in former trials as hearsay evidence admissible by exception (art. 32). This is unusual; for the security both of an oath and of cross-examination (the absence of which constitutes the main objection to hearsay) are here preserved, the only missing factor being the demeanour of the deponent.]

The events in which such evidence is admissible are not quite clear. It certainly cannot be given unless the witness cannot, in the opinion of the Court, reasonably be expected to attend on the second occasion. If he be (1) dead, (2) permanently insane, or (3) kept out of the way by the adverse party, it seems the evidence is clearly admissible; but if he be (4) ill or (5) out of the jurisdiction, or (6) he cannot be found, then it would seem to be a question for the Court, having regard to the special circumstances.

Under the former Chancery practice, an order was required to read such evidence, but it is now provided generally that an order is not necessary (see Order 37, r. 3, post, p. 513).

It has been held that this rule does not enable the Court to grant leave to use the evidence of witnesses in another action, between other parties on a similar issue, with a view to avoid the expense of a commission to take evidence (Printing etc. Co. v. Drucker, [1894] 2 Q. B. 801). The only object of the rule is to save the expense of the order required under the former Chancery practice. It does not affect the law as to the admissibility of such evidence.

With regard to evidence given at an earlier stage of the same proceedings, see Order 37, r. 25 (post, p. 515).

LLANOVER v. HOMFRAY.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1881.

L. R. 19 CH. D. 224; 30 W. R. 557.

Evidence given in former proceedings is admissible in subsequent proceedings although the parties in the subsequent proceedings are not personally the same, provided they are the privies of or claim through the former parties.

Thus, where in 1815 evidence was given in an action between manorial tenants and the lord of a manor as to a manorial right; and in 1881 another action was tried, as to the same right, between the manorial tenants and the lord of the manor of that time, none of whom were personally parties to the former suit, yet, as they were all "privies in estate" of the former parties, the evidence given in the former action, by witnesses since deceased, was admitted in the latter action.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

JESSEL, M.R. . . . The question has been raised whether this evidence is admissible in the present suit. I must say that I have no doubt whatever that it is. The previous suit was a suit by persons who were privies in estate with the present tenants; they were not, indeed, owners of the same estate, but as the suit was on behalf of all the tenants it included the then owners of the estate now belonging to the Messrs. Phillips, and on the other side there was a lord of the manor, who is now represented by the present lord of the manor. Therefore it was a suit between persons privy in estate to the parties in the present action. The issue in that suit was the same as that in the present action, and the evidence in one is therefore admissible in the other. Why should the evidence not be admissible? The lord had an opportunity of cross-examining, and the evidence answers every condition of admissibility, the last condition being that the witnesses must be dead or not producible, which, of course, is the case now with these old witnesses. . . . If the witnesses were now alive, of course their evidence could not be read, but they must be called. There is, in my opinion, no more objection to reading this evidence than there is in any other case where the witnesses have been called and are dead. If a witness gave evidence at the trial of an action, and a new trial was ordered, then if he were dead at the time of the new trial you would read his former evidence; but if he were alive you could not do so, but would have to call him again.

BAGGALLAY and LUSH, L.JJ., concurred.

Note.—As to "privies," see ante, p. 45.

MORGAN v. NICHOLL.

COMMON PLEAS. 1866.

L. R. 2 C. P. 117; 36 L. J. C. P. 86; 15 L. T. 184;
15 W. R. 110; 12 JUR. N. S. 963.

Evidence given in former proceedings is not admissible in subsequent proceedings merely on the ground that the parties in both proceedings claim in the same right. The parties must either be the same, or the later parties must claim under the former parties,

In 1856, A. brought an action of ejectment against X., and in 1866 B., the father of A., brought a similar action against the same defendant, claiming the same property under the same title. The plaintiff in the later action was not allowed to read in evidence a shorthand writer's notes of the evidence given in the action of 1856, by a relation of the plaintiff, who gave evidence as to the pedigree, but who had since died.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

ERLE, C.J. . . . If that former trial had been in an action brought against the defendant by the present plaintiff, or anyone claiming under him, the evidence would have been admissible. But the evidence ought not to be admissible against the defendant unless it would also have been admissible against the present plaintiff. In my opinion, the two plaintiffs, that is to say, the plaintiff in the present action and the plaintiff in the former one, are perfect strangers. On the former trial, the plaintiff, who was the son of the plaintiff in the present action, claimed under his father, in the belief that his father was dead; and on that trial this evidence of Henry Morgan was admitted. It turned out, however, that the father was not dead, and he has since brought this action, in which he is a perfect stranger to the son, so far as this rule of law is concerned. If the defendant had wanted to have used this evidence against the plaintiff in this action, he could not have done so; and therefore I think the evidence was not admissible for the plaintiff.

WILLES, J. The question is, whether the rule as to the admissibility of evidence given by a witness on a former trial of the same matter in dispute, and between the same parties or their privies, extends to the present case; that is to say, whether all relations in blood are bound by or may take advantage of the rule, because the only thing here connecting the present plaintiff with the plaintiff in the former action is the relationship of blood, the present plaintiff being the father of the former plaintiff. The argument would be the same if the two plaintiffs had been cousins, which shows its absurdity. . . . He is no privy to the plaintiff in the former action, since a father does not claim through his son. . . . There has been no case in which the evidence has been admitted where the parties to the action were not parties to the former action, except they were persons who claimed under such former parties. . . .

KEATING, J. . . . The defendant was party to the former action, but the plaintiff was not, nor was he claiming under the plaintiff in the former action. A son is obliged to claim through his father; but the father does not claim through the son, and for the present purpose they are strangers.

BYLES, J., concurred.

STATEMENTS IN PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

STURLA v. FRECCIA.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1880.

L. R. 5 A. C. 623; 50 L. J. CH. 86; 43 L. T. 209;
29 W. R. 217; 44 J. P. 212.

Entries or statements in "public documents," such as official books and registers, British or foreign, are evidence against every one, provided there was a legal duty to make such entries for public information or reference, and they were made in proper time by the proper officers, after proper inquiry.

Although foreign public documents are within the rule, yet the report of a committee appointed by a public department in a foreign state, though addressed to that department and acted on by the Government, was not admitted in the English Court as evidence of the facts stated therein; there being no evidence of any such legal duty, to make either the entries therein, or any particular inquiries on which they were based, nor any evidence that such report was to be for public reference.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD SELBORNE, L.C. . . . There is abundant proof that the report which contains the passage it is desired to use is an authentic public document of the Genoese Government, to which, so far as the good faith of those who made it is concerned, credit might be justly given on any occasion on which it might properly be used. But . . . it does not appear that any particular rules were prescribed to them as to the kind of information which they should collect; still less as to the evidence which they were to require to substantiate such information. . . . It appears to me to have been perfectly open to its members to receive any species of information, or hearsay or otherwise, to which they themselves at the moment thought credit could be given; and therefore, I am unable to apply to them any analogy derived from the cases of Courts, Commissioners, or other persons having a special duty or authority under the English law to make particular kinds of inquiries. . . .

LORD HATHERLEY. . . . When you come to look at the character of the document which is sought to be produced, what do you find? There are no original entries to be found in that document, but there appear to have been books kept, although we have not any very precise information about how they were kept, or whose duty it was to keep them, and the like. . . . I do not think this comes near the case of the heralds' books, nor the commissions for making specific inquiries, these specific inquiries falling plainly under the head of a discharge of a duty, which duty is discharged in the only proper manner in which it could be discharged; and, therefore, the law taking notice that such had been the course of investigation or inquiry and such had been the result of the due execution by the commission of that duty, gives credit to what the return states upon the matter. . . .

LORD BLACKBURN. . . . It is an established rule of law that public documents are admitted for certain purposes. What a public document is, within that sense, is of course the great point which we have now to consider. . . . It should be a public inquiry, a public document, and made by a public officer. I do not think that "public" there is to be taken in the sense of meaning the whole world. I think an entry in the books of a manor is public in the sense that it concerns all the people interested in the manor. And an entry probably in a corporation book concerning a corporate matter, or something in which all the corporation is concerned, would be "public" within that sense. But it must be a public document, and it must be made by a public officer. I understand a public document there to mean a document that is made for the purpose of the public making use of it, and being able to refer to it. It is meant to be where there is a judicial, or quasi-judicial, duty to inquire, as might be said to be the case with the bishop acting under the writs issued by the Crown. That may be said to be quasi-judicial. He is acting for the public when that is done; but I think the very object of it must be that it should be made for the purpose of being kept public, so that the persons concerned in it may have access to it afterwards. . . . Can the document in this case be said to come within that class of cases? I think it is impossible to look at it in that way. There is not the slightest evidence, or the least circumstance, to lead me to the conclusion that it was even intended that this private and confidential report should be seen by anyone interested in it. It was meant for private information, to guide the discretion of the Government. It was not, like the bishop's return of the first-fruits, for the public information, to be kept in the office and to be seen by all in the diocese who might be concerned when there came to be any litigation.

LORD WATSON. . . . It does not appear to me that the duty cast upon the committee necessarily, or even by fair implication, involved the necessity of making any quasi-judicial or strict inquiry into the circumstances which they were about to report. . . . The sort of commission that was given here was one of a very roving description to find out every little circumstance, whatever it might be, wherever they could pick it up, and in whatever manner they could ascertain it. . . . I cannot conceive, when you take these circumstances into consideration along with the undoubted fact that this was not made for the purpose of being recorded in a public register, that it can have the authority of a public register. . . .

Note.—There are two special rules respecting “public documents”—

- (1) Statements in them are evidence against every one.
 - (2) They can always be proved by secondary evidence, i.e., copies.
- The first point only is in question here. The second is dealt with post, p. 344.

“The very gist of such documents,” it has been well said, “is that they contain a statement of some matter of fact by a person duly authorized to make it, who is not, save in very exceptional cases, called as a witness. And the guarantee of their credibility consists in the public duty of the official who keeps them to ascertain the truth of the matters to be recorded, and to make accurate entries of them in the public interest for the purpose of reference” (Wills, 233). In connection with this matter, the presumption of regularity in public offices should be borne in mind (see ante, p. 32).

Among such “public documents” may be mentioned the following:—Public Statutes, the London Gazette, Registers of births, marriages and deaths, and other public Registers, Surveys of Crown lands, maps, plans and charts attached to Inclosure Awards and public Inquisitions.

But ancient documents such as surveys, estimates and petitions of a private character, produced from the Record Office, which do not affect the King’s property or revenues, are not public documents in the above sense. Nor are confidential plans or reports made to the War Office, not intended as permanent records (Mercer v. Denne, [1905] 2 Ch. 538, cited on other points, ante, p. 229).

As regards maps and plans, it appears that they may be admissible in evidence, although they are not strictly public documents, if they are published maps or plans generally offered for sale to the public, as to matters of public notoriety, but not as to matters of private concern. Thus maps of Australia were admitted in the Tichborne Case, and of South Africa in the Jameson Case. As to the admissibility of maps and plans in other cases, see Phipson, 378—9.

R. v. SUTTON.

KING'S BENCH. 1816.

4 M. & S. 532.

Recitals in public Acts of Parliament are, like direct statements in public documents and State Papers, generally, "prima facie" evidence against every one.

Thus, to prove that certain organised outrages had occurred in various parts of England, recitals that such outrages had occurred, contained in a public Statute, and in a Royal Proclamation offering a reward for the discovery of the offenders, were held admissible.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. . . . Public Acts of Parliament are binding upon every subject, because every subject is, in judgment of law, privy to the making of them, and therefore supposed to know them, and formerly the usage was for the sheriff to proclaim them at his county court; and yet what every subject is supposed to know, and what the Judge is bound judicially to take notice of, it is said the jury cannot advert to; for if this evidence was inadmissible, it must be because the jury could not be charged with it.

Next as to the proclamation; I consider it as an act of State. The proclamation recites, that it had been represented to the Prince Regent, that a number of persons had committed various acts of outrage in the town, and in different parts of the county of Nottingham, etc.; and that the Prince Regent has thought it necessary to propound certain rewards for the discovery and conviction of the persons concerned in such proceedings. The propounding of these rewards necessarily implies that such acts of outrage have actually been committed, for otherwise it would have been nugatory to propound them. I do not say that it was conclusive evidence of the fact that these outrages were committed; but surely it was admissible and, like other acts of State, to be laid before the jury. . . .

LE BLANC, J. . . . This evidence consists of the King's proclamation, reciting that it had been represented that certain disturbances caused by persons employed in the stocking manufactories had taken place in Nottingham and several parts of the county, and offering a reward for the discovery and apprehension of offenders. There are likewise two Acts of Parliament reciting in their preambles the existence of these outrages, and making provision in the body of them, the first, for the more exemplary punishment of persons committing these outrages; the second, for the better preserving the peace, by enforcing the duties of watching and warding. When the nature of these documents is considered, is it possible to say that they were not admissible, particularly as the libel refers to the conduct of the persons called Luddites in destroying frames in Nottingham and the neighbourhood, and compares that conduct with the conduct of the military in America? Are not the documents material to show that these disturbances existed in Nottingham, and existed to such a degree as to call for the interference of the Executive Government and the Legislature, to offer reward for their discovery, and to inflict a more exemplary punishment upon them, and to protect the peaceable inhabitants by compelling the observance of watch and ward? Surely they were evidence for this purpose, when the inquiry respected a libel of the description laid in the information, tending, as it is charged, to alienate the minds of the subjects from the King and Government, and to make them think that what had been condemned at Nottingham by the Government, was held laudable in America; when, according to the language of the libel, they were singing a new tune to an old song. I cannot see therefore any ground on which these public instruments could be objected to as inadmissible. They seem to me to go clearly to prove the facts which are alleged, because they show in what way the Executive Government and the Legislature acted upon them. . . .

BAYLEY, J. . . . The proclamation sets forth, that it had been represented to the Prince Regent that a number of persons, chiefly of those employed in the stocking manufactories, had actually committed various acts of outrage; it is therefore an assertion on the part of His Royal Highness, that such a representation had been made to him, and he proceeds to act upon it, by offering a reward for the discovery of the offenders. This I think was evidence to this extent, and no farther, that a representation was made to the Executive Government that such outrages existed, and that the Executive Government thought fit to act upon it; for they so far acted as to promulgate an Act of State upon it. . . .

The preambles to the two Acts of Parliament I think are still more free from objection than the proclamation, and they assume as facts that outrages did exist. When we consider in what manner an Act of Parliament is passed, and that it is a public proceeding in all its stages, and challenges public inquiry, and when passed is in contemplation of law the act of the whole body, it seems to me that its recital must be taken as admissible evidence. . . .

BRETT v. BEALES.

NISI PRIUS. 1829.

1 Moo. & M. 416; 34 R. R. 499.

Recitals or statements of fact in private Acts of Parliament are evidence only against the parties to them, even although they may be declared to be public for the purpose of proof.

A private Act, authorising the making and maintaining of a navigable canal, contained a recital that the Corporation of Cambridge were entitled to divers tolls. The plaintiff was the lessee of the tolls under the Corporation of Cambridge, and he brought the action to recover such tolls. In support of the claim it was proposed to read the said recital as evidence, it being urged that the Act was for this purpose to be treated as a public statute (in which case the recital would have been evidence), as it was provided "that this Act should be deemed and taken to be a public Act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such by all Judges, justices, and others, without being specially pleaded." It was held that the recital was not admissible in evidence.

LORD TENTERDEN, C.J. The point is quite new, and of great importance, as it will apply to so large a class of statutes. . . .

Two grounds have been laid for the admission of this evidence: the one, that the concluding clause renders it admissible as a public Act; the other, that even independently of this clause, it is so from its nature. The answer given to the first was that the clause only applied to the forms of pleading, and did not vary the general nature and operation of the Act. I was inclined to that opinion at the time, and my learned brothers agree with me in that impression. We also think that the second ground fails. It is said that the bill gives a power of levying a toll on all the King's subjects, and therefore the Act is public; the power given is not so extensive, it is only to levy toll on such as shall think fit to use the navigation. The ground, therefore, on which it is said the Act is public, and the evidence admissible, fails; and I cannot receive it.

Note.—It was customary, before the year 1850, to insert a clause in private Acts of Parliament declaring that the same should be deemed public and be judicially noticed. The effect of this clause was to dispense with the necessity, not only of pleading the Act specially, but of producing an examined copy, or a copy printed by the Printer for the Crown; a public Act requiring neither to be specially pleaded nor proved. By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, it was enacted: "That every Act made after the commencement of this Act shall be deemed and taken to be a public Act, and shall be judicially taken notice of as such, unless the contrary be expressly provided and declared by such Act" (see ante, p. 16). This provision is now repealed by the Interpretation Act, 1889, 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, which provides, by sect. 9, that every Act passed after 1850 "shall be a public Act and shall be judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary is expressly provided by the Act" (see post, p. 460). ✓

THE MODE OF PROOF.

Three modes of proof are allowed by law:—

- (1) Statements by Witnesses.
- (2) Reading of Documents.
- (3) Inspection of Things.

Three kinds of evidence consequently appear:—

- (1) Oral or Parol Evidence.
- (2) Documentary Evidence.
- (3) Real Evidence.

It is proposed to deal with these several modes of proof and kinds of evidence in the order indicated.

Attention should be called to an important general rule laid down for use in the Supreme Court by Order 30, r. 7, to the effect that, on the hearing of a Summons for Directions an order may be made that evidence of any fact shall be given by statement of information or belief, by production of documents or entries in books, or by copies or otherwise as directed (see post, p. 509). This rule does not appear to have been extensively used, except in the Commercial Court, where it is frequently used to expedite or cheapen litigation, especially when evidence from places abroad is required, by allowing evidence of facts to be given by affidavits, letters, and other documents, instead of taking evidence by commission. The Commercial Court, although bound by the ordinary rules of evidence, can and does make the most of the Rules of Court at its disposal (Baerlein v. Chartered Bank, [1895] 2 Ch. 488).

ORAL EVIDENCE.

The general rule may be thus stated:—

The law requires oral evidence to be given—

- (1) by legally competent witnesses;
- (2) upon oath or affirmation;
- (3) in regular course of examination;
- (4) subject to contradiction as to facts;
- (5) and to discredit as to veracity;
- (6) and to privilege in refusing to answer.

The cases following are intended to illustrate successively these several features of the rule, and their exceptions or qualifications.

COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES.

Evidence must be given by legally competent witnesses. The normal man is competent, and presumed to be so. The law of competency is therefore practically the law of incompetency, consisting of rules of exclusion.

Formerly there were several grounds of exclusion of witnesses, the chief being (1) incompetency from interest, and (2) incompetency from mental incapacity. On the former ground, not only were parties themselves and their husbands and wives excluded, but also all persons who were in pari jure with either party, or otherwise substantially interested in the proceedings. Successive Statutes have abolished this kind of incompetency, leaving the fact of interest in the proceedings to affect credibility merely.

The change in the law of incompetency from interest was effected by the following steps:—

1833. The incompetency of persons in pari jure with the parties was abolished (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42).

1843. The Evidence Act provided that no person should be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime or interest, save the parties themselves or persons on whose behalf the action was brought or defended, and their husbands and wives (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85). See post, p. 419.

1846. The County Courts Act provided that parties and their wives might give evidence in the new County Courts (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).

1851. The Evidence Act made parties to all civil proceedings, and the persons on whose behalf they were instituted, competent and compellable to give evidence, except in breach of promise and adultery cases (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99). See post, p. 424.

1853. The Evidence Act made husbands and wives of parties, etc., to civil proceedings competent and compellable witnesses except in adultery cases (16 & 17 Vict. c. 83). See post, p. 427.

1869. The Evidence Act made parties in breach of promise and adultery cases, and their husbands and wives, competent witnesses (32 & 33 Vict. c. 68). See post, p. 445.

1882. The Married Women's Property Act made husbands and wives competent to give evidence against each other in proceedings under the Act for protection of her separate property (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75). See post, p. 455.

1898. The Criminal Evidence Act made persons charged, and their husbands and wives, competent witnesses (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36). See post, p. 468.

Other Acts, from 1833 to 1909, have simplified oaths and substituted affirmations, etc., and may be said to have rendered many persons competent witnesses.

Mental incompetency is a question of degree only, as appears from the cases given below. Stress is laid, in the older cases, upon the ability to understand the nature of an oath. The real question now is generally considered to be— is the witness mentally capable of understanding and giving an intelligible account of the matter in question?

The preceding observations refer to ordinary witnesses speaking to facts which any person may fairly be presumed to understand. There are some cases in which competency must be proved before evidence is admissible, as in the case of expert witnesses (see ante, p. 124), and deceased declarants (see ante, p. 228).

It appears that the objection to competency of a witness may be taken at any time, but should, of course, be taken as soon as there appears any doubt on the matter; before the witness is sworn, if possible. But even after a witness has been sworn and given his evidence the objection can be taken and his evidence struck out if untrustworthy (R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. 33; Jacobs v. Layborn, 11 M. & W. 685 (see post, p. 405)).

The question of competency is for the Judge to determine (see ante, p. 11). The preliminary examination of a proposed witness by the Judge used to be known as examination on the voir dire, a special form of oath being administered.

COMPELLABILITY OF WITNESSES.

It should be observed that "competency" is not identical with "compellability." A witness may be competent, but not compellable. It is said that Sovereigns and Ambassadors are competent but not compellable. Generally, however, persons who are competent are compellable also, to give evidence, although they may not be compellable to answer certain questions, being excused so far on the ground of privilege (see post, p. 303). But, apart from special privilege, there are a few cases where competency and compellability do not go together.

Thus, in criminal proceedings, the person charged is always competent, but not compellable (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, ss. 1, 6, see post, p. 468). And the husband or wife of the person charged is generally not compellable, even when competent, without such person's consent (see below). Also, in civil proceedings, the parties to actions for breach of promise of marriage, or proceedings in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of parties in proceedings in consequence of adultery, would appear to be competent but not compellable, although a contrary view is sometimes taken. The difficulty in this case has arisen from the doubtful wording of the statutes on the matter, as follows:—

The Evidence Act, 1851, provided, by s. 2, that parties to an action should, except as thereafter excepted, be competent and compellable; and, by s. 4, proceedings in consequence of adultery and for breach of promise of marriage were excepted (see post, p. 424).

The Evidence Amendment Act, 1853, provided, by s. 1, that husbands and wives of parties should, except as thereafter excepted, be competent and compellable; and, by s. 2, proceedings in consequence of adultery were excepted (see post, p. 427).

The Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869, repealed, by s. 1, the above-mentioned provisions of s. 4 of the Act of 1851, and s. 1 of the Act of 1853; and provided, by s. 2, that parties to an action for breach of promise of marriage should be competent, and, by s. 3, that parties to proceedings in consequence of adultery and their husbands and wives should be competent (see post, p. 445).

As a result, it may be urged on the one hand, that, as the exception sections of the two former Acts are totally repealed by the later Act, the two former Acts must be read as rendering parties and their husbands and wives competent and compellable in all civil proceedings, without exception. If, indeed, nothing further had been said on the matter in the later Act, this contention would seem to have been unanswerable. But the later Act in express terms provides that the persons in question shall be competent. It seems difficult to conclude, in face of this express word, that the Legislature meant compellable also, when they were directly dealing with Acts in which the expression competent and compellable was used. It is true that the dictum of Lopes, J., in Nottingham v. Tomkinson (L. R. 4 C. P. D. 350) is to the contrary, but this case can scarcely be relied upon as settling the question. [The author's view on this point, which is shared by Wills, 2nd ed., 130—1, seems untenable. It was negatived by Taylor, § 1353 n., as well as by Lopes, J., as stated above.]

The question of husbands and wives of parties as witnesses, although partially dealt with above, is so important that it deserves separate treatment.

HUSBANDS AND WIVES AS WITNESSES.

The general rule of the common law, both in civil and in criminal proceedings, was that husbands and wives of parties thereto were incompetent to give evidence, either for or against them. In civil cases there appear to have been no exceptions at all. In criminal cases, however, there was an exception where either husband or wife charged the other with personal injury or violence. Legislation on the matter appears to have produced the following result.

(a) In civil proceedings, husbands and wives appear to have been rendered competent in every case, and compellable also, with the exception of questions as to their adultery in divorce proceedings. (Evidence Amendment Act, 1853, ss. 1—2; Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869, ss. 1, 3, see post, pp. 427, 445.)

(b) In criminal proceedings, husbands and wives of persons charged are always competent witnesses; but, generally, only on the application of the person charged. They are, however, competent witnesses without the consent of the person charged in proceedings for the following matters:—

(1) Personal injury or violence committed by the husband or wife to or against the wife or husband. (Common law, see post, p. 267; Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 4 (2), see post, p. 470.)

(2) Non-repair of, or nuisance to, a highway, river, or bridge, or any other indictment or proceeding for the purpose of enforcing civil rights only. (Evidence Act, 1877, s. 1, see post, p. 449; Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 6 (1), see post, p. 470.)

(3) Neglecting to maintain, or deserting, wife or family under the Yagrancy Act, 1824. (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 4 (1) and Schedule, see post, p. 470.)

(4) The following offences under the Offences against the Person Act, 1861. Rape (s. 48), indecent assault (s. 52), abduction of women and girls (ss. 53—55). (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 4 (1) and Schedule, see post, p. 470.) Exposing children whereby life endangered (s. 27), abduction of girls under sixteen (s. 55), child stealing (s. 56). (Children Act, 1908, s. 27 and First Schedule, see post, pp. 488, 491.) Also the following offences against a child or young person under the same Act: Manslaughter (s. 5), common assault or battery (s. 42), aggravated assault on females or boys under fourteen (s. 43), indecent assault (s. 52), attempt to commit unnatural offence (s. 62). (Children Act, 1908, s. 27 and First Schedule, see post, pp. 488, 491.)

(5) Offences under the Dangerous Performances Acts, 1879 and 1897. (Children Act, 1908, s. 27, and First Schedule, see post, pp. 488, 491.)

(6) Protection or security of property of husband or wife of the person prosecuting, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 12 and 16. (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 4 (1) and Schedule, see post, p. 470.)

(7) Offences against girls and women, under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. (Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 4 (1) and Schedule, see post, p. 470.)

(8) Offences under the Vagrancy Act, 1898. (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, s. 7 (6), see post, p. 497.)

(9) Offences under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904. (S. 12, see post, p. 475.)

(10) Offences under the Incest Act, 1908. (S. 4 (4), see post, p. 483.)

(11) Offences under the Children Act, 1908, Part II. (S. 27, see post, p. 488.)

(12) Offences under the Children (Employment Abroad) Act, 1913. (S. 3 (4), see post, p. 498.)

(13) Bigamy. (Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 28 (3), see post, p. 499.)

(14) Offences involving bodily injury to a child or young person (other than those under heads (4) and (5), supra). (Children Act, 1908, s. 27 and First Schedule, see post, pp. 488, 491.)

And it is sometimes said:—

(15) Treason.—There is great doubt concerning this, as there is no statutory provision on the matter, nor apparently, any decision, and writers differ on the question. (See Taylor, 11th ed., § 1372; Best, 12th ed., § 178.) The better opinion appears to be against competency without consent.

Here again, as in connection with civil proceedings (see ante, p. 259), doubt has arisen on the question of compellability. There are obviously only two positions to be provided for, that in which the witness is "competent and compellable," and that in which the witness is "competent but not compellable," and if the Legislature had kept to the two expressions indicated there could have been no doubt. But the expressions used by Statute in the various cases mentioned above are as follows:—

(a) In case (2) "admissible and compellable" (see post, p. 449).

(b) In case (6) "competent and admissible and compellable" (see post, p. 470).

(c) In case (9) "competent but not compellable" (see post, p. 475).

(d) In cases (3), (4), (5), (7), (8), (10), (11), (12), (13), and (14) "may be called" (see post, pp. 470, 497, 498, 499, 500).

In cases (1) and (15) there is no statutory provision.

Under heads (a), (b) and (c) there was obviously no difficulty, the expressions being clear. But the expression "may be called" used in the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 4 (1) (see post, p. 470), led to uncertainty, and, as the ultimate decision showed, to a wrong view and practice. Contrasting such expression (which in itself would seem equivalent to "admissible" or "competent") with the expression "admissible and compellable," the former would appear to mean "not compellable"; contrasting it with the expression "competent but not compellable," it would appear to mean "compellable." The latter was the view generally taken, and the practice appears to have been to treat husbands and wives as compellable witnesses in cases under head (d), supra, until the House of Lords, in Leach v. Rex, decided that the expression "may be called" does not make husbands and wives compellable witnesses (overruling the Court of Criminal Appeal, see post, p. 268). It may appear strange that, in the last three enactments on the subject, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, the Children (Employment Abroad) Act, 1913, and the Criminal Justice Amendment Act, 1914, the expression "may be called," which led to such trouble, has again been used (see post, pp. 498—500).

The result appears to be—

(a) In cases (2) and (6), supra, husbands and wives are competent and compellable witnesses.

(b) In all the other cases, except (1) and (15), supra, husbands and wives are competent witnesses only.

(c) In cases (1) and (15) it is doubtful whether husbands and wives are compellable, as there is no statutory provision, and, apparently, no decision on these matters.

R. v. BRASIER.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1779.

I LEACH, C. C. 199.

Mental competency to give evidence depends not upon age but upon understanding or intelligence. There is no fixed limit of age under which an infant is excluded as a witness.

The question having arisen, in a prosecution for assault, whether the evidence of a child under seven years of age was admissible, it was submitted to the twelve Judges, who held that, under the circumstances, it was not admissible, as the child did not have sufficient understanding of the nature of an oath, without which (at that time) evidence could not be given.

THE TWELVE JUDGES were unanimously of opinion: That no testimony whatever can be legally received except upon oath; and that an infant, though under the age of seven years, may be sworn in a criminal prosecution, provided such infant appears, on strict examination by the Court, to possess a sufficient knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath, for there is no precise or fixed rule as to the time within which infants are excluded from giving evidence, but their admissibility depends upon the sense and reason they entertain of the danger and impiety of falsehood, which is to be collected from their answers to questions propounded to them by the Court; but if they are found incompetent to take an oath their evidence cannot be received.

Note.—It is to be observed that the decision in the above case was based on the fact that the child appeared not to possess sufficient understanding of the nature and consequences of an oath. At the time of such decision no evidence could be given without an oath. This is not now always the case. For instance, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (see post, p. 457), the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (s. 15, now repealed), and the Children Act, 1908 (see post, p. 487), each provided that, in proceedings thereunder, if a child of tender years who is tendered as a witness did not, in the opinion of the Court, understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such child must be received, though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the Court, such child were possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understood the duty of speaking the truth.

By the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 28 (2), these provisions are now made applicable to all criminal cases (see post, p. 499).

The above case "settled the modern law and practice relative to the admissibility of the testimony of children. As in the criminal law, malitia supplet aetatem, so here the maxim of the canonists was followed prudencia supplet aetatem" (Best, § 155).

R. v. HILL.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1851.

20 L. J. M. C. 222; 2 DEN. C. C. 254.

Persons suffering from insanity are not necessarily incompetent as witnesses. Whether they are competent or not depends on the character and extent of their insanity. A person insane on one matter can give evidence on matters not connected with his insanity, and which he is quite capable of understanding.

On a trial for manslaughter, evidence was given by one Donelly, who was a patient at a lunatic asylum. Before he was called as a witness, an attendant at the asylum stated—"Donelly labours under the delusion that he has a number of spirits about him which are continually talking to him; that is his only delusion," and the medical superintendent at the asylum stated the same and added—"I believe him to be quite capable of giving an account of any transaction that happened before his eyes. I have always found him so. It is solely with reference to the delusion about the spirits that I attribute to him being a lunatic." Other medical evidence was given to the effect that a man might have a delusion on one subject without its affecting his mind generally. The witness was held competent to prove the act of killing.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. . . . If there be a delusion in the mind of a party tendered as a witness, it is for the Judge to see whether the party tendered has a sense of religion and understands the nature and sanction of an oath; and then if the Judge admits him as a witness, it is for the jury to say what degree of credit is to be given to his testimony. Various old authorities have been brought forward to show that a person non compos mentis is not a competent witness; but the question is in what sense the expression non compos mentis is used. If by that term is meant one who does not understand the sanction of an oath, of course he ought not to be admitted as a witness; but he may be non compos in another sense, and yet understand the sanction of an oath and be capable of giving material testimony. . . . He had a clear apprehension of the obligation of an oath, and was capable of giving a trustworthy account of any transaction which took place before his eyes, and he was perfectly rational upon all subjects except with respect to his particular delusion. . . .

COLERIDGE, J. . . . He appeared to be unusually well instructed in the nature and obligation of an oath, and prima facie therefore to be quite competent to give evidence proper for the consideration of the jury. If his evidence had in the course of the trial been so tainted with insanity as to be unworthy of credit, it was the proper function of the jury to disregard it, and not to act upon it.

TALFOURD, J. If the prisoner's counsel could maintain the proposition which he has laid down, that any human being who labours under a delusion of the mind is incompetent as a witness, there would be most wide-spreading incompetency. Martin Luther, it is said, believed that he had had a personal conflict with the Devil. The celebrated Dr. Samuel Johnson was convinced that he had heard his mother calling him in a supernatural manner. . . .

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. The rule contended for would have excluded the evidence of Socrates, for he believed that he had a spirit always prompting him.

ALDERSON and PLATT, BB., concurred.

BENTLEY v. COOKE.

KING'S BENCH. 1784.

3 DOUGLAS, 422.

At Common Law, the husband or wife of a party to the proceedings, civil or criminal, is incompetent to give evidence, either for or against such party; except on a charge of personal injury or violence, alleged to have been done or committed by the wife or husband of the complainant, in which case the latter can give evidence against the person charged.

Thus, in an action of assumpsit brought by a woman, her husband was held incompetent as a witness.

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. There never has been an instance either in a civil or criminal case where the husband or wife has been permitted to be a witness for or against the other, except in case of necessity, and that necessity is not a general necessity, as where no other witness can be had, but a particular necessity, as where, for instance, the wife would otherwise be exposed without remedy to personal injury. I think the husband was not a competent witness.

WILLES, ASHHURST and BULLER, J.J., concurred.

R. v. AZIR.

IN MIDDLESEX. 1725.

1 STRANGE, 633.

The wife of a person charged with assault upon her is a competent witness against him, at common law.

On indictment against the husband for an assault upon his wife,

LORD RAYMOND, C.J., allowed her to be a good witness for the husband, and cited Lord Audley's case, 3 How. St. Tr. 402.

R. v. PEARCE.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT. 1840.

9 C. & P. 667.

Although the wife of a person charged with personal violence against her is a competent witness at common law, it is not indispensable that she should be called as a witness.

A man was charged with shooting at his wife with intent to murder her. Counsel for the prisoner said he should not produce the prisoner's wife as a witness.

BOSANQUET, J. The charge is one of personal violence to the wife, she is, therefore, a competent witness. But it is not indispensable that she should be called.

LEACH v. REX.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1912.

L. R. [1912] A. C. 305; 81 L. J. K. B. 616; 106 L. T. 281; 22 Cox, C. C. 721; 7 Cr. App. R. 157; 76 J. P. 203; 28 T. L. R. 289.

A distinction must be drawn between competency and compellability of witnesses. A wife, although rendered competent by Statute to give evidence against her husband in certain criminal proceedings, is not thereby made compellable to give such evidence, unless there is a clear and specific enactment to that effect.

The appellant Leach was tried under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908, and convicted. His wife was called by the prosecution as a witness, although she raised the objection that she could not be compelled to give evidence against her husband. Pickford, J., held that she was a compellable witness under sect. 4 (1) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (see post, p. 470). This decision was upheld by the Court of Criminal Appeal, but was reversed by the House of Lords.

EARL LOREBURN, L.C. . . . It is very desirable that in a certain class of cases justice should not be thwarted by the absence of the necessary evidence, but upon the other hand it is a fundamental and old principle to which the law has looked, that you ought not to compel a wife to give evidence against her husband in matters of a criminal kind. . . .

It is clear that this question must be governed by sect. 4 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. . . .

(His Lordship here read the section.)

If it had not been for sect. 4 the wife could not have been allowed to give evidence, and the result of that was that the wife could not have been compelled to do so and was protected against compulsion. The difference between leave to give evidence and compulsion to give evidence is recognised in a series of Acts of Parliament. Does then sect. 4, which I have read, deprive the wife of this protection? It is capable of being construed in different ways, and it may hereafter lead, for all I know, to various other difficulties, but the present question is, does it deprive this woman of this protection? My Lords, it says in effect that the wife can be allowed to give evidence, even if her husband objects. It does not say she must give evidence against her own will. It seems to me that we must have a definite change of the law in this respect, definitely stated in an Act of Parliament, before the right of this woman can be affected, and therefore I consider this appeal ought to be allowed. . . .

EARL OF HALSBURY. . . . You must consider, when you are dealing with Acts of Parliament, and examining what the effect of your proposed construction is, whether or not you are dealing with something that it is possible the Legislature might either have passed by definite and specific enactment or have allowed to pass by some ambiguous inference.

Now, dealing with that question, I should have thought that it would occur not only to a lawyer, but to almost every Englishman, that a wife ought not to be allowed to be called against her husband, and that those who are under the responsibility of passing Acts of Parliament would recognise a matter of that supreme importance as one to be dealt with specifically and definitely and not to be left to inference.

I think that observation is true also for this reason that when you are dealing with a question of this kind you cannot leave out of sight the different enactments that have been passed upon this subject with a sort of nomenclature of their own; and speaking for myself, as an ordinary person, I should have asked, when it was proposed to call the wife against the husband, "Will you show me an Act of Parliament that definitely says you may compel her to give evidence? because since the foundations of the common law it has been recognised that that is contrary to the course of the law." If you want to alter the law which has lasted for centuries and which is almost ingrained in the English Constitution, in the sense that everybody would say, "To call a wife against her husband is a thing that cannot be heard of," to suggest that that is to be dealt with by inference, and that you should introduce a new system of law without any specific enactment of it, seems to me to be perfectly monstrous.

The result is that I entirely concur with the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, and particularly with that part of it in which he said that such an alteration of the law as this ought to be by definite and certain language.

LORD ATKINSON. My Lords, I concur. The principle that a wife is not to be compelled to give evidence against her husband is deep-seated in the common law of this country, and I think if it is to be overturned it must be overturned by a clear, definite, and positive enactment, not by an ambiguous one such as the section relied upon in this case.

LORDS MACNAGHTEN, SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE and ROBSON, concurred.

Note.—In the case of R. v. Acaster (106 L. T. 384), decided in the Court of Criminal Appeal shortly after Leach's Case, it was held that the statement by the wife when called as a witness "I wish to shield my husband" was not equivalent to saying "I do not wish to give evidence." It might have meant "I wish to have an opportunity of giving evidence." Darling, J., said—"Speaking for myself, in future I shall feel bound to warn a wife, called as a witness by either the prosecution or defence, that she may object to give evidence if she does not wish to do so. There is no decision which makes this course binding, but it will probably be followed."

As to competency and compellability of husbands and wives as witnesses, see fully ante, p. 260. The leading case above would doubtless apply to a husband giving evidence against his wife.

SWEARING OF WITNESSES.

OATH OR AFFIRMATION.

Before a witness is permitted to give evidence, he must generally take an oath or make an affirmation, to the effect that his evidence shall be true. In a few cases, however, unsworn statements in the nature of evidence may be given, e.g., a child of tender years may give unsworn evidence under certain conditions. (See Children Act, 1908, s. 30, post, p. 489; Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 28 (2), post, p. 499.) A witness called merely to produce a document need not be sworn (Taylor, § 1429). And a prisoner may make an unsworn statement on the preliminary examination before the magistrate, and also at the trial itself. (See Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 18, post, p. 422; Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1 (h), post, p. 469.) For other cases, see Phipson, 461—3.

The oath is clearly a very ancient institution, by no means confined to the Christian, or any other religion, and it may be administered in any form recognised by the particular witness's religion. This is plainly shown by the celebrated leading case of Omichund v. Barker, post, p. 273. Certain statutes have since dealt with the matter, thus:—

The Oaths Act, 1838, recognising the principle laid down in the above case, provides that an oath shall be binding if administered in the form declared by the witness to be binding. See post, p. 417.

The Oaths Act, 1888, provides that any person may make an affirmation instead of taking an oath, if he states that—

- (1) he has no religious belief; or
- (2) an oath is contrary to his religious belief.

The same Act also provides that any person may be sworn in the Scotch manner, with uplifted hand, without kissing the book; and also that, if an oath has been duly administered, it shall not be affected by the fact that the person had no religious belief. See post, p. 459.

The Oaths Act, 1909, provides a new form of oath without kissing the book. See post, p. 494.

The Perjury Act, 1911, provides that, for the purposes of such Act, the form is immaterial if accepted without objection, or declared to be binding, by the witness. See post, p. 495.

The form of oath must obviously be of many kinds, according to the requirements of different religions. Thus, Protestants are sworn on the Evangelists, Jews on the Pentateuch, Mohammedans on the Koran, Hindoos on the Vedas or other sacred books, Parsees on the Zendavesta, and Chinese by breaking a saucer.

The Chinese form is thus described in R. v. Entrehman, C. & M. 248: "The prosecutor was then called, and on getting into the witness-box immediately knelt down, and a china saucer having been placed in his hand, he struck it against the brass rail in front of the box and broke it; the crier of the Court who swears the witnesses, then, by direction of the interpreter, administered the oath in these words, which were translated by the interpreter into the Chinese language:— 'You shall tell the truth and the whole truth: the saucer is cracked, and if you do not tell the truth your soul will be cracked like the saucer.' "

As regards the oaths of Christians and Jews it will be observed that the Oaths Act, 1909, specifies the New Testament for the former and the Old Testament for the latter, and not the Evangelists and Pentateuch respectively, in accordance with the hitherto recognised principle. As, however, the specified books include the latter, it may be considered immaterial; except that the copies of the Evangelists and Pentateuch, without the remaining books of the Testaments, which have commonly been kept for use at many Courts, are no longer of use for the purpose.

It should be particularly observed that affirmation is only allowed in two events, as specified in the Oaths Act, 1888, supra. It has been held that, where a witness desires to affirm, it is the duty of the Judge to examine the witness himself and ascertain that he objects to being sworn on the ground either that (a) he has no religious belief; or (b) an oath is contrary to his religious belief. A witness who states that he has religious belief cannot be allowed to affirm (R. v. Moore, 61 L. J. M. C. 80). And if a witness has no religious objection to an oath, but says that the ordinary forms do not bind him, and he cannot or will not state what form is binding upon him, it appears that his evidence cannot be given at all (Nash v. Ali Khan, 8 T. R. 444).

OMICHUND v. BARKER.

CHANCERY. 1744.

1 ATKYNS, 21; WILLES, 538; 1 WILSON, 84.

Evidence must generally be given upon oath. The oath is not a peculiarly Christian ceremony, but "a religious function that mankind have universally established." The mode of administering an oath may, and should, be adapted to the special religious belief of the witness, it being in accordance with "the wisdom of all nations to administer such oaths as are agreeable to the notion of the person taking" the same. But religious belief of the witness is necessary for the taking of an oath.

Several persons, resident in the East Indies, and professing the Gentoos religion, having been examined on oath administered according to the ceremonies of their religion, under a commission issued by the Court of Chancery, it became a question whether such depositions could be read in evidence. Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, conceiving it to be a question of considerable importance, desired the assistance of the two Chief Justices and certain other Judges, who were unanimously of opinion that the depositions were admissible and should be read, and so the Lord Chancellor decided.

The following is from Atkins:—

PARKER, C.B. . . . As to the Gentoo religion, it will appear from the best testimonies, that persons of this religion do believe in God as the creator and governor of the world. . . .

The books, cited by the defendant's counsel, to show jurors or witnesses must be sworn upon the Gospel, were Bracton, Briton, Fleta, &c. These authors prove no more than that the oaths are adapted to the natives of the kingdom. . . .

It is objected, that these witnesses do not swear by the true God, and for this purpose, the defendant's counsel cited Deuteronomy vi. 13 and 14 vers. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve Him, and shalt swear by His name. Ye shall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you.

Of the other side, Jacob, upon his covenant with Laban, swore by the fear of his father Isaac (Gen. 31, v. 53).

My answer is, this is not true in fact, for they do swear by the true God, the Creator of the world. . . .

It is plain that by the policy of all countries, oaths are to be administered to all persons according to their own opinion, and as it most affects their conscience, and laying the hand was originally borrowed from the Pagans.

It is said by defendant's counsel, that no new oath can be imposed without an Act of Parliament, and for this purpose several cases were cited.

My answer is, This is no new oath. . . .

WILLES, C.J. . . . If I was of the same opinion with Lord Coke, the consequence would be, that these depositions could not be read; but I am of opinion that some Infidels may under some circumstances be admitted as witnesses.

My Lord Coke is plainly of opinion, that Jews as well as Heathens were comprised under the same exclusion. . . .

Our Saviour and St. Peter have said, God is no respecter of persons.
Acts x. v. 34.

Lord Coke is a very great lawyer, but our Saviour and St. Peter are in this respect much better authorities, than a person possessed with such narrow notions. . . .

There can be no evidence admitted without oath, it would be absurd for him to swear according to the Christian oath, which he does not believe; and therefore, out of necessity, he must be allowed to swear according to his own notion of an oath. . . .

I cannot say I lay a great stress upon the authors which give an account of the Gentoo religion, because it must depend upon their veracity and private judgment; but I found my opinion upon the certificate, which says, the *Gentoo*s believe in a God as the Creator of the universe, and that he is a rewarder of those who do well, and an avenger of those who do ill. . . .

LEE, C.J. I agree entirely with the opinion of Lord Chief Baron Parker and Lord Chief Justice Willes; that where it is returned by the certificate the witness is of a religion, it is sufficient; for the foundation of all religion is the belief of a God, though difficult to have a distinct idea of an infinite and incomprehensible Being as God is; yet mankind may have a relative idea of the being of a God, as dependent creatures upon Him.

An oath is a religious function that mankind have universally established. . . .

LORD HARDWICKE, L.C. My intention was to be certified whether these people believed the being of a God, and His providence. . . .

This objection being removed, the next question will be, whether the depositions ought to be read; which depends upon two things:

First, Whether it is a proper obligatory oath?
Secondly, Whether, on the special circumstances in this case such evidence can be admitted according to the law of England? . . .

It is laid down by all writers that the outward act is not essential to the oath. . . .

All that is necessary appears in the present case: an external act was done to make it a corporal act. . . .

Suppose a Heathen, not an alien enemy, should bring an action at common law, and the defendant should bring a bill for an injunction, would anybody say that the plaintiff at law should not be admitted to put in an answer according to his own form of an oath?

If otherwise, the injunction must be perpetual, and this would be a manifest denial of justice. . . .

This falls in exactly with what Lord Stair, Puffendorf, etc., say, that it has been the wisdom of all nations to administer such oaths, as are agreeable to the notion of the person taking, and does not at all affect the conscience of the person administering, nor does it in any respect adopt such religion: it is not near so much a breaking in upon the rule of law, as admitting a person to be an evidence in his own cause. . . .

Upon the special circumstances of this case, I concur in opinion with my Lords the Judges, that the depositions of these witnesses ought to be read as evidence in this cause, and do therefore order that the objection be overruled, and the depositions read.

The following is from Wilson:—

It was held by the Lord Chancellor, assisted by Lord Chief Justice Lee, the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Chief Baron, and Justice Burnett, that an infidel, pagan, idolater may be a witness, and that his deposition sworn according to the custom and manner of the country where he lives may be read in evidence; so that at this day it seems to be settled, that infidelity of any kind doth not go to the competency of a witness. In the debate of this point, Ryder, the Attorney-General, cited the covenant between Jacob and Laban, Genesis, cap. xxxi., v. 52, 53, where Jacob swore by the God of Abraham, and Laban swore by the God of Nahor. Vide Psalm 115, 106, v. 36.

The following is from Willes:—

WILLES, C.J. . . . I only give my opinion that such infidels who believe a God and that he will punish them if they swear falsely, in some cases and under some circumstances, may and ought to be admitted as witnesses in this, though a Christian country. And on the other hand, I am clearly of opinion that such infidels (if any such there be) who either do not believe a God, or, if they do, do not think that he will either reward or punish them in this world or in the next, cannot be witnesses in any case nor under any circumstances, for this plain reason: because an oath cannot possibly be any tie or obligation upon them. . . . The oath was administered to the witnesses in the same words as here in England, which fully answers the objection (if there was anything in it) that the form of the oath cannot be altered; and . . . after the oath was read and interpreted to them, they touched the Bramin's hand or foot, the same being the usual and most solemn manner in which oaths are administered to witnesses who profess the Gentoo religion . . . it being their usual form, is as much signifying their assent as kissing the book is here, where the party swearing likewise says nothing. . . . My opinion is that these depositions ought to be read in evidence.

EXAMINATION IN CHIEF

The points should be noticed as to the questions permissible in examination in chief:—

(a) They must be on facts strictly relevant to the issue and as to the character or credibility of the witness.

(b) They must be not leading questions suggesting the required answer except on introductory matters or matters not really in dispute.

CHARLES J. MADDON

NICHOLAS J. DOWLING AND HENRY

WILLIAM J. MADDON

Leading questions may not be put in examination in chief unless they are necessary to test the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry, or they are upon matters

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

A regular course of examination of witnesses is well recognised and established; each witness being liable to be asked three sets of questions, put to him respectively during (1) Examination-in-Chief; (2) Cross-examination; and (3) Re-examination; in cases (1) and (3) by or on behalf of the party calling him, and in case (2) by or on behalf of his opponent.

It will be observed from what is stated below, that the rules differ in these three cases, as to (a) the questions permissible, (b) the manner of putting such questions.

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF.

Two points should be noticed as to the questions permissible in examination-in-chief:

(a) They must be on facts strictly relevant. They must not be as to the character or credibility of the witness.

(b) They must be not leading questions suggesting the required answer, except on introductory matters, or matters not really in dispute.

NICHOLLS v. DOWDING AND KEMP.

NISI PRIUS. 1815.

1 STARKIE, 81.

Leading questions may not be put, in examination-in-chief, unless they are necessary to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry; or they are upon matters merely introductory or not in dispute. Questions permitting the simple answer "Yes" or "No," or suggesting the answer desired, are generally inadmissible as "leading."

In order to prove that the defendants were partners, a witness was asked whether one of them had not interfered in the business of the other. The question was objected to as a leading one, but the Court allowed it to be put.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. I wish that objections to questions as leading might be a little better considered before they are made. It is necessary, to a certain extent, to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry. If questions are asked to which the answer "Yes" or "No" would be conclusive, they would certainly be objectionable; but in general no objections are more frivolous than those which are made to questions as leading ones.

Note.—The objection as to leading questions does not apply to cross-examination (see post, p. 282), but it does to re-examination (see post, p. 289).

It may be said, shortly, that leading questions may be put in examination-in-chief, or re-examination, (a) on merely introductory matters, such as name or occupation of a witness, (b) on other matters not in dispute, (c) as to identification of persons or things, (d) to assist the memory of a witness or to lead his mind to the matter referred to, and for certain other necessary or unobjectionable purposes.

MAUGHAM v. HUBBARD.

KING'S BENCH. 1828.

6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 229; 8 B. & C. 14; 2 MAN. & RY. 5;
32 R. R. 328.

A witness may refresh his memory by referring to any writing or document made by himself, at or so soon after the transaction in question that the judge considers it was fresh in his memory at the time.

But it is not necessary that the witness should have any independent recollection of the fact recorded, if he is prepared to swear to it on seeing the writing or document.

Refreshing memory by inspecting a writing or document does not make it documentary evidence; so the fact that the same would be inadmissible in evidence as a document for want of a stamp is immaterial.

A witness, called to prove the receipt of a sum of money, was shown an acknowledgment of the receipt of the money signed by himself. On seeing it, he said he had no doubt that he had received it, although he had no recollection of the fact. It was held that this was sufficient parol evidence of the payment of the money, and that the written acknowledgment having been used to refresh the memory of the witness, and not as evidence of the payment, did not require any stamp.

The following is from Barnwell and Cresswell:—

LORD TENTERDEN, C.J. In order to make the paper itself evidence of the receipt of the money it ought to have been stamped. The consequence of its not having been stamped might be that the party who paid the money, in the event of the death of the person who received it, would lose his evidence of such payment. Here the witness, on seeing the entry signed by himself, said that he had no doubt that he had received the money. The paper itself was not used as evidence of the receipt of the money, but only to enable the witness to refresh his memory; and when he said that he had no doubt that he had received the money there was sufficient parol evidence to prove the payment.

BAYLEY, J. Where a witness called to prove the execution of a deed sees his signature to the attestation, and says that he is, therefore, sure that he saw the party execute the deed, that is a sufficient proof of the execution of the deed, though the witness add that he has no recollection of the fact of the execution of the deed.

Note.—The opposite party is, naturally, always entitled to inspect any writing or document used to refresh memory, in order to check it, and to cross-examine upon it. But cross-examination does not make it documentary evidence, except so far as it refers to parts of the writing or document other than those used by the witness in refreshing his memory (Gregory v. Tavernor, 6 C. & P. 280). This appears to be in accordance with the rule that a party who calls for and inspects a document held by the other party is bound to put it in evidence if required to do so (see Wharam v. Routledge, post, p. 332).

Perhaps the commonest examples of writings used to refresh memory are entries in diaries, call-books, account books, letter books, and the like.

BURROUGH v. MARTIN.

NISI PRIUS. 1809.

2 CAMPBELL, 112; 11 R. R. 679.

A witness may refresh his memory not only from writings or documents in his own handwriting, but also from those made by other persons under his immediate observation when his recollection of the facts recorded was recent and fresh.

In an action on a charter-party, a witness was called to give an account of the voyage, and the log-book was laid before him for the purpose of refreshing his memory. Being asked whether he had written it himself, he said that he had not, but that from time to time he examined the entries in it while the events recorded were fresh in his recollection, and that he always found the entries accurate. He was allowed to refresh his memory from such book.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. If the witness looked at the log-book from time to time, while the occurrences mentioned in it were recent and fresh in his recollection, it is as good as if he had written the whole with his own hand. This collation gave him an ample opportunity to ascertain the correctness of the entries, and he may therefore refer to these on the same principle that witnesses are allowed to refresh their memory by reading letters and other documents which they themselves have written.

R. v. LANGTON.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1877.

L. R. 2 Q. B. D. 296; 46 L. J. M. C. 136; 35 L. T. 527; COX, C. C. 345.

The prisoner, a time-keeper at a colliery, was charged with obtaining money by falsifying the hours worked by, and amounts due to, certain workmen. To prove these particulars, the pay-clerk was called as a witness at the trial and allowed to refresh his memory by referring to the time-book, which, though kept by another clerk, was read out by the prisoner to the pay-clerk and verified by the latter as correct by reference to the book, when paying the amounts shown therein to be due. Held, that he was rightly allowed to do so.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . If the witness had only seen the entries in the absence of the prisoner, the case might be different. There would then be obvious dangers in admitting such a use of the book, which do not exist in the present case. Here the entries were read aloud by the prisoner himself and seen by the witness at the time of reading and he made payments in accordance with them.

Note.—An expert witness may refresh his memory by reference to text-books, price-lists, or other such printed matter.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Two points should be noticed as to the questions permissible in cross-examination:

(a) They are not confined to facts strictly relevant to the issue, but may include others that are relevant merely to the credibility of the witness.

(b) They may be leading questions.

Moreover "the rule against hearsay applies to the proof of the relevant facts in the course of cross-examination just as much as to their proof by examination-in-chief. That is to say, a party is not entitled to prove his case merely by eliciting from his opponent's witness in cross-examination not his own knowledge on the subject, but what he has heard others say about it, but has not verified for himself" (Wills, 146).

In this place it is convenient to consider:—

CONDUCT, CHARACTER, AND CONVICTIONS OF WITNESSES.

The cases in which evidence may be given of the conduct, character and convictions of the parties themselves have been discussed ante, p. 98.

Similar matters concerning witnesses may sometimes be brought before the Court, chiefly by cross-examination of the witnesses themselves, but in some cases by the evidence of other witnesses.

The matter rests partly on decided cases, but mainly on Statute; the result appearing to be as follows:—

CROSS-EXAMINATION.

(a) A party may always cross-examine his opponent's witness in order to test his credibility; questions being permissible as to his conduct on other occasions, his character and his previous convictions. See post, p. 284.

(b) A party may not cross-examine his own witness, unless the judge allows him to do so on the ground that the witness is actually hostile, not merely adverse to him. It is also said that he may cross-examine his own witness when he has been compelled to call him. See post, p. 288.

(c) A person charged with an offence and giving evidence on his own behalf, cannot be cross-examined as to other offences or convictions, or as to his character, except in the cases specified in sect. 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. See post, p. 469.

OTHER WITNESSES.

(a) A party cannot generally call witnesses to discredit his opponent's witness, when he has failed to shake him by cross-examination as to character; but he may do so in four cases. See post, p. 295.

(b) A party cannot in any case call witnesses to discredit his own witness, except that he may, by leave of the judge, if his witness proves to be actually hostile, not merely adverse to him, call witnesses to prove that he has made previous statements inconsistent with his present testimony. See post, p. 299.

The above rules apply to witnesses generally, whether they are parties to the action or not.

WOOD v. MACKINSON.

NISI PRIUS. 1840.

2 M. & R. 273.

If a witness has been sworn, the opposite party is, in general, entitled to cross-examine him, even though he is not examined-in-chief.

But a party is not entitled to cross-examine a witness called by mistake, if the mistake be discovered before any question is put to him.

The plaintiff's counsel called a witness, who was sworn in the usual way; but, before he had put any question to him, he said he had been misinstructed as to what the witness was able to prove, and he should not examine him at all. The defendant's counsel then claimed the right to cross-examine the witness. It was held that he had no right to do so.

COLERIDGE, J. . . . Upon the whole, it appears to me that the more satisfactory principle to lay down is this, that if there really be a mistake, whether on the part of counsel or officer, and that mistake be discovered before the examination-in-chief has begun, the adverse party ought not to have the right to take advantage of this mistake by cross-examining the witness. Here the learned counsel explains that there has been a mistake, which consists in this, that the witness is found not to be able to speak at all as to the transaction which was supposed to be within his knowledge. This is, I think, such a mistake as entitles the party calling the witness to withdraw him without his being subject to cross-examination. If, indeed, the witness had been able to give evidence of the transaction which he was called to prove, but the counsel had discovered that the witness, besides that transaction, knew other matters inconvenient to be disclosed, and therefore attempted to withdraw him, that would be a different case. I think the defendants have here no right to cross-examine the witness.

Note.—A witness who is only called to produce a document, and is not sworn, cannot be cross-examined (Summers v. Moseley, 1 Cr. M. & R. 96); [nor can such a witness be cross-examined if he has been sworn unnecessarily (Rush v. Smith, 1 Cr. M. & R. 94). A witness called by the judge himself cannot be cross-examined without the leave of the judge.]

PARKIN v. MOON.

NISI PRIUS. 1886.

7 C. & P. 408.

In cross-examination a witness may be examined by means of leading questions, as the presumption is that he is biassed against the opposite party and will not be inclined to follow his lead. This is so, apparently, although the witness may actually appear to be favourable to the opposite party.

The plaintiff's counsel was cross-examining one of the defendant's witnesses (who, it seemed, was an unwilling witness for the defendant, but a willing one on the part of the plaintiff), by putting leading questions in the usual way. The defendant's counsel submitted that, under the circumstances, leading questions ought not to be allowed even on cross-examination. It was held that they were admissible.

ALDERSON, B. I apprehend you may put a leading question to an unwilling witness on the examination-in-chief at the discretion of the Judge; but you may always put a leading question in cross-examination whether a witness be unwilling or not.

Note.—See Order 36, r. 38, post, p. 512.

BROWNE v. DUNN.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1894.

6 THE REPORTS, 67.

A witness may be cross-examined as to his credibility, but he should have his attention drawn to any facts with respect to which it is intended to impeach his credit by other witnesses so as to give him an opportunity of explanation, unless the evidence he gives is so incredible or romancing that it is reasonable to let him leave the box without such questions being put.

In an action for libel certain witnesses were not cross-examined on a certain material matter. It was held that the jury could not be asked afterwards to disbelieve them.

LORD HERSCHELL, L.C. . . . It seems to me to be absolutely essential to the proper conduct of a cause, where it is intended to suggest that a witness is not speaking the truth on a particular point, to direct his attention to the fact by some questions put in cross-examination showing that that imputation is intended to be made, and not to take his evidence and pass it by as a matter altogether unchallenged, and then, when it is impossible for him to explain, as perhaps he might have been able to do if such questions had been put to him, the circumstances which it is suggested indicate that the story he tells ought not to be believed, to argue that he is a witness unworthy of credit. My Lords, I have always understood that if you intend to impeach a witness you are bound, whilst he is in the box, to give him an opportunity of making any explanation which is open to him ; and, as it seems to me, that is not only a rule of professional practice in the conduct of a case, but is essential to fair play and fair dealing with witnesses. Sometimes reflections have been made upon excessive cross-examination of witnesses, and it has been complained of as undue ; but it seems to me that a cross-examination of a witness which errs in the direction of excess may be far more fair to him than to leave him without cross-examination, and afterwards to suggest that he is not a witness of truth, I mean upon a point on which it is not otherwise perfectly clear that he has had full notice beforehand that there is an intention to impeach the credibility of the story which he is telling. Of course I do not deny for a moment that there are cases in which that notice has been so distinctly and unmistakably given, and the point upon which he is impeached, and is to be impeached, is so manifest, that it is not necessary to waste time in putting questions to him upon it. All I am saying is that it will not do to impeach the credibility of a witness upon a matter on which he has not had any opportunity of giving an explanation by reason of there having been no suggestion whatever in the course of the case that his story is not accepted. . . .

LORD HALSBURY. . . . With regard to the manner in which the evidence was given in this case, I cannot too heartily express my concurrence with the Lord Chancellor as to the mode in which a trial should be conducted. To my mind nothing would be more absolutely unjust than not to cross-examine witnesses upon evidence which they have given, so as to give them notice, and to give them an opportunity of explanation, and an opportunity very often to defend their own character, and, not having given them such an opportunity, to ask the jury afterwards to disbelieve what they have said, although not one question has been directed either to their credit or to the accuracy of the facts they have deposed to. . . .

LORD MORRIS. . . . There is another point upon which I would wish to guard myself, namely, with respect to laying down any hard-and-fast rule as regards cross-examining a witness as a necessary preliminary to impeaching his credit. In this case, I am clearly of opinion that the witnesses, having given their testimony, and not having been cross-examined, having deposed to a state of facts which is quite reconcilable with the rest of the case, it was impossible for the plaintiff to ask the jury at the trial, and it is impossible for him to ask any legal tribunal, to say that those witnesses are not to be credited. But I can quite understand a case in which a story told by a witness may have been of so incredible and romancing a character that the most effective cross-examination would be to ask him to leave the box. I therefore wish it to be understood that I would not concur in ruling that it was necessary, in order to impeach a witness's credit, that you should take him through the story which he had told, giving him notice by the questions that you impeached his credit.

LORD BOWEN concurred.

Note.—"This much counsel is bound to do, when cross-examining; he must put to each of his opponent's witnesses in turn, so much of his own case as concerns that particular witness or in which that witness had any share. Thus, if the plaintiff has deposed to a conversation with the defendant, it is the duty of the counsel for the defendant to indicate by his cross-examination how much of the plaintiff's version of the conversation he accepts, and how much he disputes, and to suggest what the defendant's version will be. If he ask no question as to it, he will be taken to accept the plaintiff's account in its entirety" (Odgers, Pleading, 312).

PRICE v. MANNING.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1889.

L. R. 42 CH. D. 372; 58 L. J. CH. 649; 61 L. T. 537;
37 W. R. 785.

A party cannot generally cross-examine or discredit his own witness.

It is in the discretion of the Judge whether a party shall be permitted to cross-examine a witness whom he has called, even if the witness be a hostile litigant, as when one party calls the other party as a witness.

The plaintiff called the defendant as a witness to prove a point in his case. The defendant was cross-examined. On his re-examination the plaintiff's counsel put questions to him in the nature of cross-examination, treating him as a hostile witness. KAY, J., refused to allow this to be done.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COTTON, L.J. The plaintiff says that, having called the defendant, he is entitled as of right to cross-examine him. . . . But in my opinion that is a matter in the discretion of the Judge. He sees the witness, and can determine from his manner whether he is so hostile that the plaintiff should be allowed to cross-examine him. . . .

FRY, L.J. It has been urged before us that, as the plaintiff called the defendant, he had a right to cross-examine him. . . . The plaintiff had no right to cross-examine the witness he had called; he could only do so with the sanction of the presiding Judge. . . .

LOPES, L.J. Whether the witness called by one party is a litigant or non-litigant, it is a matter of discretion in the presiding Judge whether the witness has shown himself so hostile as to justify his cross-examination by the party calling him. This rule applies in a case where an opponent is called as a witness. . . .

Note.—It must be observed that the Judge can only allow a party to "cross-examine" his own witness. He cannot allow him to "discredit" generally a witness whom he has produced as a reliable person. This rule is now statutory by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, which applies to both civil and criminal cases (see post, p. 438).

RE-EXAMINATION.

Two points should be noticed as to the questions permissible in re-examination:

(a) They must be confined to matters arising out of cross-examination.

(b) They must be not leading questions.

PRINCE v. SAMO.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1838.

7 L. J. Q. B. 123; 2 JUR. 323; 7 A. & E. 630; 3 N. & P. 139; 1 W. W. & H. 132; 45 R. R. 783.

Re-examination must be confined to matters arising out of, or explanatory of, the cross-examination. No new matter may be introduced without leave of the Judge.

So, proof by a witness, on cross-examination, of a statement made by him at a former time, does not authorise proof, on re-examination, of all that he said at the same time, but only of so much thereof as is connected with the statement proved on cross-examination.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included LITTLEDALE, PATESON, WILLIAMS and COLERIDGE, J.J.). This was an action for a malicious arrest, on a false suggestion that money was lent by the defendant to the plaintiff, when it had, in fact, been given. The plaintiff called his attorney as a witness; he happened to be present at the trial of a prosecution for perjury, instituted by the plaintiff against a witness in the action wherein he had been arrested. The defendant's counsel inquired of him in cross-examination whether the plaintiff had not, on the trial for perjury, stated that he himself had been insolvent repeatedly, and remanded by the Court. This question was not objected to. On his re-examination the same witness was asked whether the plaintiff had not also on that occasion given an account of the circumstances out of which the arrest had arisen, and what that account was, for the purpose of laying before the jury proof that the arrest was without cause, or malicious, of both which facts there was scarcely any, if any, evidence whatever. The question, expressly confined to that purpose, was whether the plaintiff did not say, in his examination, that the money was given, and not lent. To this question the defendant's counsel objected, not on account of its leading form, but because the defendant, having proved one detached expression that fell from the plaintiff when a witness, does not make the whole of what he then said evidence in his own favour. My opinion was, that the witness might be asked as to everything said by the plaintiff, when he appeared on the trial of the indictment, that could in any way qualify or explain the statement as to which he had been cross-examined, but that he had no right to add any independent history of transactions wholly unconnected with it. That a witness's statement of some one thing said by him, though drawn out by a cross-examination, does not permit the opposite party to add to it all that he may have uttered on the same occasion, was in effect decided by seven out of eight Judges, whose opinion was taken by the House of Lords, in the progress of the bill of pains and penalties against Her Majesty Queen Caroline. Lord Tenterden, in delivering that opinion, said: "I think the counsel has a right, on re-examination, to ask all questions which may be proper to draw forth an explanation of the sense and meaning of the expressions used by the witness on cross-examination, if they be in themselves doubtful, and also of the motive by which the witness was induced to use those expressions; but I think he has no right to go further, and to introduce new matters not suited to the purpose of explaining either the expressions or the motives of the witness"; and as many things may pass in one and the same conversation, which do not relate to either, the learned Chief Justice declared the opinion of the Judges, that the witness could not be re-examined, even to the extent of all that might have passed relating to his becoming a witness, to which the statement proved had reference. . . .

Upon the whole, we think that it must be taken as settled that proof of a detached statement made by a witness at a former time, does not authorise proof by the party calling that witness, of all that he said at the same time, but only of so much as can be in some way connected with the statement proved. . . .

Note.—The Judge will, whenever he considers it proper or necessary, allow questions to be put although they may not arise out of the cross-examination. For instance, on important matters which have been overlooked. But in such case he will of course allow a further cross-examination on such questions. The Judge may, moreover, put further questions himself, or allow witnesses to be recalled.

In R. v. Morrison, 75 J. P. 272, the Court, under very special circumstances, even allowed the accused to call fresh evidence after counsel for the prosecution had commenced his final speech.

CONTRADICTION OF WITNESSES.

EWER v. AMBROSE.

KING'S BENCH. 1825.

3 B. & C. 746; 5 D. & R. 629.

If a witness gives evidence which is unfavourable to the party calling him, such party may contradict him by other witnesses, but he may not call general evidence to show that his own witness is not to be believed.

In an action for money had and received, the defence being that the defendant was jointly liable with a partner against whom judgment had been recovered, a witness was called by the defendant to prove the partnership, but he proved the contrary. It was held that the defendant could not discredit his own witness, but he could contradict him by other witnesses.

The following is from Barnewall and Cresswell:—

BAYLEY, J. . . . I have no doubt that if a witness gives evidence contrary to that which the party calling him expects, the party is at liberty afterwards to make out his own case by other witnesses. . . .

HOLROYD, J. I take the rule of law to be, that if a witness proves a case against the party calling him, the latter may show the truth by other witnesses. But it is undoubtedly true, that if a party calls a witness to prove a fact, he cannot, when he finds the witness proves the contrary, give general evidence to show that that witness is not to be believed on his oath, but he may show by other evidence that he is mistaken as to the fact which he is called to prove. . . .

LITTLEDALE, J. Where a witness is called by a party to prove his case, and he disproves that case, I think the party is still at liberty to prove his case by other witnesses. It would be a great hardship if the rule were otherwise, for if a party had four witnesses upon whom he relied to prove his case, it would be very hard, that by calling first the one who happened to disprove it, he should be deprived of the testimony of the other three. If he had called the three before the other who had disproved the case, it would have been a question for the jury upon the evidence whether they would give credit to the three or to the one. The order in which the witnesses happen to be called ought not, therefore, to make any difference. . . .

Note.—This rule as to contradiction of a witness by other evidence is now statutory, by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, which applies to both civil and criminal cases (see post, p. 438).

HARRIS v. TIPPETT.

NISI PRIUS. 1811.

2 CAMPBELL, 637; 12 R. R. 767.

Although questions going to the character or credibility of a witness are admissible on cross-examination, yet if they be directed to matters collateral to the issue, the answers must be accepted as conclusive, and other witnesses cannot be called to contradict him, except in a few cases.

A witness for the defendant, being asked in cross-examination whether he had not attempted to dissuade one of the plaintiff's witnesses from attending to give evidence, swore that he had not done so. The plaintiff's counsel then proposed to call back the other witness to contradict him. This was not allowed.

LAWRENCE, J. Had this been a matter in issue, I would have allowed you to call witnesses to contradict what the last witness has sworn, but it is entirely collateral, and you must take his answer. I will permit questions to be put to a witness as to any improper conduct of which he may have been guilty, for the purpose of trying his credit; but when these questions are irrelevant to the issue on the record, you cannot call other witnesses to contradict the answer he gives. No witness can be prepared to support his character as to particular facts, and such collateral inquiries would lead to endless confusion.

R. v. HOLMES.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1871.

L. R. 1 C. C. R. 334; 41 L. J. M. C. 12; 25 L. T. 669;
20 W. R. 122; 12 Cox, 137.

In prosecutions for rape, or assault with intent to commit rape or indecent assault, the prosecutrix may be cross-examined as to particular acts of immorality with any persons. But, although as regards her acts committed with the prisoner himself, witnesses may be called to contradict her, if she denies them; it is otherwise as to her acts of immorality committed with other persons.

The prisoner was charged with indecent assault, which, from the evidence, appeared to amount to an attempt at rape. The defence was consent. The prosecutrix, in her cross-examination, was asked if she had had connexion with another man, and she denied it. The man in question was then called to contradict her, but the Judge disallowed the evidence. The Court for Crown Cases Reserved affirmed the prisoner's conviction.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

KELLY, C.B. . . . On an indictment for rape, or for an attempt to commit a rape, or for an indecent assault, which, upon the circumstances of the case, amounts to an attempt to commit a rape, a question put to the prosecutrix as to an act of connexion with a particular person, and denied by her, cannot be contradicted. If a witness is cross-examined as to a collateral fact, the answer must be taken for better or worse, and the witness cannot be contradicted. If the question were admissible it might involve an inquiry into her whole life. . . . There is no doubt the prosecutrix may be asked as to connexion with the prisoner on a prosecution for rape. There the fact has a direct bearing on the question before the Court, which involves the fact of consent or non-consent on the part of the prosecutrix. . . .

BYLES, J. I concur. I think the prosecutrix, on an indictment for rape, cannot be contradicted by men called to speak to connexion with her. Rape may be committed on a prostitute; the evidence therefore is immaterial. . . .

PIGOTT, B. I am of the same opinion, because the prosecutrix in these cases might always have a number of persons spring upon her at the trial whose evidence she would be totally unprepared to meet.

LUSH, J. I am convinced that this evidence is too remote from the issue to be admissible. It has no bearing upon the particular charge, and was, therefore, properly rejected.

HANNEN, J. I think no distinction can be drawn between a charge of rape and an indecent assault, and that the same reasoning applies to both cases. . . . It would be impossible for the prosecutrix to be prepared to meet the cases which might be produced.

Note.—The above case merely decides that witnesses cannot be called to contradict the prosecutrix as to acts of immorality committed with persons other than the prisoner. It is an illustration of the rule stated in the previous case. The case of R. v. Riley (ante, p. 108) had decided that evidence could be called to contradict her as to other acts of immorality committed with the prisoner himself. Such evidence is admitted as relevant to consent, not as evidence of character; as such case shows.

EVIDENCE TO DISCREDIT WITNESSES.

The general rule is that a party is not allowed to call witnesses to prove facts which merely tend to discredit his opponent's witnesses, and are not otherwise relevant to the matters in issue. Such collateral inquiries are rejected on the grounds that they would unduly complicate and prolong trials without adequate reason, and that a man cannot be expected to defend all the acts of his life without notice. But there appear to be four generally recognised cases in which evidence to discredit is allowed.

Evidence to discredit a witness is admissible to prove:—

1. That he has made previous statements inconsistent with his present evidence. [This is not strictly an exception to the rule that an adversary's witnesses cannot be contradicted on matters that merely affect credit, for the previous statement must, in order to let in contradiction, be one "relative to the subject-matter of the case" (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, s. 4; post, p. 439).]

2. That he is prejudiced or biassed in favour of the party calling him, or is giving his evidence from some corrupt or indirect motive.

3. That he has such a general bad character for veracity that he is not to be believed on his oath.

4. That he has been convicted of a felony or misdemeanour.

Cases are here given on the first three points. The last was first laid down by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 25, which is now repealed; but it is re-enacted, and applied to both civil and criminal cases, by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, which also makes statutory point (1) above. (See post, p. 439.)

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HITCHCOCK.

EXCHEQUER. 1847.

16 L. J. Ex. 259; 11 JUR. 478; 1 Ex. 91; 74
R. R. 592.

When a witness is asked in cross-examination if he has made a certain statement, which is material to the issue, and at variance with his evidence, and he denies that he made such a statement, witnesses may be called to prove that he did make such statement.

When a witness is cross-examined with the view of showing that he is biassed, or giving his evidence from some corrupt or indirect motive, and he denies it, witnesses may be called to prove that he is biassed; for instance, that he has been bribed to give evidence, or has offered a bribe to another witness, but not that a bribe has been offered to him and refused.

The defendant, a maltster, was charged on information with having used a cistern for the making of malt, without making an entry thereof, as required by Act of Parliament. A witness, having sworn that the cistern had been used, was asked if he had not said to one Cook that the Excise officers had offered him 20*l.* to say the cistern had been used; and he denied that he had made such statement. The defendant's counsel thereupon called Cook, and proposed to ask him whether the witness had told him so. The evidence was disallowed.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

POLLOCK, C.B. . . . The test of whether an inquiry is collateral or not is, whether the fact to be elicited is material to the issue. If it be, then the witness may be contradicted, or, as it is better put by my Brother Alderson, thus: If you ask a witness whether he has not made a certain statement which would be material, and opposed to part of his testimony, you may then call witnesses to prove that he has made the statement, and the jury are at liberty to believe either the one account or the other. . . . The statement which may be contradicted must be one which refers to matter that may be given in evidence, and if answered in one way would contradict part of the witness's testimony, and be material.

There is, however, a distinction between contradicting a witness in particulars stated by him, and those which have reference to his motives, temper, character, and feelings. . . . A witness may be asked how he stands affected towards one of the parties; and if his relation towards them is such as to prejudice his mind, and fill him with sentiments of revenge or other feelings of a similar kind, and if he denies the fact, evidence may be given to show the state of his mind and feelings. But these cases of the witness's connection with the parties in feelings and sentiments are not to be confounded with those other cases where the matter to be admissible in evidence must be connected with the question. . . .

In the present case it could not be proved that a bribe was offered to the witness and not accepted, for such a fact is clearly irrelevant to the matter in issue. The offer of a bribe is a matter of no importance, if it be not accepted, for it does not disparage the party to whom it is offered. . . .

ALDERSON, B. A witness may be asked a question, and if the answer tends to qualify another part of his testimony, evidence may be given in contradiction. So if the question relates not to what he has said, but to some fact material to the issue, the same rule prevails. . . . The offer of a bribe by a witness to another, or the fact of a bribe having been accepted by him, tends to show that he is not impartial. . . .

A witness, however, is not to be examined as to collateral facts. In many cases his doing a particular act is collateral. In such cases his evidence as to the fact is to be received as final; but no witness ought to be called on to prove his whole life; and if contradiction of his testimony were permitted, he ought to be allowed to support it by other evidence, and to prove his innocence; the result of which would be, that an endless amount of collateral issues would have to be tried. The convenient administration of justice, therefore, requires that this course should not be adopted. If the witness has spoken falsely he may be indicted for perjury. When the answer given is not material to the issue, public convenience requires that it be taken as decisive, and that no contradiction be allowed. In the present case, the witness was asked whether he had been offered a bribe to say the cistern had been used. This was not material, nor did it qualify what had gone before, for his being offered a bribe did not show that he was not a fair and credible witness.

ROLFE, B. The rules of evidence are founded on abstract and practical consideration; and one principle is, that you may contradict any part of the testimony that has been given, and which tends to support the issue. Here the question was, whether the witness had ever said he had been offered a bribe; and if that may be contradicted, not by showing that he had received a bribe, but by showing that he had said he had been offered a bribe, there would be no end to the collateral inquiries that would arise. The offer of a bribe, if rejected, has no bearing upon the credit of the witness. In fact, it was offered in the present case merely for the purpose of discrediting other persons, and not to disparage the witness.

Note.—The rule as to calling evidence of previous inconsistent statements is now embodied in the Criminal Procedure Act, which applies to both civil and criminal cases, but it is provided by s. 4, that the witness's attention must first be called to the particular occasion (see post, p. 439). The other point in the above cases, as to bias or corrupt motive, is further illustrated by the case of Thomas v. David, post, p. 301.

GREENOUGH v. ECCLES.

COMMON PLEAS. 1859.

28 L. J. C. P. 160; 7 W. R. 341; 5 JUR. N. S. 766;
5 C. B. N. S. 786.

Although a party calling a witness may not discredit him generally, even if he proves "adverse" or "unfavourable," yet if he proves actually "hostile" he may under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (now the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865), by leave of the Judge, give evidence that such witness has made previous inconsistent statements. But he may not give general evidence of the bad character of a witness he himself produces.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

WILLIAMS, J. (delivering the judgment of himself and WILLES, J.). The question in this case is, whether in construing the terms of the 22nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, "in case the witness shall prove adverse," the word "adverse" ought to be understood as meaning merely "unfavourable," or as meaning "hostile." . . . The section lays down three rules as to the power of a party to discredit his own witness: First, he shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of his bad character. Secondly, he may contradict him by other evidence. Thirdly, he may prove that he has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony. These three rules appear to include the principal questions that have ever arisen on the subject. . . . The law relating to the first two of these rules was settled before the passing of the Act, while, as to the third, the authorities were conflicting.

The section requires the Judge to form an opinion that the witness is adverse, before the right to contradict or prove that he has made inconsistent statements is to be allowed to operate. This is reasonable, and indeed necessary, if the word "adverse" means "hostile," but wholly unreasonable and unnecessary if it means "unfavourable." On these grounds we think the preferable construction is, that in case the witness shall, in the opinion of the Judge, prove "hostile," the party producing him may not only contradict him by other witnesses, as he might heretofore have done, and may still do, if the witness is unfavourable, but may also, by leave of the Judge, prove that he has made inconsistent statements. . . .

Note.—Section 22 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which in the above case came before the Court for construction, provided:—
 "A party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of bad character, but he may, in case the witness shall in the opinion of the Judge prove adverse, contradict him by other evidence, or by leave of the Judge, prove that he has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony."

In the above case the word "adverse" was held to mean "hostile" for the purposes of the section of the Act in question.

The above section is now repealed, but it is re-enacted verbatim by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, which applies to both civil and criminal cases (see post, p. 439).

THOMAS v. DAVID.

NISI PRIUS. 1836.

7 C. & P. 350; 48 R. R. 794.

A witness may be cross-examined as to facts tending to show that he is prejudiced or biased in any way in favour of the party calling him, and if he denies such facts, witnesses may be called to contradict him.

In an action on a promissory note, one of the plaintiff's witnesses, who was his female servant, and who was one of the attesting witnesses to the defendant's signature of the promissory note, was asked, on cross-examination, whether she did not constantly sleep in the same bed with her master. She said that she did not. The defendant was allowed to call a witness to prove she did.

COLERIDGE, J. Is it not material to the issue, whether the principal witness who comes to support the plaintiff's case is his kept mistress? If the question had been, whether the witness had walked the streets as a common prostitute, I think that that would have been collateral to the issue, and that, had the witness denied such a charge, she could not have been contradicted; but here, the question is, whether the witness had contracted such a relation with the plaintiff as might induce her the more readily to conspire with him to support a forgery, just in the same way as if she had been asked if she was the sister or daughter of the plaintiff, and had denied that. I think that the contradiction is admissible.

Note.—See also A. G. v. Hitchcock, ante, p. 296.

R. v. BROWN.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1867.

L. R. 1 C. C. R. 70; 36 L. J. M. C. 59; 15 W. R. 795.

A party may call witnesses to swear that, in their opinion, based on their knowledge of the general character and reputation of a witness on the other side, he is not to be believed on his oath.

At the close of the case for the prosecution, the counsel for the defendants, after having called several witnesses to character, proposed to call witnesses to prove that they would not believe the witnesses for the prosecution on their oaths. The Court refused to receive such evidence, but stated a case for the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. The evidence was held admissible.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

KELLY, C.B. It has been the practice to admit the evidence rejected in this case for centuries without dispute, and we have personal knowledge of its existence during our time. So long a practice cannot be altered but by the legislature.

MARTIN, B. The practice has existed as long as I can remember in my professional career.

BYLES and KEATING, JJ., concurred in testifying to the long existence of the practice.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

The Court, however, declined to hear any further argument on the subject, observing that all the text-writers were agreed that the evidence could be given, and that the practice was so ancient, and hitherto so undoubted, that it could not be altered now unless by the authority of the legislature.

Note.—Notwithstanding the clear and emphatic language of the Judges in this case, there appears to be some question as to how far it can be relied on in practice. It certainly is not at all usual to call such evidence. But it seems clear that the evidence must relate to general reputation only and not to specific acts of misconduct. As to proof of Previous Conviction, see post, p. 439. ✓

MATTERS EXCLUDED BY PUBLIC POLICY OR PRIVILEGE.

Although a witness may, in general, be compelled to give evidence, he may still refuse to answer certain questions, or to produce certain documents, on well-recognised grounds of public policy or personal privilege.

The chief matters excluded by Public Policy are:—

- (1) Affairs of State.
- (2) Information for the detection of crime.
- (3) Statements by parents bastardizing their offspring.
- (4) Statements made "without prejudice" (see fully ante, pp. 54—57).

The chief matters protected by Privilege are:—

1. That the answer to the question, or the production of the document, would tend to criminate the witness, or expose him to a criminal charge, penalty or forfeiture.
2. That the answer or document would disclose confidential communications between client and legal adviser, or information obtained for the purposes of litigation.
3. That the document relates solely to the title or case of the witness, if he be a party to the action.
4. That the document is a document of title of the witness, if he be no party to the action.
5. That the answer or document would disclose a communication made to the witness by his wife or her husband.
6. That the answer would tend to show that the witness has been guilty of adultery.

Cases are given below on each of the above points excepting the fifth and sixth. The fifth is statutory, by the Evidence Act, 1853 (see post, p. 427) and the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (see post, p. 469). The sixth is also statutory, by the Evidence Act, 1869 (see post, p. 445).

② PUBLIC POLICY.

① AFFAIRS OF STATE.

BEATSON v. SKENE.

EXCHEQUER. 1860.

29 L. J. Ex. 430; 2 L. T. 378; 8 W. R. 544; 6 Jur.
N. S. 780; 5 H. & N. 838.

Documents and communications respecting matters of State are protected from disclosure, whenever it would be injurious to the public interests. The Judge will generally be guided in this matter by the opinion of the head of the department having the control of the document.

The plaintiff commanded a cavalry corps during the Crimean War. The defendant was a civil commissioner attached to such corps. General Vivian, who commanded in the district, directed Colonel Shirley to inquire into and report on the condition of the corps, referring him to the defendant for information. In a written communication from Colonel Shirley to the General were some defamatory observations concerning the plaintiff, the responsibility of which the defendant adopted, and the plaintiff sued him for slander. The rest of the facts appear from the judgment.

The following is taken from the Law Journal:—

POLLOCK, C.B. (delivering the judgment of the Court, POLLOCK, C.B., MARTIN, BRAMWELL and WILDE, BB.). . . . It appeared that the Secretary of State for War, Mr. Sidney Herbert, had been subpœnaed to produce certain letters written by the plaintiff to him, and also the minutes of a Court of Inquiry as to Colonel Shirley's conduct in writing the letters in question to General Vivian. Mr. Sidney Herbert attended at the trial, but objected to produce the documents on the ground that his doing so would be injurious to the public service. The learned Judge refused to compel their production on Mr. Sidney Herbert making this statement. . . .

We are all of opinion that it cannot be laid that all public documents of every sort, including treaties with foreign powers, and all the correspondence that may precede or accompany them, and all communications to the heads of departments, are to be produced and made public whenever a suitor in a court of justice thinks that his case requires such production. It is manifest, we think, that there must be a limit to the duty or the power of compelling the production of papers which are connected with acts of State.

We are of opinion that if the production of a State paper would be injurious to the public service, the general public interest must be considered paramount to the individual interest of a suitor in a court of justice; and the question then arises, how is this to be determined?

It is manifest it must be determined either by the presiding Judge or by the responsible servant of the Crown in whose custody the paper is. The Judge would be unable to determine it without ascertaining what the document was, and why the publication of it would be injurious to the public service, an inquiry which cannot take place in private, and which, taking place in public, may do all the mischief which it is proposed to guard against. It appears to us, therefore, that the question, whether the production of the document would be injurious to the public service, must be determined, not by the Judge, but by the head of the department having the custody of the paper; and if he is in attendance, and states that in his opinion the production of that document would be injurious to the public service, we think the Judge ought not to compel the production of it. . . . If the head of the department does not attend personally to say that the production of the document will be injurious, but sends the document to be produced or not, as the Judge may think proper, or . . . where a subordinate is sent with the document, with instructions to object, but nothing more; then, indeed, the case may be different, and the Judge may compel the production of it. . . . Perhaps cases might arise where the matter would be so clear that the Judge might well ask for it in spite of some official scruples as to producing it; but this must be considered rather as an extreme case; and extreme cases throw very little light upon the practical rules of life. . . .

Note.—Although, generally, in cases of privilege, other evidence may be given of the facts, yet in the case of State documents or matters the exclusion appears to be absolute, so that no evidence thereof at all is admissible. Unlike other cases of privilege, this is not the privilege of any particular person.

HENNESSY v. WRIGHT.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION. 1888.

L. R. 21 Q. B. D. 509; 57 L. J. Q. B. 594.

In an action against a newspaper for libel in imputing that the plaintiff, the Governor of a Colony, had sent home garbled reports to the Colonial Secretary of certain official proceedings in the Colony, the defendant applied for discovery of copies, in the custody of the plaintiff, of various communications passing either between himself and the Colonial Secretary, or between himself and a Royal Commissioner appointed to enquire into the affairs of the Colony, or between such Commissioner and the Colonial Secretary. The plaintiff, in his affidavit, objected to produce these documents on grounds of public policy, stating that the Colonial Secretary (who, however, had not filed any affidavit) had directed him to that effect. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to withhold production of the copies in question.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

FIELD, J. . . . It is not, and I suppose could not be, alleged that these copies are the joint property of the plaintiff and the Colonial Secretary. . . . A more important question remains. Accepting the other statements in the affidavit as to the circumstances under which the copies were prepared and the action taken by the Colonial Secretary as true, are the copies privileged? There are two aspects of this question. First, the publication of a State document may involve danger to the nation. If the confidential communications made by servants of the Crown to each other, by superiors to inferiors, or by inferiors to superiors, in the discharge of their duty to the Crown were liable to be made public in a Court of justice at the instance of any suitor who thought proper to say "fiat justitia ruat cælum," an order for discovery might involve the country in war. Secondly, the publication of a State document may be injurious to servants of the Crown as individuals. There would be an end of all freedom in their official communications, if they knew that any suitor could legally insist that any official communication, of no matter how secret a character, should be produced openly in a Court of justice. . . . Here, a servant of the Crown, who is himself a party to the communications, is plaintiff. But a servant of the Crown ought not to be placed at a disadvantage in comparison with other subjects, and the plaintiff will be placed at a serious disadvantage if he cannot defend his honour without the seal of secrecy being removed from his official communications. . . . These communications are State documents, and therefore the copies are also State documents and are primâ facie as such privileged from production. . . . It is, however, argued that the copies are not privileged because there has been no sufficient claim of privilege by the Colonial Secretary. . . . The principal case relied on in support of this contention is Beatson v. Skene (supra). . . . It is clear, however, that this decision has no bearing on the present case. The judgment (there) refers not to a summons for discovery, at which the head of the department does not and need not attend, either personally or by deputy, and as regards which neither he nor anyone on his behalf is under any obligation to make an affidavit, but to a proceeding at nisi prius, at which the head of the department has both appeared and objected. I think, however, that there is authority for refusing production of these copies at this stage, apart from any intervention of the Colonial Secretary. . . . I say nothing as to what course should be taken at the trial.

WILLS, J. . . . In my judgment, if the Secretary of State's assurance be necessary in order to protect the documents from inspection, a mere statement such as is contained in the plaintiff's affidavit is quite insufficient. . . . The question, therefore, arises whether, in the absence of objection by the responsible minister of the Crown, it is the duty of the Judge in an application for discovery to prevent the disclosure of the contents of such documents as those now in question. . . . In my opinion, the present case is covered by authority. In Anderson v. Hamilton, 2 B. & B. 156, n., in an action against the Governor of Heligoland, a correspondence between Lord Liverpool and the defendant was produced by the Under-Secretary of State. He made no objection on behalf of the Government to its production; but, notwithstanding that fact, . . . Lord Ellenborough declined to allow "secrets of State to be taken out of the hands of His Majesty's confidential servants." . . . I think the cases show that no sound distinction can be drawn between the duty of the Judge when objection is taken by the responsible officer of the Crown, or by the party, or when, no objection being taken by anyone, it becomes apparent to him that a rule of public policy prevents the disclosure of the documents or information sought.

(2) INFORMATION FOR THE DETECTION OF CRIME.

MARKS v. BEYFUS.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1890.

L. R. 25 Q. B. D. 494; 59 L. J. Q. B. 479.

Prosecutions instituted by the Director of Public Prosecutions are public prosecutions, and the Director may refuse to disclose the names of his informants or the information that they have given him.

In an action against the defendants for maliciously conspiring to prosecute the plaintiff for fraud, upon the trial of which charge he had been acquitted, the plaintiff called the Director of Public Prosecutions as a witness, and asked him to give the names of his informants and to produce the statement on which he had acted in directing the prosecution. The witness declined, on grounds of public policy, and his objection was upheld by the Judge. The plaintiff appealed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD ESHER, M.R. . . . The ground taken on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions is that this was a public prosecution, ordered by the Government (or by an official equivalent to the Government) for what was considered to be a public object, and that therefore the information ought not, on grounds of public policy, to be disclosed. The question whether this was a public prosecution in this sense depends upon the true construction of the statutes by which the office of Director of Public Prosecutions was created. [After referring to 42 & 43 Vict. c. 20, s. 2, and the regulations thereunder, his Lordship continued:] This is language which seems to put the Director of Public Prosecutions in a different position from that of a private prosecutor; he is in the position which a person authorised by the Government in former days would have been in—that is to say, a prosecution instituted or conducted by him is a public as distinguished from a private prosecution. What, then, is the rule in the case of a public prosecution? In the case of Attorney-General v. Briant, 15

M. & W. 169, Pollock, C.B., says: "The rule is, that in a public prosecution the witness cannot be asked such questions as will disclose the informer, if he be a third person . . . and we think the principle of the rule applies where a witness is asked if he himself is the informer." Now this rule was founded on grounds of public policy, and if this was a public prosecution the rule attaches; I think it was a public prosecution and that the rule applies. I do not say it can never be departed from; if the Judge should be of opinion that the disclosure of the name of the informant is necessary or right in order to show the prisoner's innocence, then one public policy is in conflict with another public policy, and that which says that an innocent man is not to be condemned when his innocence can be proved, is the policy that must prevail. But, except in that case, this rule is not a matter of discretion; it is a rule of law, and as such should be applied by the Judge at the trial. The learned Judge was therefore perfectly right in declining to let the witness answer the questions.

Appeal dismissed.

③ STATEMENTS BASTARDIZING OFFSPRING.

RUSSELL v. RUSSELL.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1924.

L. R. [1924] A. C. 687.

When a child has been born in wedlock, it is not competent for either husband or wife to give evidence of their non-access during marriage so as to bastardize such child. This rule is not confined to direct issues of legitimacy, but applies also to divorce proceedings where the evidence is merely tendered in proof of adultery.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

EARL OF BIRKENHEAD. . . . The leading case on the subject, Goodright's Case, 2 Cowp. 591, was decided by Lord Mansfield in the year 1777. . . . This great Judge laid down the law with characteristic lucidity. . . . "It is a rule founded on decency, morality and policy that the parents shall not be permitted to say, after marriage, that they had had no connection and therefore the offspring is spurious; more especially the mother who is the offending party . . ." We have not to ask whether we should ourselves have laid it down; still less to consider whether changed social conditions have undermined its authority. We find the rule living and authoritative. We find its application to legitimacy proceedings everywhere conceded. Our task, therefore, is to determine whether evidence inadmissible in such proceedings is admissible in divorce. . . . The rule as laid down is not limited to any special class of case. It is absolutely general in the comprehensiveness of its expression. It has no geographical qualification. It does not lay down that where husband and wife are present in the same bed; the same bedroom; the same house; or the same town the evidence must be rejected; but that it may, on the other hand, be received if the husband has (for instance) been absent from the country for twelve months before the birth of the child. It says, upon the contrary, that such evidence shall not be given at all; and the reason given is that it would tend, if given, to bastardize the issue and to invade the very special sanctity inherent in the conjugal relation. . . . Lord Mansfield was not concerned with the grossness or indecency of the subject-matter which the reception of such evidence might disclose. . . . No Court is contaminated by examining any facts, or reviewing any language, which the administration of justice requires. Judges must do their duty, sacrificing if necessary their delicacy in the process. What Lord Mansfield meant was that a deeply seated domestic and social policy rendered it unbecoming and indecorous that evidence should be received from such a source; upon such an issue; and with such a possible result. . . .

I find nowhere in any of the cases which were elaborately argued before us any authority for the suggested limitation. And by reference to what principle is such a distinction to be drawn? When we are told that a rule is founded on public policy, decency, and morality, it would seem natural to propose it in all cases to which it applies verbally. If, in an issue where the child himself is a party, it is against public policy to admit the evidence of a parent to prove the bastardy of that child, why should an entirely different policy permit such evidence in the case where the vital issue is still the legitimacy of the child, even though it be raised for a different purpose, and perhaps with secondary emphasis. . . . This evidence we are told is admissible in divorce; being therefore so received it bastardizes the child. But if and when the child, becoming of age, applies for his writ in this House, and proceedings follow, the evidence will not be admissible, and he will be pronounced legitimate. Equally, of course, if the child instituted proceedings to-morrow for a declaration of legitimacy, we should be afforded the agreeable prospect of holding judicially in 1924 that the child was illegitimate; and in 1925 that he was legitimate. Nothing but absolute necessity, founded upon decisions binding upon me, would drive me to a conclusion so ludicrous and incongruous. I find here no such necessity.

It is said that the view recommenced above will revolutionise the practice of the Divorce Court. In such cases, the non-access can almost always be established aliunde. If it cannot be so proved, the practice of the Divorce Court must accommodate itself to the authority of the rule. If the inconvenience proves intolerable, the Legislature, if it thinks proper, may provide a remedy.

I have only now to consider whether sect. 3 of the Act of 1869 has affected the validity of the doctrine. . . . That section makes indeed the parties to any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of such parties, competent to give evidence in such proceeding. What in effect does it make such persons competent to do? Plainly and only, I should have thought, to give such testimony as the law of evidence allowed at that date or, as afterwards modified, that law may allow. It did not, and it did not purport to, alter any existing rule of evidence except that which dealt with the actual competency to give evidence at all.

The conclusions, therefore, which I reach upon the whole matter are: firstly, that the rule as laid down by Lord Mansfield and other great Judges is a general rule to be applied, in the full generality of its scope, to all cases which it is wide enough to cover; secondly, that the Act of 1869 has not affected the rule in any way.

[So held by EARL OF BIRKENHEAD, VISCOUNT FINLAY and LORD DUNEDIN; LORD SUMNER and LORD CARSON dissenting.]

[Note.—A husband may, however, testify that he never had any intercourse with his wife before their marriage, and so may bastardize an alleged child of the marriage born less than six months thereafter (The Poulett Peerage, [1903] A. C. 395). And statements and letters by the wife pointing to non-access may be admissible, not as direct evidence of illegitimacy, but as part of the res gestæ, i.e., as part of a course of conduct from which adultery and illegitimacy may be inferred (The Aylesford Peerage, 11 App. Cas. 1).]

PRIVILEGE.

① CRIMINATING QUESTIONS AND DOCUMENTS.

R. v. BOYES.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1861.

30 L. J. Q. B. 301; 5 L. T. 147; 7 JUR. 1158;
1 B. & S. 311.

A witness, whether a party or stranger, is not compellable to answer any question, or to produce any document, the tendency of which would be to expose the witness (or probably the wife or husband of the witness) to any criminal charge, or any penalty, or forfeiture reasonably likely to be brought, sued for, or enforced. But the danger to be apprehended must be real and appreciable, with reference to the ordinary operation of law in the ordinary course of things.

A witness had been pardoned under the Great Seal, and so could not be prosecuted in the ordinary way. It was no valid objection that he still remained liable to impeachment, to which a pardon is no bar (by the provision of the Act of Settlement).

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COCKBURN, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, COCKBURN, C.J., CROMPTON, HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ.). . . . The question on which our opinion is now required is, whether the enactment of the 3rd section of the Act of Settlement, that "no pardon under the Great Seal shall be pleadable to an impeachment by the Commons in Parliament," is a sufficient reason for holding that the privilege of the witness still existed in this case, on the ground that the witness, though protected by the pardon against every other form of prosecution, might, possibly, be subject to parliamentary impeachment. . . . It was contended that a bare possibility of legal peril was sufficient to entitle a witness to protection; nay, further, that the witness was the sole judge as to whether his evidence would bring him into danger of the law, and that the statement of his belief to that effect, if not manifestly made mala fide, should be received as conclusive.

With the latter of these propositions we are altogether unable to concur. Upon a review of the authorities, we are clearly of opinion . . . that, to entitle a party called as a witness to the privilege of silence, the Court must see, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer. We, indeed, quite agree that if the fact of the witness being in danger be once made to appear, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question, there being no doubt . . . that a question, which might appear at first sight a very innocent one, might, by affording a link in a chain of evidence, become the means of bringing home an offence to the party answering. Subject to this reservation a Judge is, in our opinion, bound to insist on a witness answering, unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place the witness in peril. Further than this, we are of opinion that the danger to be apprehended must be real and appreciable with reference to the ordinary operation of law in the ordinary course of things; not a danger of an imaginary and unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct. We think that a merely remote and naked possibility, out of the ordinary course of law, and such as no reasonable man would be affected by, should not be suffered to obstruct the administration of justice. The object of the law is to afford to a party, called upon to give evidence in a proceeding inter alios protection against being brought by means of his own evidence within the penalties of the law. But it would be to convert a salutary protection into a means of abuse if it were to be held that a mere imaginary possibility of danger, however remote and improbable, was sufficient to justify the withholding of evidence essential to the ends of justice.

Now, in the present case, no one seriously supposes that the witness runs the slightest risk of an impeachment by the House of Commons. . . . To suppose that such a proceeding would be applied to the case of this witness would be ridiculous. . . .

It appears to us, therefore, that the witness in this case was not, in a rational point of view, in the slightest real danger from the evidence he was called upon to give when protected from all legal proceedings, and that it was, therefore, the duty of the presiding Judge to compel him to answer. . . .

Note.—Although, as a rule, a witness is not compelled to criminate himself, several statutes have provided that he shall, in certain specified proceedings, make full discovery and answer all questions, but it is generally provided that such evidence shall not afterwards be used against him. See, for instance, the Larceny Acts, 1861, ss. 29, 85 (post, p. 435), and 1916, s. 43 (post, p. 503); the Explosive Substances Act, 1883, s. 6; the Corrupt Practices Act, 1883, s. 59 (post, p. 456); the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, s. 19; the Companies Act, 1908, s. 175 (post, p. 493); and the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, s. 15 (post, p. 500). But, it should be observed, the last two Acts provide that answers given under compulsory examination may be used in evidence against the deponent, [in the former case without any protection (post, pp. 493, 494), and in the latter with a strictly limited one (post, p. 502)]. A third case should be added under the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1 (e), where the testimony of the accused as to the offence charged is admissible against him notwithstanding that it may tend to criminate him (post, p. 469).]

As regards questions tending to criminate husbands and wives of witnesses, there may be some doubt. Probably the privilege exists in such cases. See Taylor, § 1453; Best, § 126; Stephen, Art. 120; Phipson, 6th ed., 211.

PYE v. BUTTERFIELD.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1864.

34 L. R. Q. B. 17; 13 W. R. 178; 11 JUR. 220;
5 B. & S. 829.

A witness may, on the ground of privilege, refuse to answer a question which tends to show he has done an act which would render him liable to forfeit property.

In an action of ejectment, the Court refused to compel the defendant to answer interrogatories where the answer would tend to show that he had incurred a forfeiture of his lease by reason of his having broken a covenant therein not to under-let the premises.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . According to the authorities which have been cited and the expressions used by the text-writers who have written upon the subject, those rules are perfectly fixed and established, that no man shall be compelled to give an answer which shall have an effect leading to the forfeiture of his estate, except when granted subject to a conditional limitation. . . .

CROMPTON, J. . . . It is a principle of the law of evidence which these Courts have always recognised as applicable to the examination of witnesses, and everything shows that they were averse to extending the power of discovery to cases of forfeiture. From the earliest times the rule has been adopted in the Courts of Equity with regard to discovery. . . .

MELLOR, J., concurred.

Note.—It is only on this ground of forfeiture that a witness can object to answer a question tending to subject him to a civil suit. Otherwise there is no privilege. (See the Witnesses Act, 1806, post, p. 414.)

2 LEGAL PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATIONS AND DOCUMENTS.

WHEELER v. LE MARCHANT.

CHANCERY. 1881.

L. R. 17 CH. D. 675; 50 L. J. CH. 793; 44 L. T. 632;
45 J. P. 728.

Communications made in professional confidence to counsel, solicitors and their clerks, may not be disclosed without consent of the client.

This privilege extends to communications, statements, reports, etc., made by other persons on behalf of the client to the legal adviser, if obtained by the latter for the purpose of litigation or other business, but not otherwise.

Communications made to any other persons than legal advisers, e.g., to medical attendants or advisers, or clergymen, are not privileged.

The Court ordered production of letters which had passed between the solicitors of the defendants and their surveyor, except such (if any) as the defendants should state by affidavit to have been prepared confidentially after dispute had arisen between the plaintiff and the defendants and for the purpose of obtaining information, evidence or legal advice with reference to litigation existing or contemplated between the parties to the action.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

JESSEL, M.R. . . . The principle is of a very limited character. It does not protect all confidential communications which a man must necessarily make in order to obtain advice, even when necessary for the protection of his life or of his honour, to say nothing of his fortune. There are many communications which must be made, because without them the ordinary business of life cannot be carried on, and yet they are not protected. As I have said in the course of the argument, the communication made to a medical man, whose advice is sought by a patient . . . is not protected. Communications made to the priest in the confessional, on matters perhaps considered by the penitent to be more important even than the care of his life or his fortune, are not protected. Communications made to a friend with respect to matters of the most delicate nature, on which advice is sought with respect to a man's honour or reputation, are not protected. Therefore it must not be supposed that there is any principle which says that every confidential communication which, in order to carry on the ordinary business of life, must necessarily be made, is protected. The protection is of a very limited character. It is a protection in this country restricted to the obtaining the assistance of lawyers, as regards the conduct of litigation or the rights of property. It has never gone beyond the obtaining legal advice and assistance; and all things reasonably necessary in the shape of communication to the legal advisers are protected from production or discovery, in order that that legal advice may be obtained safely and sufficiently. . .

The actual communication to the solicitor by the client is, of course, protected, and it is equally protected whether that communication is made by the client in person or by an agent on behalf of the client, and whether made to the solicitor in person or to a clerk or subordinate of the solicitor, who acts in his place and under his direction. Again, with the same view, the evidence obtained by the solicitor, or by his direction, or at his instance, even if obtained by the client, is protected if obtained after litigation has been commenced or threatened, or with a view to the defence or prosecution of such litigation. So, again, it does not matter whether the advice is obtained from the solicitor as to a dealing which is not the subject of litigation. What is protected is the communication necessary to obtain legal advice. It must be a communication made to the solicitor in that character and for that purpose.

But what we are asked to protect here is this: The solicitor being consulted in a matter as to which no dispute has arisen, thinks he would like to know some further facts before giving his advice, and applies to a surveyor to tell him what the state of a given property is, or information of that character, and it is said that information given in answer to such application ought to be protected because it is desired or required by the solicitor in order to enable him the better to give legal advice. It appears to me that it is not only extending the rule beyond what has been previously laid down, but beyond what necessity warrants. . . . It is a rule invented and maintained only for the purpose of enabling a man to obtain legal advice with safety. . . .

BRETT, L.J. The proposition laid before us for approval is, that where one of the parties to an action has in his possession or control documents which passed between his solicitor and third parties, and which contain either information or advice, those documents are protected in his hands from inspection on the ground that they are documents which passed between the solicitor and the third party for the purpose of enabling the solicitor to give advice to his client, although such information and advice was obtained by the solicitor for that purpose at a time when there was no litigation pending between the parties nor any litigation contemplated. It seems to me that that proposition cannot be acceded to. It is beyond any rule which has ever been laid down by the Court, and it seems to me that it is beyond the principle of the rules which have been laid down. The rule as to the non-production of communications between solicitor and client is a rule which has been determined upon as a matter of general or public policy. It is confined entirely to communications which take place with a view to obtaining legal advice from professional persons. It is so confined in terms, it seems to me it is so confined in principle, and it does not extend to the suggested case. . . .

COTTON, L.J. . . . It is said communications between a client and his legal advisers, for obtaining legal advice, are privileged, and therefore any communication between the representatives of the client and the solicitor must also be privileged. That is a fallacious use of the word "representatives." If the representative is a person employed as an agent on the part of the client to obtain the legal advice of the solicitor, of course he stands in exactly the same position, as regards protection, as the client, and his communications with the solicitors stand in the same position as the communications of the principal with his solicitor. But these persons were not representatives in that sense. They were representatives in this sense, that they were employed on behalf of the clients, the defendants, to do certain work, but that work was not the communicating with the solicitors to obtain legal advice. So their communications cannot be protected on the ground that they are communications between the client by his representatives and the solicitor.

In fact, the proposition of the defendant comes to this, that all communications between a solicitor and a third person, in the course of his advising his client, are to be protected.

It was conceded that there was no case that went that length, and the question is, whether we ought, in fully developing the principle, with all reasonable consequences, to protect such documents. Hitherto such documents have been protected only when they have been made in contemplation of some litigation, or for the purpose of giving advice or obtaining evidence with reference to it. And that is reasonable, because then the solicitor is preparing for the defence, or for bringing the action, and all communications he makes for that purpose, and the communications made to him for the purpose of giving him the information are, in fact, the brief in the action, and ought to be protected. . . .

Note.—It should be noticed that the privilege is that of the client, who alone can waive it (Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T. R. 754).

Its extent is stated very clearly in Wills, 276, who says that the privilege protects from disclosure two classes of communications:—

“(i) Confidential communications which have passed at any time between the party or witness and his legal adviser in his professional capacity for the purpose of the former obtaining legal advice for the protection of his interests, information procured in pursuance of such communications for the same purpose, and notes and other records of such communications and information made for the same object;

“(ii) Similar communications, information, notes and records, made or procured with a view to litigation, whether commenced or only contemplated, including therefore instructions to counsel or solicitor, cases to advise, reports, evidence, briefs, etc., prepared on the client's behalf.”

To put it shortly, such communications are protected if made either

- (1) where there is no litigation;
- (2) in view of contemplated litigation;
- (3) in course of actual litigation.

[The words in italics in Mr. Wills' statement, adopted by Mr. Cockle in head (i), appear to conflict with the leading case.]

R. v. COX AND RAILTON.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1884.

L. R. 14 Q. B. D. 153; 54 L. J. M. C. 41; 52 L. T. 25;
33 W. R. 396; 49 J. P. 374; 15 Cox, 611.

Privilege extends only to those communications between solicitor and client which are made in the legitimate course of professional employment of the solicitor.

Communications made in furtherance of any criminal or fraudulent purpose are not privileged.

The Court must in each case determine, upon the facts, whether the accused consulted his solicitor after the crime for the legitimate purpose of being defended, or before the crime for the purpose of being assisted in committing it.

So a solicitor was compelled to disclose what passed between the prisoners and himself on an occasion when they called to consult him with reference to drawing up a bill of sale which was alleged to be fraudulent.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

STEPHEN, J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD COLERIDGE, C. J., HAWKINS, STEPHEN, WATKIN WILLIAMS, and MATHEW, J. J.). . . . The conduct of Mr. Goodman, the solicitor, appears to have been unobjectionable. He was consulted in the common course of business, and gave a proper opinion in good faith. The question therefore is, whether, if a client applies to a legal adviser for advice intended to facilitate or to guide the client in the commission of a crime or fraud, the legal adviser being ignorant of the purpose for which his advice is wanted, the communication between the two is privileged. We expressed our opinion at the end of the argument that no such privilege existed. If it did, the result would be that a man intending to commit treason or murder might safely take legal advice for the purpose of enabling himself to do so with impunity, and that the solicitor to whom the application was made would not be at liberty to give information against his client for the purpose of frustrating his criminal purpose. Consequences so monstrous reduce to an absurdity any principle or rule in which they are involved. . . .

(His Lordship here considered the cases.)

We were greatly pressed with the argument that, speaking practically, the admission of any such exception to the privilege of legal advisers as that it is not to extend to communications made in furtherance of any criminal or fraudulent purpose would greatly diminish the value of that privilege. The privilege must, it was argued, be violated in order to ascertain whether it exists. The secret must be told in order to see whether it ought to be kept. . . .

In each particular case the Court must determine upon the facts actually given in evidence, or proposed to be given in evidence, whether it seems probable that the accused person may have consulted his legal adviser, not after the commission of the crime for the legitimate purpose of being defended, but before the commission of the crime, for the purpose of being guided or helped in committing it. We are far from saying that the question whether the advice was taken before or after the offence will always be decisive as to the admissibility of such evidence. Courts must in every instance judge for themselves on the special facts of each particular case, just as they must judge whether a witness deserves to be examined on the supposition that he is hostile, or whether a dying declaration was made in the immediate prospect of death. . . . Of course, the power in question ought to be used with the greatest care not to hamper prisoners in making their defence, and not to enable unscrupulous persons to acquire knowledge to which they have no right, and every precaution should be taken against compelling unnecessary disclosures.

CALCRAFT v. GUEST.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1898.

[1898] 1 Q. B. 759; 67 L. J. Q. B. 505; 78 L. T. 283;
46 W. R. 420.

In an action for trespass to a fishery, after judgment had been given for the plaintiff, the defendant discovered certain documents which had been used in a former action involving the same rights, but defended by a predecessor in title of the present plaintiff. The documents, which had been prepared for the purposes of the old action, included proofs of witnesses and rough notes of evidence used in the defence of the former action. The originals of these documents had been given up to the present plaintiff, after copies had been taken by the solicitors to the defendant, and on appeal in the present action the defendant claimed to use these copies in support of his case. It was contended by him that (1) as they had not been prepared for the purposes of the present action, they were not privileged; and (2) even if the originals were privileged, he was entitled to use the copies as secondary evidence thereof. Held, (1) that as the originals had been prepared for the purposes of the former action they retained their privilege in the present proceedings; but (2) that the copies were admissible as secondary evidence.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LINDLEY, M.R. I take it that, as a general rule, one may say once privileged always privileged. I do not mean to say that privilege cannot be waived, but that the mere fact that documents used in a previous litigation are held and have not been destroyed, does not amount to a waiver of the privilege. I think that so far as regards professional privilege, Minet v. Morgan (L. R. 8 Ch. 361) covers these documents. Then comes the next question. It appears that the appellant has obtained copies of some of these documents, and is in a position to give secondary evidence of them; and the question is whether he is entitled to do that. That appears to me to be covered by the authority of Lloyd v. Mostyn (10 M. & W. 478), [where] Parke, B., said, "Where an attorney intrusted confidentially with a document communicates the contents, or suffers another to take a copy, surely the secondary evidence so obtained may be produced. Suppose the instrument were even stolen, and a correct copy taken, would it not be reasonable to admit it?" The matter dropped there; but the other members of the Court all concurred in that, which I take to be a distinct authority that secondary evidence in a case of this kind may be received.

RIGBY and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ., concurred.

3 DOCUMENTS RELATING SOLELY TO A PARTY'S OWN CASE.

MORRIS v. EDWARDS.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1890.

L. R. 15 A. C. 309; 60 L. J. Q. B. 292; 63 L. T. 26.

A party to an action cannot be compelled to produce documents which he swears relate solely to his own title or case, and do not tend to prove or support that of his adversary.

In an action to recover land, the defendant swore, in an affidavit of documents, that the documents in question related solely to his own title and did not tend in any way to prove or to support the plaintiff's title.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

LORD HALSBURY, L.C. . . . The affidavit appears to be as plain as anything can be: "I object to produce the said documents set forth in the first part of the second schedule hereto, on the ground that they relate solely to my own title to the freehold property in the statement of claim mentioned, and do not in any way tend to prove or to support the title of the plaintiffs or either of them." It appears to me that it is absolutely hopeless to contend that there is any authority for going behind that statement. . . . It would be absolutely destructive of anything like privilege of documents, because in every case you might controvert an affidavit and have an interrogatory as to whether or not the document might be seen, and the "privilege" would then be absolutely nugatory: the effect of it would be gone. For that plain and simple reason the Courts have always refused to enter into an inquiry of that sort. . . .

LORD HERSCHELL. . . . The defendant, in relation to those documents, has stated on oath that they "do not in any way tend to prove or to support the title" of the plaintiffs, and that they are deeds relating solely to his own title. . . . It appears to me that primâ facie this affidavit, according to the authorities, is absolutely sufficient. . . . But assuming that there may be cases in which an interrogatory directed to a particular document would be admissible, there must be some special ground or reason shown why in the particular case the interrogatory ought to be permitted.

LORDS MACNAGHTEN, MORRIS and FIELD concurred.

Note.—It would appear from this case that, with respect to a party's documents, there is no real or substantial privilege, as he can only refuse production if he swears they will not help his opponent. It is otherwise with respect to a mere witness's documents. See next case.

In a recent important case the House of Lords held that, although as a general rule it is not permissible to go behind the affidavit of documents in an application for discovery, in the absence of an admission, either in the affidavit or in some other document, showing that there are other documents which ought to have been included, the rule is qualified where the basis on which the affidavit was made turns out to be wrong. If the party making the affidavit has mis-conceived his case, so that the Court is practically certain that if he had conceived it properly and had acted upon a proper view of the law he would have disclosed further documents, then the Court can refuse to recognise the affidavit as conclusive and order a further affidavit (British Association, etc. v. Nettlefold, [1912] A. C. 709).

④ DOCUMENTS OF TITLE OF A WITNESS.

PICKERING v. NOYES.

KING'S BENCH. 1823.

1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 110; 1 B. & C. 262; 2 D. & R. 386.

A person who is not a party to the action cannot be compelled to produce his title deeds, or other documents relating to his title to any property.

The Court, therefore, on the application of the defendant, in an action brought to try the title to land, refused to compel the plaintiff or his landlord to permit the defendant to inspect or take a copy of one of the landlord's title deeds to his estate.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

ABBOTT, C.J. . . . The present request is made, not in furtherance of a right, but with the intention of looking into and examining another man's title to his estate. We should be much concerned if any authority could be found for such an application. The Courts have gone quite far enough in these matters, but yet they have never made the order unless one party was clearly a trustee for the other. It would work great injustice to compel a party to give a copy of his title-deeds. If he brings them into Court under the power of a subpœna duces tecum, no Judge would compel him to read them.

BAYLEY, HOLROYD and BEST, JJ., concurred.

COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE.

See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, s. 3, post, p. 427, and 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, s. 1 (d), post, p. 469.

6 QUESTIONS TENDING TO SHOW ADULTERY OF WITNESS.

See 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3, post, p. 445.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS.

When a party seeks to put in evidence the contents of a document, the best evidence rule (see ante, p. 154), lays down that he shall produce the original, the ordinary primary evidence thereof, unless his opponent has admitted the contents of the original: an admission being also considered primary evidence (see ante, p. 187). This rule is strongly illustrated by the first of the cases following. Other cases show that the rule only applies where the contents of the document are in question, and not merely its existence, or the position created by it.

But in certain cases, where the party is unable to get the original, secondary evidence of the document is allowed, i.e., either a copy of the document or verbal evidence of its contents. A "draft," verified as correct, is really a copy.

Secondary evidence of the contents of a document is allowed:—

1. When the original is in the possession or power of an opponent, who refuses or omits to produce it after notice to produce.
2. When the original is in the possession of a stranger, not legally compellable to produce it, who refuses to do so when served with a subpœna duces tecum.
3. When the original is lost or destroyed, and it is proved that proper search has been made for it.
4. When the original cannot be brought to Court, either because it is physically impossible, or not legally allowed or required to be so brought, as in the case of "Public Documents."

Cases are given on each of these points.

Rules to Best Evidence

PRIMARY EVIDENCE OF DOCUMENTS.

MACDONNELL v. EVANS.

COMMON PLEAS. 1852.

21 L. J. C. P. 141; 18 L. T. 241; 16 JUR. 103;
11 C. B. 930; 87 R. R. 818.

As regards documents, the best evidence in the possession or power of the party tendering it must be given. Generally, the best evidence of a document is the original document, which is "primary evidence" of its contents. Such original must be produced unless its absence is accounted for.

In an action on a bill of exchange, a witness, called by the plaintiff, was asked in cross-examination by the defendant's counsel, who produced a letter purporting to have been written by the witness: "Did you not write that letter in answer to a letter charging you with forgery?" The counsel for the plaintiff objected to the question on the ground that it was an attempt to get in evidence the contents of a written document without producing the document itself. It was held that the objection was a good one.

The following is from the Common Bench Reports:—

JERVIS, C.J. . . . The rule of evidence which governs this case is applicable to all cases where witnesses are sworn to give evidence upon the trial of an issue. That rule is, that the best evidence in the possession or power of the party must be produced. What the best evidence is must depend upon circumstances. Generally speaking, the original document is the best evidence; but circumstances may arise in which secondary evidence of the contents may be given. In the present case, those circumstances do not exist. For anything that appeared, the defendant's counsel might have had the letter in his hand when he put the question. It was sought to give secondary evidence of the contents of a letter, without in any way accounting for its absence, or showing any attempt to obtain it. It is enough for us to decide upon the application of the general rule. The best evidence of the contents of the document was not tendered. . . .

MAULE, J. . . . It is a general rule . . . that, if you want to get at the contents of a written document, the proper way is, to produce it, if you can. That is a rule in which the common sense of mankind concurs. If the paper is in the possession of the party who seeks to have the jury infer something from its contents, he should let them see it. That is the general and ordinary rule; the contents can only be proved by the writing itself. If the document does not exist, or the party seeking to show its contents cannot get at it, he is at liberty to give secondary evidence, because in that case no better is to be had. An early writer (Gilbert) on the law of evidence states the rule to be, that you shall not give evidence which shows that better is in existence. That seems to me to be a reasonable way of dealing with the matter. Here, the very form of the question, "Did you not write that letter in answer to a letter containing so and so?" assumes that there is another letter in existence, the production of which would be the best proof of its contents. There was nothing to show why that letter was not forthcoming. Our decision does not, and need not, go further than that. . . .

CRESWELL, J. . . . It is said here that the object of the question objected to was merely to test the accuracy of the witness's memory, to try his credit. But, shift it as you will, it was a mere attempt to get in evidence of the contents of a written document, without putting in the document itself. The jury were expected and intended to be induced to act upon the inference that the fact existed which that letter was assumed to state. There was nothing to show that the defendant had not the letter in his possession or under his control at the time. If the contents of an absent document may be repeated under pretence of testing the credit or the memory of a witness, it will always be in the power of parties to evade the rule which requires the best evidence to be produced, viz., the instrument itself. The most mischievous consequences would, I conceive, result from such a relaxation of the rule.

WILLIAMS, J., concurred.

Note.—Among other kinds of primary evidence of a private document the chief are admissions (see ante, p. 38). "Duplicate originals," or copies executed by all parties, are primary evidence against all such parties. "Counterparts," or copies executed by certain parties only, are primary evidence against such parties only. In a few cases, copies of public documents are made primary evidence—e.g., a probate copy of a will—by various statutes (see Phipson, 6th ed., 533—9; and as to what are "documents" within the rule, id. 533; and see post, pp. 333, 391).

R. v. ELWORTHY.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1867.

L. R. 1 C. C. R. 103; 37 L. J. M. C. 3; 17 L. T. 293;
16 W. R. 207; 10 Cox, C. C. 579.

The original document must be produced whenever there is a question as to its contents or terms, unless for special reasons secondary evidence is allowed; for instance, where it is in the possession of the other party and notice to produce the original has been given to him.

But where its contents are not in question, the document being in the position of or treated as a chattel or piece of property merely, as where there are conflicting claims as to its possession, there is no legal obligation to produce or account for it.

A solicitor was indicted for perjury in having sworn there was no draft of a certain statutory declaration. No notice to produce this draft had been given to the accused in whose possession it was.

The materiality of the existence of such draft turned upon its contents and the fact of certain alterations having been made in it. It was held that secondary evidence of its contents was not admissible, as no notice to produce the original had been given, and the nature of the proceedings was not such as to operate as a notice to produce.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

KELLY, C.B. . . . The exact contents of the draft, therefore, became essential to the prosecution on the present indictment, because upon its contents depended the materiality or immateriality of the evidence on the former trial. The prosecution then gave evidence of the existence of the draft, that it came into the prisoner's hands and had not passed from him. Parol evidence of its contents was thereupon admitted, and the question raised is, whether, in order to give parol evidence of the contents of that document, notice to produce it ought to have been given. There is no doubt that, according to the general rule of evidence, such notice must have been given; but it is contended that this case falls within those cases which have established an exception to the rule, and made the secondary evidence here admissible without notice to produce the original. For example, it is said that in trover for a deed or other written document, parol evidence might be given of the contents of the document without notice to the defendant to produce it; but the defendant there has notice by the nature of the action itself and the description of the document in the declaration, without further notice that he is called upon to produce the document. He can therefore do so if he thinks fit. We do not, however, think that that case is applicable here. . . .

There was nothing on the indictment or the evidence to show that in order to sustain this prosecution, the prisoner was called upon to admit secondary evidence of this document being given against him. If sufficient notice had been given to him, he might have produced it. Speaking for myself, I think that the admissibility of secondary evidence, without the production of the best evidence or the document itself, ought not to be extended.

BRAMWELL, B. If the question had been merely as to the existence of the draft, I should have been inclined to think the evidence admissible; but the prosecution gave in evidence the contents to show that the prisoner's denial of its existence was wilful; therefore the contents and the alterations therein became material. I think that parol testimony cannot be given of any existing written document without laying a proper foundation for it. No exception to that rule is here applicable. The indictment did not give notice to the prisoner that he would be required to produce the original draft. . . .

WILLES, BYLES and LUSH, JJ., concurred.

Note.—It is provided by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 123, that a seaman may prove the contents of an agreement without producing or giving notice to produce the agreement. See post, p. 464.

R. v. HOLY TRINITY, HULL.

KING'S BENCH. 1827.

6 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 24; 7 B. & C. 611; 1 MAN. & RY.
444; 31 R. R. 267.

Although a certain legal relation or position has been created by a written document, yet the mere fact of such relation or position may be proved by parol or secondary evidence, without production of the document.

The question was, whether a pauper had gained a settlement in a certain parish by the occupation of a tenement. Parol evidence was admitted to prove the mere fact of tenancy, although it had been created by a written document.

The following is from Barnewall and Cresswell:—

BAYLEY, J. The general rule is that the contents of a written document cannot be proved without producing it. But although there may be a written instrument between a landlord and tenant defining the terms of the tenancy, the fact of the tenancy may be proved by parol, without proving the terms of it. It was unnecessary in this case to prove by the written instrument either the fact of tenancy or the value of the premises.

LITLEDALE, J. Payment of rent as rent is evidence of tenancy, and may be proved without producing the written instrument.

Note.—Where it was necessary to prove the length of the tenancy as distinct from its mere existence, it was held that the lease must be produced (Twyman v. Knowles, 13 C. B. 222).

WHARAM v. ROUTLEDGE.

NISI PRIUS. 1805.

5 ESPINASSE, 235; 8 R. R. 851.

A party who produces a document when called for on notice to produce may insist that it shall be put in evidence by his opponent if the latter uses it or inspects it, provided it is relevant.

The defendant's counsel called for a certain book which was in the possession of the plaintiff. He was told he should have it, provided it was then to be received in evidence, but he required to see it first.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J. You cannot ask for a book of the opposite party and be determined upon the inspection of it whether you will use it or not. If you call for it you make it evidence for the other side if they think fit to use it. . . .

Note.—"The reason for this rule is, that it would give an unconscionable advantage to a party, to enable him to pry into the affairs of his adversary, without at the same time subjecting him to the risk of making whatever he inspects evidence for both parties" (Taylor, § 1817).

DOE v. HODGSON.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1840.

9 L. J. Q. B. 327; 4 JUR. 1202; 12 A. & E. 135;
4 P. & D. 142; 2 MO. & ROB. 283; 54 R. R. 553.

A party who refuses to produce a document when called for on notice to produce, and so allows secondary evidence of its contents to be given, cannot afterwards use the original as evidence without the consent of the other party.

In an action of ejectment, the plaintiff relied on payment of rent by the defendant, whom he served with notice to produce receipts. Production was refused, and other evidence was given of payment.

Defendant's counsel afterwards, as part of his case, put in the receipts as evidence. They were rejected by the Court.

The following is from Adolphus and Ellis:—

LORD DENMAN, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, DENMAN, C.J., LITLEDALE, PATTESON and WILLIAMS, JJ.). In this case the question was, whether a party, who, at the trial, had refused to produce a writing which he possessed, and thereby had drawn the other party to give secondary evidence of its contents, could afterwards produce it. I thought, at the trial, that he could not; considering it to be the rule that, where he had the opportunity, and had declined to produce the writing, he could not afterwards bring forward its contents. Our opinion is, that that is the rule of practice; and that, when that refusal has taken place, the party who had refused to produce the writing could not afterwards be at liberty to give it in evidence.

Note.—The same rule has been applied to the refusal to produce things when called for by the opposite party, e.g., a dog (Lewis v. Hartley, 7 C. & P. 405).

R. v. HUNT.

KING'S BENCH. 1820.

3 B. & ALD. 566; 22 R. R. 485.

The original writing must be produced, or its absence accounted for, only when it is really a "document." Parol evidence may be given of any other written or printed words, inscriptions, etc., without production or accounting for the originals.

On a charge of conspiracy, seditious meeting and riot, it appeared in evidence that there were various flags and banners, bearing inscriptions and devices of a seditious and inflammatory tendency, and that they were seized by the police officers on dispersion of the mob. On parol evidence of such inscriptions and devices being tendered, it was objected that the flags or banners ought to have been produced, or that notice should have been given to produce the originals. This objection was overruled, and the parol evidence was held admissible.

ABBOTT, C.J. . . . With respect to the last point, the reception of the evidence as to the inscriptions on the flags or banners, I think it was not necessary either to produce the flags or to give notice to the defendants to produce them. The cases requiring the production of a writing itself will be found to apply to writings of a very different character. There is no authority to show that in a criminal case ensigns, banners, or other things exhibited to public view, and of which the effect depends upon such public exhibition, must be produced or accounted for on the part either of the prosecutor or of the defendants. And in many instances the proof of such matters from eye-witnesses, speaking to what they saw on the occasion, has been received, and its competency was never, to my knowledge, called in question until the present time. Inscriptions used on such occasions are the public expression of the sentiments of those who bear and adopt them, and have rather the character of speeches than of writings. If we were to hold that words inscribed on a banner so exhibited could not be proved without the production of the banner, I know not upon what reason a witness should be allowed to mention the colour of the banner or even to say that he saw a banner displayed, for the banner itself may be said to be the best possible evidence of its existence and its colour. And if such parol proof may be received generally, the proof at this trial was properly received: notwithstanding the allegation that the things themselves, or some of them, were in the hands of a constable then at York; for, in the first place, this fact did not appear (if indeed it appeared at any time distinctly) until after the evidence was received; and, in the second place, if it had appeared distinctly at the time when the parol evidence was offered, still that particular fact would not affect the competency of the other proof, such other proof being competent upon general principles. Its proper effect would only be to furnish matter of observation to the jury on the part of the defendants, that the prosecutor chose to offer only the fallible testimony of witnesses where he had it in his power to produce the infallible testimony of the things themselves. . . .

BAYLEY, HOLROYD and BEST, JJ., concurred.

Note.—As to what are “documents,” see ante, p. 391.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE OF DOCUMENTS.

Dwyer v. Collins.

EXCHEQUER. 1852.

21 L. J. Ex. 225; 16 JUR. 569; 7 Ex. 639;
86 R. R. 770.

Secondary evidence of a document is admissible when the original is in the possession of the opposite party, who refuses to produce it after a proper notice to produce has been served on him.

The object of a notice to produce is merely to give the other party sufficient opportunity to produce the document if he pleases, and not that he may have time to consider the terms of the document, and to prepare evidence or argument in support of or against it. Therefore, where the document is in Court at the time of the trial, a notice to produce it immediately is sufficient to render secondary evidence of its contents admissible if it be not produced.

In an action on a bill of exchange, the plaintiff's attorney, who was called by the defendant as a witness, admitted that he had the bill in Court but he declined to produce it. Secondary evidence of its contents was allowed.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

PARKE, B. (delivering the judgment of the Court, POLLOCK, C.B., PARKE, PLATT and MARTIN, BB.). . . . The next question is, whether the bill being admitted to be in Court, parol evidence was admissible on its non-production by the attorney on demand, or whether previous notice to produce was necessary. On principle the answer must depend on this: why the notice to produce is required. If it be to give to the opponent notice that such a document would be used by the party to the cause, so that the opponent may be enabled to prepare evidence to explain or confirm it, then, no doubt, a notice at the trial, although the document be in Court, is too late; but if it be merely to enable the party to have the document in Court, to produce it if he likes, and if he does not, to enable his opponent to give parol evidence,—if it be merely to exclude the argument that the opponent has not taken all reasonable means to procure the original, which he must do before he can be permitted to make use of secondary evidence, then the demand of production at the trial is sufficient. . . .

We think the plaintiff's alleged principle is not the true one on which the notice to produce is required, but that it is merely to give sufficient opportunity to the opposite party to produce it if he pleases, and thereby to secure the best evidence of its contents, and the request to produce it immediately is quite sufficient for that purpose if the document be in Court. . . .

Note.—It should be observed that one party to an action can always serve another party to the action with a subpœna duces tecum to produce a document in his possession, and thus compel him to produce the original, but he need not serve a subpœna. It may be that he has satisfactory secondary evidence of the document and does not require the original. But he cannot put in such secondary evidence without giving the other party the opportunity of producing the original if he wishes to do so. Such opportunity is afforded by serving the party holding the original with a mere notice to produce it. The party so served need not obey the notice and produce the original. As the document is to be put in evidence against himself, he may elect that secondary evidence thereof may be put in. If, therefore, he does not produce the original, the party serving the notice may avail himself of his secondary evidence. Naturally it is not so when the original is in the possession of a stranger, who cannot thus consent that secondary evidence shall be used against another person, a party to the action. The two cases following deal with such question.

Shortly, a subpœna is a writ, which must be obeyed. Its object is to compel production. A notice to produce is a mere invitation from one party to another. It cannot be used for a stranger to the action. It invites one party to produce the document and legally intimates to him that, if he does not do so, secondary evidence may be tendered against him. Its object is not to compel production, but to enable secondary evidence to be put in. See further, as to subpœnas, post, p. 399.

MILLS v. ODDY.

NISI PRIUS. 1834.

6 C. & P. 728; 40 R. R. 847.

Secondary evidence of a document is admissible when the original is in the hands of a stranger, or third person, who is, on the ground of privilege, not compellable by law to produce it, and who refuses to do so, either when summoned as a witness with a "subpœna duces tecum," or when sworn as a witness without a subpœna, if he admits that he has the document in Court.

In order to show the amount of ground-rent at which a certain house was held, a witness, not a party to the action, was called, having been subpœnaed to produce the lease. He said: "I am the principal clerk in the office of the Comptroller of the Bridge-house Estates. I have the counterpart of the lease of this house from the Corporation of the City of London to a person named Longmore. I decline producing it, as it is a title-deed of the Corporation. I am an attorney. The Comptroller of the Bridge-house Estates is the attorney and solicitor of the Corporation in all matters relating to the Bridge-house estates."

It was held that production of the deed was rightfully refused, and therefore secondary evidence of its contents might be given.

PARKE, B. The attorney is not to produce his client's title-deeds, nor to disclose their contents; and this witness is in fact in the same situation as the attorney. The Comptroller is the solicitor of the Corporation for this purpose, and this gentleman is the principal clerk in his Office. . . .

If you have any one who has seen this lease, who does not claim under it as one of his title-deeds, and who is not privileged as attorney or solicitor, he may give secondary evidence of its contents. There is an impossibility of your producing it, as the person who has it cannot be compelled to produce it under his subpœna.

Note.—As to privilege for title-deeds, see ante, p. 324. As to the differences between a subpœna and a notice to produce, and between parties and strangers, see note to previous case.

It is also said—"If a material document be in possession of a person who is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court and who consequently cannot be compelled to produce it, the party relying on it may give secondary evidence of its contents, provided he has informed the person outside the jurisdiction of the purpose for which the document is required, and done all in his power to procure the attendance of that person or the presence of that document at the trial" (Powell, 10th ed., 318—9; Phipson, 6th ed., 546—8, and cases cited).

R. v. INHABITANTS OF LLANFAETHLY.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1853.

23 L. J. M. C. 33; 2 W. R. 61; 17 JUR. 1123;
2 E. & B. 940; 2 C. L. R. 230.

Secondary evidence of a document is not admissible if a stranger or third person wrongfully refuses to produce the original after being served with a subpoena to do so, as such person can be compelled to produce the original.

A subpoena had been served on a witness to produce a rate-book, supposed to be in his possession. He did not attend, and the rate-book was not produced. It was held that parol evidence of rating was not admissible, the witness having improperly neglected to produce the book.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. . . . It has been held that if, under a subpoena duces tecum, the witness appears and stands on his privilege and refuses to produce the document, and the Judge admits the objection, secondary evidence is then admissible. But here no privilege existed, and the witness would have been bound to produce the rate-book, and would have been punishable for contempt if he had refused to do so. . . .

ERLE, J. The appellants had the duty cast upon them of establishing the contents of the rate-book, and they must therefore either produce it or account satisfactorily for its absence. They have not done either of these things by serving the party who is supposed to have the rate-book, but who, in fact, had it not, with a subpoena to produce it. I am further of opinion that, even if they had served the party in whose possession it really was, to produce the book, and that party has disobeyed the subpoena, secondary evidence of its contents would not have been admissible. . . .

Note.—The law requires that a party shall do all that he can legally do to compel production of a document by a stranger before he puts in secondary evidence against an opponent. Otherwise secondary evidence of an unreliable character might be tendered against a party by collusion between his opponent and the stranger. If production can be compelled by subpœna it must be compelled. See note to the two previous cases.

BREWSTER v. SEWELL.

KING'S BENCH. 1820.

3 B. & ALD. 296; 22 R. R. 395.

Secondary evidence of a document is admissible when the original is lost or destroyed, but it must be shown that proper search has been made for it. What is proper search depends on the nature and value of the document. More careful search will be required for a valuable than for a useless document.

In 1813, a fire occurred at the plaintiff's premises, and the Insurance Co. paid the claim. A fresh policy was afterwards taken out by the plaintiff. In 1819 the plaintiff had occasion to give evidence concerning the earlier policy, but he could not produce the original. He produced evidence to the effect that search had been made in every place in which the document, if still in existence, would be likely to be found, but it could not be found; and that he had treated it as a worthless document after the new policy had been issued, and did not remember what had become of it. It was held that sufficient search for such an apparently useless document had been made to allow secondary evidence to be given.

ABBOTT, C.J. All evidence is to be considered with regard to the matter with respect to which it is produced. Now it appears to be a very different thing, whether the subject of inquiry be a useless paper, which may reasonably be supposed to be lost, or whether it be an important document which the party might have an interest in keeping, and for the non-production of which no satisfactory reason is assigned. This is the case of a policy of insurance, by which a company undertook to indemnify the plaintiff against losses by fire. A fire took place, and a loss was paid. That having taken place, the original policy became mere waste paper. There was no reason to suppose that the policy could, at any future time, be called for, to answer any reasonable purpose whatever. . . . This being a case, therefore, where the loss or destruction of the paper may almost be presumed, very slight evidence of its loss or destruction is sufficient. . . .

The clerk of the plaintiff's attorney then went to the plaintiff's house, where the plaintiff himself showed him all his drawers and places where a person might reasonably be supposed to keep his papers; the clerk examines them all, searches a pile of papers, opens the iron chest, and, in short, he looks not only in every place which the plaintiff pointed out, but in every place which he thought, on his view of the premises, was likely to contain a paper of this description. Upon such evidence, applied to such a paper, it does appear to me to be reasonable to presume that it was lost, and that the legal presumption is, that it was absolutely lost.

BAYLEY, J. There is a great distinction between useful and useless papers. The presumption of law is that a man will keep all those papers which are valuable to himself, and which may, with any degree of probability, be of any future use to him. The presumption on the contrary is that a man will not keep those papers which have entirely discharged their duty, and which are never likely to be required for any purpose whatever. Under the circumstances of this case, and considering the lapse of time which has occurred, I should have thought that much less evidence would have been sufficient to entitle the party to give the secondary evidence.

HOLROYD, J. It appears that the document had for some time become wholly useless. The contents of the paper, at least as far as particular terms of the policy were concerned, were perfectly immaterial. . . . Now the reason why the law requires the original instrument to be produced is this, that other evidence is not so satisfactory, where the original document is in the possession of the party, and where it is in his power to produce it or to get it produced, provided he gives notice. In either of these cases, if he does not produce it, or take the necessary steps to obtain its production, but resorts to other evidence, the fair presumption is, that the original document would not answer his purpose, and that it would differ from the secondary evidence which he gives with respect to the instrument itself. . . . It seems to me, therefore, that this being a useless instrument, where the particular terms of the instrument are immaterial, the party cannot be presumed to have any improper purpose in resorting to secondary evidence. Then, as to the search for the paper, I think, for the reasons stated by the Court, that sufficient was done to entitle the party to give secondary evidence.

BEST, J. It is very difficult to lay down any general rule as to the degree of diligence necessary to be used in searching for an original document, to entitle the party to give secondary evidence of its contents. That must depend, in a great measure, upon the circumstances of each particular case. If a paper be of considerable value, or if there be reason to suspect that the party not producing it has a strong interest which would induce him to withhold it, a very strict examination would properly be required; but if a paper be utterly useless, and the party could not have any interest in keeping it back, a much less strict search would be necessary to let in parol evidence of its contents. It seems to me, however, in this case, that sufficient diligence was used. . . .

Note.—Even if the document had been destroyed by the party tendering the secondary evidence under very suspicious circumstances, it would appear that the secondary evidence would be admissible, subject of course to strong criticism and discredit.

The case of Sugden v. St Leonards, ante, p. 238, might properly be placed under the present heading.

MORTIMER v. M'CALLAN.

EXCHEQUER. 1840.

4 JUR. 172; 6 M. & W. 58.

Secondary evidence of a document is admissible, where the original cannot be brought to Court; either because it is physically impossible to bring the original, as in the case of writings on walls, tombstones and the like; or because the law does not allow, or require, the original to be brought to the Court, on grounds of public convenience, as in the case of public registers, and other "Public Documents," including the books of the Bank of England.

In order to prove acceptance of certain stock by the defendant, evidence was adduced that a person unknown to the clerk in the Bank of England came there with one Taylor, and made an entry of his acceptance of the stock, and a witness was then called, who proved that he had inspected the Bank books, and that the signature to the acceptance of the stock was in the defendant's handwriting. It was held that this evidence was admissible to prove the acceptance of the stock by the defendant, and that it was not necessary that the Bank books themselves should be produced—on the ground of public convenience.

The following is from Meeson and Welsby:—

LORD ABINGER, C.B. . . . It has been established by a series of decisions, the first of them I think by Lord Mansfield, that the books of the Bank of England being of great concernment to the whole of the national creditors, the removal of them would be so inconvenient, that copies of them might be received in evidence. It was founded upon the principle, that the public inconvenience, from the removal of documents of that sort, would justify the introduction of secondary evidence. That principle has been adopted in a variety of cases, and has never been questioned since. I know there have been attempts to apply it in cases where it was not applicable: the first was the case of Rex v. Lord George Gordon (2 Doug. 590), where copies of the journals of the House of Commons were offered to be given in evidence, and supported on the ground of the above decision by Lord Mansfield as to the books of the Bank of England; but they were rejected by him on the trial, on the ground that no such inconvenience would attend the removal of the journals of the House of Commons, as any wishing to remove them could get the sanction of the Speaker to do so. . . . The next case that arose was with respect to the books of the Customs and Excise. It was formerly the practice to produce them, but after some consideration it was thought that the public inconvenience was so great, that it has become every day's practice, in this and the other Courts, to allow copies of those books to be received in evidence. That goes upon the general principle of not removing books of general concernment. Then does not that principle apply in all such cases? The public inconvenience in this case is as great as in the case of any other books. I think a case has been aptly put by my brother Alderson, that if a writing were on a wall, might you not give evidence of the character of the handwriting, as probable evidence of who wrote it, without producing the wall in Court? Suppose a man, instead of printing a libel in the usual way, were to write it on the dead walls of the metropolis, is it to be said that he cannot be punished, because you cannot produce the wall in Court? May you not, in such a case, prove his handwriting? . . .

correct

I think it was competent evidence, for the purpose of proving the identity of the party who accepted this stock, to show that an entry in the books of the Bank of England was the handwriting of that party. The principle of law is, that where you cannot get the best possible evidence, you must take the next best; and where the law was laid down that you cannot remove the document in which the writing is made, you are to be entitled to the next best evidence of it, by proving whose writing it was. . . .

ALDERSON, B. . . . The Bank books are not capable of being produced without so much public inconvenience, that the Courts have directed them to remain in the Bank, and copies of them to be received in evidence for the purpose for which the books are receivable. Then, if they are not removable on the ground of public inconvenience, that is upon the same footing in point of principle as in the case of that which is not removable by the physical nature of the thing itself. Inscriptions upon tombstones or on a wall are proved every day in this way for that reason. The necessity of the case in the one instance and in the other case the general public inconvenience which would follow from the books being removed, supplies the reason of the rule. . . .

GURNEY, B., concurred.

Note.—[The dictum of Lord Abinger as to Journals of the House of Commons seems incorrect; copies were admitted in R. v. Ld. Gordon and other cases (Phipson, 552); and see now 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, post, p. 421.] The two special rules respecting "public documents" have been stated, ante, p. 250, where the former of such rules has been shortly explained. The latter rule, as to proof by secondary evidence, is here in question.

The reason for not requiring production of original public documents, and the consequent admission of secondary evidence—the inconvenience to the public—is obvious, and is emphasised in the above case.

A multitude of statutory provisions have been made for the proof of public documents of various kinds. These cannot be referred to here in detail, but an excellent summary of such provisions, in a tabular form, has been drawn up by Mr. Wills in his book on Evidence (Appendix A), which has been copied in Stephen (Appendix). The matter is also dealt with at length in Taylor, Pt. V., Ch. IV.; Phipson, Ch. XLIII.; and Powell, Book II., Ch. VI. Reference should be made to the above works for any special case. See also post, p. 530.

There are four chief methods of proof of public documents, i.e., by—

(1) Examined Copies. Copies proved by oral evidence to have been examined with, and to correspond with, the originals. The witness may either have examined the original himself with the copy, or have examined the copy while another person, not called as a witness, read from the original. All public documents may be proved in this manner, but certified or office copies are generally used when available. See post, p. 426.

(2) Certified Copies. Copies signed and certified as correct by officials having custody of the originals. They are allowed as evidence by various statutes, and are used chiefly to prove entries in registers, proceedings of corporations and companies, bye-laws and the like. See post, p. 426.

(3) Office Copies. Copies made by officials having custody of judicial documents, and sealed with the seal of the Court. They are the usual method of proving judicial documents, such as judgments, orders, affidavits and the like. See post, p. 513.

(4) Government Printer's Copies. Copies supplied by the Government Printer, King's Printer, or under the authority of the Stationery Office. They are the usual and proper method of proving Acts of Parliament, proclamations, orders, regulations, etc. See post, pp. 420, 443, 453, 468, 479.

It will be observed that, in the above case, the books of the Bank of England were treated as public documents, as "being of great concernment to the whole of the national creditors." But the books of other banks were not so treated as public. The Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, contains very important provisions with regard to banks generally. See post, p. 450.

DOE v. ROSS.

EXCHEQUER. 1840.

10 L. J. Ex. 201; 4 JUR. 321; 7 M. & W. 102;

8 D. P. C. 389.

There are, generally, no degrees of secondary evidence. When a party is at liberty to adduce secondary evidence, he may put in any description of the same he pleases.

Thus, although a party has a copy of a document, he may give verbal evidence of it; subject of course to observation when more satisfactory evidence is thus withheld.

The following is from Meeson and Welsby:—

LORD ABINGER, C.B. . . . Upon examination of the cases, and upon principle, we think there are no degrees of secondary evidence. The rule is, that if you cannot produce the original, you may give parol evidence of its contents. If indeed the party giving such parol evidence appears to have better secondary evidence in his power, which he does not produce, that is a fact to go to the jury, from which they might sometimes presume that the evidence kept back would be adverse to the party withholding it. But the law makes no distinction between one class of secondary evidence and another.

PARKE, B. . . . There can be no doubt that an attested copy is more satisfactory, and therefore, in that sense, better evidence than mere parol testimony; but whether it excludes parol testimony is a very different thing. The law does not permit a man to give evidence which from its very nature shows that there is better evidence within his reach, which he does not produce. And, therefore, parol evidence of the contents of a deed, or other written instrument, cannot be given, without producing or accounting for the instrument itself. But as soon as you have accounted for the original document, you may then give secondary evidence of its contents. When parol evidence is then tendered, it does not appear from the nature of such evidence that there is any attested copy, or better species of secondary evidence behind. We know of nothing but of the deed which is accounted for, and therefore the parol evidence is in itself unobjectionable. Does it then become inadmissible, if it be shown from other sources that a more satisfactory species of secondary evidence exists? I think it does not; and I have always understood the rule to be, that when a party is entitled to give secondary evidence at all he may give any species of secondary evidence within his power. . . .

ALDERSON, B. . . . The objection must arise from the nature of the evidence itself. If you produce a copy, which shows that there was an original, or if you give parol evidence of the contents of a deed, the evidence itself discloses the existence of the deed. But reverse the case,—the existence of an original does not show the existence of any copy; nor does parol evidence of the contents of a deed show the existence of anything except the deed itself. If one species of secondary evidence is to exclude another, a party tendering parol evidence of a deed must account for all the secondary evidence that has existed. He may know of nothing but the original, and the other side, at the trial, may defeat him by showing a copy, the existence of which he had no means of ascertaining. Fifty copies may be in existence unknown to him, and he would be bound to account for them all.

GURNEY, B., concurred.

Note.—Mr. Phipson states several exceptions to the rule that there are no degrees of secondary evidence, e.g., public documents are only provable by oral evidence when the originals are lost and copies not obtainable; judicial documents are provable by office or other copies and not by parol; bankers' books by examined copies; and private documents requiring registration or enrolment, e.g., bills of sale, by office copies (6th ed.), 542—3; 549—65. ✓

PROOF OF DOCUMENTS.

It is not sufficient merely to produce a document. It must generally be proved to have been signed, sealed, or otherwise executed by the persons whose document it purports to be, unless its due execution is admitted. But the matter is simplified by certain presumptions as to sealing, date, etc., as will appear in the cases following. The result of the first case given and the statute referred to in the note thereto appears to be that

Handwriting may be proved by:—

(1) A witness who saw the actual document signed, who may be either

(a) The person who signed, or

(b) An attesting witness, or

(c) Any person present.

(2) A witness who did not see the document in question signed, but who gives his opinion as to the signature, based on his acquaintance with the handwriting, obtained by

(a) Having seen the person in question write or sign on other occasions, or

(b) Having received documents purporting to be written or signed by him, or

(c) Having dealt with such documents in the ordinary course of business.

(3) A witness who neither saw the document in question signed, nor offers his opinion as to the signature, but who swears to another signature of the person in question, upon which comparison of the signatures may be made by

(a) Witnesses acquainted with the handwriting, or

(b) Expert witnesses, or

(c) The Court.

(4) An admission of the party against whom the document is offered in evidence.

It is also generally necessary, in civil cases, that the document should be properly stamped. See post, p. 462.

DOE v. SUCKERMORE.

KING'S BENCH. 1837.

7 L. J. K. B. 33; 5 A. & E. 703; 2 N. & P. 16;
W. W. & D. 405; 44 R. R. 533.

Handwriting may be proved not only by the person who saw the particular document signed, but also by any person acquainted in any manner with the handwriting of the person said to have signed the document in question, e.g., by (a) having seen him write at any time, (b) having received documents purporting to be in his handwriting, or (c) having, in the ordinary course of business, observed or dealt with documents purporting to be in his handwriting.

In an action of ejectment, the signature of an attesting witness to a will was in dispute. He was called as a witness in the case and swore to his signature. He also admitted that two other signatures on other documents were his. An inspector of the Bank of England was called to prove the signature to the will was not genuine. He stated that it was his duty at the Bank to compare signatures on powers of attorney and other documents, that he had never seen the attesting witness write, and that his only knowledge of his handwriting had been derived from comparison of the signatures produced in the case. It was held by Denman, C.J., and Williams, J., that his evidence was admissible, and by Patteson and Coleridge, JJ., that it was inadmissible.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COLERIDGE, J. . . . The rule as to the proof of handwriting, where the witness has not seen the party write the document in question, may be stated generally thus: either the witness has seen the party write on some other occasion, or he has corresponded with him, and transactions have taken place between them, upon the faith that letters purporting to have been written or signed by him have been so written or signed. On either supposition, the witness is supposed to have received into his mind an impression, not so much of the manner in which the writer has formed the letters in the particular instances, as of the general character of his handwriting; and he is called on to speak as to the writing in question, by a reference to the standard so formed in his mind. It is obvious that the weight of this evidence may vary in every conceivable degree; but the principle appears to be sound. . . .

WILLIAMS, J. . . . That proof of handwriting is to be submitted to the consideration of the jury, like every other species of proof, I apprehend to be clear. From the highest degree of certainty, carrying with it perfect assurance and conviction, to the lowest degree of probability upon which it is found to be unsafe to act, it may be, and constantly is, so submitted. From continued and habitual inspection, or correspondence, or both, carried on till the trial itself, down to a single instance, or knowledge twenty years old, evidence may be received.

I am aware of no rule attempting to prescribe the quantity of knowledge which is requisite to enable a witness to speak to his belief; what degree of freshness and recency in the correspondence to admit, or what antiquity to exclude, may (as the reason of the thing would induce one to expect) in vain be looked for. . . .

PATTESON, J. . . . All evidence of handwriting, except where the witness sees the document written, is in its nature comparison. It is the belief which a witness entertains upon comparing the writing in question with an exemplar in his mind derived from some previous knowledge. That knowledge may have been acquired, either by seeing the party write, in which case it will be stronger or weaker according to the number of times and the periods, and other circumstances under which the witness has seen the party write; but it will be sufficient knowledge to admit the evidence of the witness (however little weight may be attached to it in such cases), even if he has seen him write but once, and then merely signing his surname; or the knowledge may have been acquired by the witness having seen letters or other documents professing to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards communicated personally with the party upon the contents of those letters or documents, or having otherwise acted upon them by written answers, producing further correspondence, or acquiescence by the party in some matter to which they relate, or by the witness transacting with the party some business to which they relate, or by any other mode of communication between the party and the witness, which, in the ordinary course of the transactions of life, induces a reasonable presumption that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party. . . .

LORD DENMAN, C.J. . . . He did not see him sign it; nor has he ever seen him write: but this is professedly immaterial, if he has had other adequate means of obtaining a knowledge of his hand. . . . The clerk who constantly read the letters, the broker who was ever consulted upon them, is as competent to judge whether another signature is that of the writer of the letters, as the merchant to whom they were addressed. The servant who has habitually carried letters addressed by me to others has an opportunity of obtaining a knowledge of my writing though he never saw me write, or received a letter from me.

Note.—“The only evidence of handwriting which is entitled to be called direct is the evidence of a witness who proves that he himself wrote or signed the document in question, or that of a witness who proves that he saw the document written or signed. All other evidence of handwriting must rest in greater or less degree upon inferences drawn from the appearance of the writing in question or other circumstances” (Wills, Circ. Ev., 6th ed., 227—8).

It should be noted that by Statute there is another way of proving handwriting. The Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, enacted:—“Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Judge to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writings and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the Court and jury as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute.” This is re-enacted and applied to both civil and criminal cases by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (see post, p. 440).

An instructive case on this matter is R. v. Silverlock, ante, p. 126. in which a solicitor, who had given considerable study and attention to the question of handwriting, although he was not a professional expert, was held sufficiently skilled to give evidence as to comparison of handwriting.

Re SANDILANDS.

COMMON PLEAS. 1871.

L. R. 6 C. P. 411.

There is a presumption that a document signed and purporting to be a deed, and attested as such, was duly sealed and delivered by the person who signed it, although no trace of a seal appears.

Thus a signed document, attested by witnesses and certified by Commissioners as a deed, was held sufficiently executed.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

BOVILL, C.J. . . . To constitute a sealing, neither wax, nor wafer, nor a piece of paper, nor even an impression, is necessary. Here is something attached to this deed which may have been intended for a seal, but which from its nature is incapable of retaining an impression. Coupled with the attestation and the certificate, I think we are justified in granting the application that the deed and other documents may be received and filed by the proper officer, pursuant to the Statute.

BYLES, J. The sealing of a deed need not be by means of a seal; it may be done with the end of a ruler or anything else. Nor is it necessary that wax should be used. The attestation clause says that the deed was signed, sealed, and delivered by the several parties; and the certificate of the two special commissioners says that the deed was produced before them, and that the married woman "acknowledged the same to be their respective acts and deeds." I think there was prima facie evidence that the deed was sealed.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J. Something was done with the intention of sealing the deed in question. I concur in granting this application, on the ground that the attestation is prima facie evidence that the deed was sealed. . . .

Note.—Although it is clear that a deed must be sealed, there is some doubt as to whether it must also be signed. The better opinion seems to be that it need not be signed. But the advantage of signature is obvious, as identifying the seal.

ABBOT v. PLUMBE.

KING'S BENCH. 1779.

1 DOUGLAS, 216.

When a document is (required by law to be) attested, one of the attesting witnesses must be called in order to prove it, if he be alive and capable of giving evidence.

This is so even if the person by whom the document was executed has admitted its execution by himself.

An action being brought by the assignees of a bankrupt, it became material to prove a debt due from the bankrupt under a bond executed by him and attested by an attorney living in Somersetshire (the proceedings being in London). The bond was produced, and a witness swore that the bankrupt had admitted its execution to him. It was held that this was not sufficient, and that the attesting witness must be called.

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. To be sure, this is a captious objection, but it is a technical rule that the subscribing witness must be produced, and it cannot be dispensed with unless it appear that his attendance could not be procured. . . .

ASHHURST, J. If the evidence of the subscribing witness were to be dispensed with by this confession of the bankrupt, the defendant would be deprived of the benefit of cross-examining him concerning the time of the execution of the bond, which might be material.

BULLER, J. . . . It is necessary, to recover on a bond, to call the subscribing witness, unless some reason can be shown for his absence.

Note.—The above case must now be considered as applicable to those cases only in which attestation of a document is legally required, for the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, provided: "It shall not be necessary to prove by the attesting witness any instrument to the validity of which attestation is not requisite, and such instrument may be proved by admission or otherwise, as if there had been no attesting witness thereto." This is now repealed, but is re-enacted, for both civil and criminal cases, by the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (see post, p. 440).

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 694, provides that an attesting witness need not be called even where attestation is required by such Act (see post, p. 466).

As a rule, a document does not require "attestation," or the formal signing of the same by witnesses present at its execution. This is so even in the case of deeds, conveyances, leases, mortgages, etc. But attestation is sometimes required by statute in the case of specific documents, the most noticeable being wills and bills of sale.

ANDERSON v. WESTON.

COMMON PLEAS. 1840.

9 L. J. C. P. 194; 6 BINGHAM, N. C. 296.

There is a presumption that a document was made on the date which it bears.

A document thirty years old, i.e., a document dated thirty years back, proves itself, if produced from "proper custody," as an "ancient document."

In an action on a bill of exchange, the date of the drawing and indorsement of the bill was material, but no evidence was given other than the date on the bill. Tindal, C.J., left it to the jury to find the date of the indorsement, and a verdict was found in favour of the plaintiff. On motion to enter a non-suit the verdict was upheld.

BOSANQUET, J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included TINDAL, C.J., PARK, VAUGHAN, BOSANQUET and COLTMAN, JJ.). . . . The question is, what is the general rule of law on the subject, where an instrument is proved to be in the handwriting of a party, and to bear a certain date; whether that is evidence as to the time of making the instrument;—that it is not conclusive evidence is perfectly clear;—the question is, whether it is not prima facie evidence. . . .

Now when a deed is produced, and the execution of that deed is proved by the subscribing witness, or by accounting for the absence of the subscribing witness by death or otherwise, and proving the signature, and that deed bears a date, as far as my experience goes, that date has uniformly been taken to be prima facie evidence that the deed was executed at the time when it purports to bear date. It is the practice in cross-examination to inquire whether the deed was executed when it bears date, but I certainly never heard it contended that it was part of the proof of the person producing the instrument, not only to give evidence of the execution of the instrument, but in the first instance, and before any evidence is offered to render doubtful the time of making the instrument, that it was executed at the time it bears date.

This is the case not merely with respect to instruments binding on the person of the party in the cause, but also with respect to his title where a deed of conveyance comes from third parties.

But there is another case which may be put on the subject, which is a very strong one in proof of this being the general rule: that is this. It is a general rule that an instrument thirty years old proves itself, provided it be produced from the proper custody: if an instrument be produced from a custody where deeds of that description ought to be, then, if the instrument be thirty years old, there is no necessity for further proof.

What is the meaning of its being thirty years old? Parties are not called upon to prove that the deed has been in existence for thirty years; if it bears date thirty years before the time of its production, the course is, unless it be impeached, to receive that as proof of the instrument. . . .

BISHOP OF MEATH v. MAYOR OF WINCHESTER.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1836.

3 BINGHAM, N. C. 183.

The rule that "ancient documents," or those thirty years old, "prove themselves," or, in other words, are presumed to have been duly executed, applies only to those coming from "proper custody"; that is, not necessarily from the strictly legal or most proper custody, but from any custody consistent with their genuineness and legitimate origin, in which they might reasonably be expected to be found, if they are what they purport to be.

Documents which had belonged to a deceased bishop by virtue of his office, and which were found among his private papers in possession of his family, were held to be produced from proper custody, although the most proper custody of the same would have been in the hands of his successor, the bishop for the time being.

This case was brought to the House of Lords from the Exchequer Chamber in Ireland by writ of error. Their Lordships put certain questions to the Judges, whose opinion was delivered by Tindal, C.J.

TINDAL, C.J. . . . These documents were found in a place in which, and under the care of persons with whom, papers of Bishop Dopping might naturally and reasonably be expected to be found; and that is precisely the custody which gives authenticity to documents found within it; for it is not necessary that they should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit. If documents continue in such custody there never would be any question as to their authenticity; but it is when documents are found in other than their proper place of deposit that the investigation commences, whether it was reasonable and natural under the circumstances in the particular case, to expect that they should have been in the place where they are actually found; for it is obvious that whilst there can be only one place of deposit strictly and absolutely proper, there may be various and many that are reasonable and probable, though differing in degree; some being more so, some less; and in those cases the proposition to be determined is, whether the actual custody is so reasonably and probably to be accounted for that it impresses the mind with the conviction that the instrument found in such custody must be genuine. . . .

Note.—It has been held that in the following cases documents have been produced from proper custody—expired leases produced by either lessor or lessee, a will produced by a tenant for life claiming under it, a settlement produced by an equitable tenant for life, claiming under it, and family Bibles produced by members of the family.

PEARCE v. HOOPER.

COMMON PLEAS. 1810.

3 TAUNTON, 60.

Although a document must generally be proved by evidence of its due execution, this is not so where the document is produced by an opponent who himself claims some interest under it.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for trespass to land. The defendant gave notice to the plaintiff to produce, at the trial, the deeds under which he held the land. The plaintiff produced these, but he contended that the defendant must prove their due execution. The defendant contended that, since the deeds came from the hands of the plaintiff, under a notice to produce, and contained his title to the land, if he had any, further proof was unnecessary. It was held that the defendant need not prove execution.

SIR J. MANSFIELD, C.J. . . . The mere possession of an instrument does not dispense with the necessity which lies on the party calling for it, of producing the attesting witness. . . . Supposing that an heir-at-law is in possession of a will, and the devisee brings an ejection, and calls on the heir to produce the will; there the heir claims, not under the will, but against the will, and it would be very hard that the will should be taken to be proved against him, because he produces it; but that is very different from the case where a man is called on to produce the deed under which he holds an estate. The ~~defendant~~ ^{plaintiff} has no interest in the fee-simple of the estate, if this deed does not convey it; consequently, if he produces the deed under which he claims, shall it not be taken to be a good deed so far as relates to the execution, as against himself?

HEATH, LAWRENCE and CHAMBRE, JJ., concurred.

[In line 4 from end of judgment, "defendant," though so printed in the original report, should obviously read "plaintiff."]

DOE v. CATOMORE.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1851.

20 L. J. Q. B. 364; 15 JUR. 728; 16 Q. B. 745;
83 R. R. 714.

An alteration, or erasure, in a deed, is presumed to have been made before execution; in a will, after execution.

In an action of ejectment, the plaintiff produced a lease in which there appeared an interlineation and erasure. The defendant contended that the interlineation and erasure rendered the lease void, unless it was shown by whom and when they were made. The Judge left it to the jury, who found they were made before execution of the lease. On application for a new trial it was held the Judge was right.

The following is from the Queen's Bench Reports:—

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD CAMPBELL, C.J., PATTESON, WIGHTMAN and ERLE, JJ.). In this case the deed on which the plaintiff's title depended, when produced, appeared to have an interlineation and erasure in parts not material. Objection was made that the deed was void unless the plaintiff gave evidence to show when the alterations were made. The learned Judge left it to the jury to say whether the alterations were made before the execution of the deed; and it was found that they were.

In moving for a new trial it was contended that this question ought not to have been left to the jury without some evidence besides the deed itself. In Co. Lit. 225 b. it is said that "of ancient time if the deed appeared to be rased or interlined in places material, the Judges adjudged upon their view the deed to be void. But the latter time the Judges have left that to the jurors to try whether the rasing or interlining were before the delivery." In a note, (1) [136], upon this passage in Hargrave and Butler's edition of "Coke upon Littleton," it is laid down: "'Tis to be presumed, that an interlining, if the contrary is not proved, was made at the time of making the deed." This doctrine seems to us to rest upon principle. A deed cannot be altered, after it is executed, without fraud or wrong. A testator may alter his will without fraud or wrong after it has been executed; and there is no ground for any presumption that the alteration was made before the will was executed.

We therefore think that the defendant has no right to complain of the course pursued by the learned Judge at the trial.

Note.—The Wills Act, 1837, sect. 21, provides that no alteration in a will shall have any effect unless executed as a will.

ORAL (OR PAROL) EVIDENCE RESPECTING DOCUMENTS.

[The term “parol evidence” is loosely used in the present connection to mean any evidence, oral or otherwise, which is extrinsic to the document.]

It has been remarked by an eminent writer that “the admissibility of extrinsic parol testimony to affect written instruments is, perhaps, the most difficult branch of the law of evidence” (Taylor, § 1128).

The general rule can, indeed, be laid down in clear and definite terms—parol evidence is not admissible to add to, vary, or contradict a written transaction—but the application of the rule is beset with difficulties. The rule is ancient. Lord Bacon said—“The law will not couple and mingle matter of specialty, which is of the higher account, with matter of averment, which is of inferior account in law” (Bacon's Maxims, Reg. 23). And in Coke's Reports we read—“It would be inconvenient that matters in writing made by advice and on consideration, and which finally import the certain truth of the agreement of the parties should be controlled by averment of the parties to be proved by the uncertain testimony of slippery memory” (Countess of Rutland's Case, 5 Coke, 25 b).

It is frequently said that there are several exceptions to the rule; but it is submitted that there is no real exception at all; no case in which parol evidence is admissible either to add to, vary, or contradict a written transaction.

The cases given below show that parol evidence can be used for the several purposes indicated, but it can scarcely be said that there is in such cases either addition to, or variation or contradiction of, a written transaction.

Parol evidence may be given to prove or explain:—

(1) The terms of any verbal transaction, although a writing exists concerning it, if such writing be not the transaction itself, but a mere note, memorandum, receipt or the like.

(2) Fraud, mistake, illegality, incapacity, failure of consideration, or other matter showing that the writing is not the valid transaction it purports to be.

(3) Any collateral verbal agreement on the same subject-matter, consistent with the written transaction.

(4) Any collateral verbal agreement suspending the operation of the written transaction, or being a condition precedent thereto, so that the writing is not a presently operative transaction.

(5) Any subsequent verbal agreement rescinding or modifying the written transaction, so that the writing has ceased to be operative.

(6) Any local or trade custom or usage applicable to such written transaction, and not excluded thereby.

(7) The subject-matter or persons to which the written transaction applies; explaining latent, and (apparently) even patent ambiguities.

(8) The meaning of words having a special or unusual meaning, or, generally, the translation of a written transaction.

Cases are given below on each of these points.

[Note.—The author's statement, based apparently on Taylor, §§ 1135—50, that the rule "parol evidence is not admissible to add to, vary, or contradict a written transaction" has no real exceptions, seems open to dispute. No doubt, the question whether there are exceptions to a given rule depends largely on how the rule is expressed, but testing the author's own definition by his subsequent list of admissions, the statement in its present form appears difficult to support.

Thus, to make it consistent with (2) and (4) of his list, it seems necessary to insert the words "valid" and "presently operative" before "written transaction." Again, in order to justify the admission of evidence of usage under (6), Mr. Cockle would have to contend that, here, there is no addition to the written transaction, so that the evidence is received not by way of exception to the rule, but independently of it. But it seems obvious that where proof of usage is received to annex an unexpressed term to a written contract there must be a parol addition to the written transaction, and in Brown v. Byrne, post, 375, this was so held; cf. post, 365 n. To make the author's rule conform to the law, therefore, it would require to be still further restricted to cases where the written transaction contains the whole of the contract between the parties. The same observations apply to evidence which contradicts the document. Where, for example, parol evidence is admitted to show that an absolute sale of property by deed was in fact only a loan on security, or that a testamentary bequest to a person "but not by way of trust" was, in fact, subject to a secret trust, it seems impossible to say that the written transaction is not thereby contradicted, and if so how can it be contended that the evidence is admitted independently of the rule and not by exception to it? To take another instance, not included in Mr. Cockle's list, suppose A. and B. have signed a written contract, and in an action between them B. tenders evidence of a parol term inconsistent with the document. This would ordinarily be excluded because of that inconsistency. But suppose B.'s contract with A. comes in question in an action between B. and C., or C. and D., and the inconsistent parol term is again tendered. It might well be admitted, because here the written transaction would be inter alios and not inter partes. But Mr. Cockle's rule gives no hint of such a distinction; it is a general rule excluding all contradiction. Surely, then, the admission of evidence contradicting a written transaction, if the transaction be inter alios, must form an exception to the rule as above stated and not stand outside it. It seems, therefore, either that the items in Mr. Cockle's list should be treated as exceptions to his rule, or that his rule should be restated with sufficient qualifications to prevent his list infringing it. The former, it is suggested, is the simpler and less confusing plan. But, however this may be, the important point for the student to remember is, that in certain well-defined cases, most of which are noticed by Mr. Cockle above, parol evidence is, for various reasons, admissible to affect written transactions, whether by exception to the rule or otherwise; while, in cases standing outside these, the exclusionary rule is strictly enforced. Headings (7) and (8), however, belong properly to the subject of Interpretation, and are not usually treated under the present rule. For a detailed examination of both topics, see Phipson, 6th ed., 566—665.]

MERES v. ANSELL.

COMMON PLEAS. 1771.

3 WILSON, 275.

Parol evidence is not admissible to add to, vary, or contradict a written agreement, or any transaction in writing.

An agreement in writing had been made between the parties for the exchange of certain land, etc., no mention being made therein as to a certain piece of land in dispute. The defendant called evidence to show that it was at the same time verbally agreed that such other land was to be included in the agreement. On such evidence a verdict was found for the defendant. The Court granted a new trial on the ground that such evidence was inadmissible.

PER CURIAM (the Court at this date consisted of DE GREY, C.J., BLACKSTONE, NARES and GOULD, JJ.). We are all clearly of opinion that the verdict is wrong, and must be set aside; that no parol evidence is admissible to disannul and substantially to vary a written agreement; the parol evidence in the present case totally annuls and substantially alters and impugns the written agreement. Indeed in some cases of wills and deeds, where there are two Johns named or two Blackacres mentioned, parol evidence may be admitted to explain which John or which Blackacre was meant and intended by the will or deed. The rules of evidence are universally the same in Courts of law and Courts of equity. Suppose a bill in equity was to be brought by the defendant to have a specific performance of this agreement, the Court would not admit parol evidence.

You cannot depart from the writing, but may argue touching the operation thereof. If a man agrees in writing to sell Blackacre for 1,000l., shall parol evidence be admitted that he intended Whiteacre should also pass? Certainly it shall not. . . .

Note.—There may be a substantial difficulty in deciding the preliminary question—is the “transaction” itself in writing? The rule applies only in such event, as the next case shows. Unless the law requires the transaction to be in writing, the formality of a writing would generally settle the question. But informal writings lead to doubt. They may be loosely drawn transactions, or mere notes, memoranda, receipts, etc.

ALLEN v. PINK.

EXCHEQUER. 1838.

4 M. & W. 140; 1 H. & H. 207; 7 L. J. (N.S.) Ex. 206; 51 R. R. 503.

Parol evidence of a verbal transaction is not excluded by the fact that a writing was made concerning or relating to it, unless such writing was in fact the transaction itself, and not merely a note or memorandum of it, or portion of the transaction.

The plaintiff bought of the defendant a horse, and received from him the following memorandum:—"Bought of G. Pink a horse for the sum of 7l. 2s. 6d. G. Pink." The horse having proved vicious, the plaintiff sued for the return of the price, and gave evidence of a verbal warranty of the horse. It was held that such evidence was admissible, as the agreement itself had not been reduced into writing, the memorandum only referring to a portion of it.

The following is from Meeson and Welsby:—

LORD ABINGER, C.B. . . . The general principle is quite true, that if there has been a parol agreement, which is afterwards reduced by the parties into writing, that writing alone must be looked to to ascertain the terms of the contract; but the principle does not apply here; there was no evidence of any agreement by the plaintiff that the whole contract should be reduced into writing by the defendant; the contract is first concluded by parol, and afterwards the paper is drawn up, which appears to have been meant merely as a memorandum of the transaction, or an informal receipt for the money, not as containing the terms of the contract itself. . . .

BOLLAND and ALDERSON, BB., concurred.

Note.—It is clear that the mere existence of a writing concerning a verbal transaction cannot exclude proof by parol evidence. Otherwise, one party might exclude evidence of items of the transaction not to his liking by writing a letter, or giving some memorandum to the other party, containing merely the items favourable to himself.

DOBELL v. STEVENS.

KING'S BENCH. 1825.

3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 89; 3 B. & C. 623; 5 D. & R. 490;
27 R. R. 441.

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a writing is not really the valid transaction which it purports to be. Such evidence may therefore be given to prove fraud, mistake, illegality, incapacity, failure of consideration, or other matter affecting the validity of a writing as a document.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for damages for fraudulently misrepresenting the takings of a public-house sold to the plaintiff by the defendant. A written contract for the sale and an assignment of the lease of the premises were afterwards executed; but neither of such documents mentioned the alleged verbal representation. Parol evidence of such representation was allowed to go to the jury, who found a verdict thereon for the plaintiff. On a motion for a new trial, the defendant urged that such parol evidence was inadmissible, as "the contract having been reduced into writing the parties must be bound by that, and cannot add to it by evidence of previous conversations." It was held that the evidence was rightly admitted.

The following is from Barnewall and Cresswell:—

ABBOTT, C.J. Whether any fraud or deceit had or had not been practised in this case was peculiarly a question for the jury; nor has any complaint been made against the mode in which that question was presented to their consideration. If, then, this motion be sustainable at all, it must be sustainable on the ground that evidence of a fraudulent or deceitful representation could not be received, inasmuch as it was not noticed in the written agreement, or in the conveyance which was afterwards executed by the parties. The case of Lysney v. Selby (2 Ld. Raym. 1118) is to the contrary of that position, and precisely analogous to the present case. That was an action against the defendant for falsely and fraudulently representing to the plaintiff that certain houses of his (defendant) were then demised at the yearly rent of 68*l.*, to which plaintiff giving credit, bought the houses for a large sum of money, to wit, etc., and an assignment was afterwards executed to him; whereas, in truth and in fact, the houses were at that time demised at the yearly rent of 52*l.* 10*s.*, and no more. After verdict for the plaintiff a motion was made in arrest of judgment, on the ground that it did not appear that the assertion was made at the time of the sale. LORD HOLT says, "If the vendor gives in a particular of the rents, and the vendee says he will trust him, and inquire no further, but rely upon his particular, then if the particular be false an action will lie." Here the plaintiff did rely on the assertion of the defendant, and that was his inducement to make the purchase. The representation was not of any matter or quality pertaining to the thing sold, and therefore likely to be mentioned in the conveyance, but was altogether collateral to it; as was the rent in the case of Lysney v. Selby. That case appears to me to be exactly in point, and the jury having found that that which was untruly represented was fraudulently and deceitfully represented, I think that we ought not to grant a rule for a new trial.

BAYLEY, HOLROYD and LITTLEDALE, JJ., concurred.

Note.—The principle of this case may be taken as applicable to any matter affecting the validity of the document or transaction. So, with regard to mistake, it was said by Lord Hardwicke, as long back as 1749—"No doubt, but this Court has jurisdiction to relieve in respect of a plain mistake in contracts in writing as well as against fraud in contracts; so that if reduced into writing contrary to intent of the parties, on proper proof that would be rectified" (Henkle v. Royal Ex. Ass. Co., 1 Ves. 317). And the matter was stated in wider terms by Baron Bramwell—"When the parties have recorded their contract in writing, the rule that they are not at liberty to alter or vary it, comes into effect. That which they put down is final as to what they mean; it is the binding record of the agreement. But they are always at liberty to show whether it is the binding record of the agreement. Suppose that the signature were made in the course of a dramatic representation, or suppose a printed form of agreement were used, and the witness, by mistake, signed his name in the space meant for the principal, and vice versa, would not the parties be at liberty to show the real state of the case?" (Wake v. Harrop, 7 Jur. 710). See also Cowen v. Truefitt, [1899] 2 Ch. 309; May v. Platt, [1900] 1 Ch. 616.

MORGAN v. GRIFFITH.

EXCHEQUER. 1871.

L. R. 6 Ex. 70; 40 L. J. Ex. 46; 23 L. T. 783.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove any collateral verbal agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent, which is separate from it, not inconsistent with its terms, and might naturally be omitted therefrom.

The plaintiff took a lease of land from the defendant, reserving to the latter the sporting rights. Evidence was admitted of a collateral verbal agreement by which the defendant promised to destroy the rabbits if the plaintiff would sign the lease, although the lease was silent on the point.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

KELLY, C.B. . . . I think the verbal agreement was entirely collateral to the lease, and was founded on a good consideration. The plaintiff, unless the promise to destroy the rabbits had been given, would not have signed the lease, and a Court of equity would not have compelled him to do so, or only on the terms of the defendant performing his undertaking. . . .

PIGGOTT, B. The verbal agreement in this case, although it does affect the mode of enjoyment of the land demised, is, I think, purely collateral to the lease. It was on the basis of its being performed that the lease was signed by the plaintiff, and it does not appear to me to contain any terms which conflict with the written document.

Note.—There is no rule that there shall only be one agreement upon any matter. There may be two (or more) if they can consistently stand together: and one may be written and the other oral. If proceedings are taken on the written agreement evidence may be given of the oral. This is not "adding to" the written agreement, although it may, at first sight, look like it. [But see Note, ante, 360-1; and in Malpas v. L. S. W. Ry., L. R. 1 C. P. 336, an oral extension of a written contract was admitted, although expressly held to be "an addition to it."]

The above case was approved and followed in the next case given below; which may perhaps now be taken as the leading case on the matter.

It will be observed that in both these cases the subject-matter of the verbal undertaking was temporary and immediate; a matter which did not require to be dealt with amongst those permanent or continuous matters which are the subject of the covenants in the lease. Such covenants generally deal with matters to be periodically attended to during the tenancy, and it would, doubtless, be far more difficult to induce the Court to admit verbal evidence of agreements concerning such matters, as it would be by no means natural to leave them to a collateral verbal arrangement when there is a formal written transaction between the parties. On the other hand, it is most natural to omit from a lease an arrangement as to the immediate destruction of rabbits, or the condition of drains at the commencement of the tenancy.

Leading Case DE LASSALLE v. GUILDFORD.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1901.

L. R. [1901] 2 K. B. 215; 70 L. J. K. B. 533;
84 L. T. 549; 49 W. R. 467.

The rule that parol evidence is admissible to prove matters collateral to a written transaction is applicable to the case of a warranty given by one of the parties to the other at the time of entering into such written transaction.

The plaintiff, being the tenant of the defendant of a certain house, sued for breach of warranty as to the condition of the drains. It appeared that the plaintiff raised the question as to the drains before he finally took the house, and he refused to hand over the counterpart lease and complete the transaction until the defendant assured him that the drains were in good order. The lease itself contained no reference to drains. The drains afterwards appeared to be out of order, and in consequence the plaintiff and his family suffered in health and he was put to expense. The jury found that there was a representation that the drains were in good order, but no fraud or breach of covenant, and assessed damages. The Judge gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that, if there were a warranty, it was not collateral to the lease. On appeal it was held that there was a collateral warranty and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

A. L. SMITH, M.R. (delivering the judgment of the Court, A. L. SMITH, M.R., COLLINS and ROMER, L.JJ.). . . . To create a warranty no special form of words is necessary. It must be a collateral undertaking forming part of the contract by agreement of the parties express or implied, and must be given during the course of the dealing which leads to the bargain, and should then enter into the bargain as part of it. It was laid down by Buller, J., as long ago as 1789 in Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51: "It was rightly held by Holt, C.J.," in Crosse v. Gardner (1688), Carth. 90, and Medina v. Stoughton (1699), Salk. 210, "and has been uniformly adopted ever since, that an affirmation at the time of sale is a warranty provided it appear on evidence to have been so intended." . . .

What is it the defendant asserts? I paraphrase the evidence: "You need have no certificate of a sanitary inspector—it is quite unnecessary; the drains are in perfect condition. I give you my word upon the subject. Will that satisfy you? If so, hand me over the counterpart." What more deliberate and emphatic assertion of a fact could well be made during the course of the dealing which led up to the counterpart lease being handed over to the defendant? . . .

The next question is, Was the warranty collateral to the lease so that it might be given in evidence and given effect to? It appears to me in this case clear that the lease did not cover the whole ground, and that it did not contain the whole of the contract between the parties. The lease is entirely silent about the drains, though there is a covenant that the lessee during the term should do the inside repairs, and the lessor the outside repairs, which would, I suppose, include the drains which happened to be inside or outside the house. There is nothing in the lease as to the then condition of the drains— i.e., at the time of the taking of the lease, which was the vital point in hand. Then why is not the warranty collateral to anything which is to be found in the lease? The present contract or warranty by the defendant was entirely independent of what was to happen during the tenancy. It was what induced the tenancy, and it in no way affected the terms of the tenancy during the three years, which was all the lease dealt with. The warranty in no way contradicts the lease, and without the warranty the lease never would have been executed. Three cases were cited in which parol collateral agreements outside leases had been allowed in evidence and given effect to by the Court, namely: Morgan v. Griffith, L. R. 6 Ex. 70 (ante, p. 365); Erskine v. Adeane, L. R. 8 Ch. 756, in this Court, and Angell v. Duke, L. R. 10 Q. B. 174 (post, p. 369). The first two cases related to parol agreements collateral to leases as to keeping down rabbits, and the last case to a parol collateral agreement to do repairs and to send in additional furniture. . . . In the rabbit cases the agreements were held collateral to the leases, and did not contradict the terms of the leases. It was argued by the learned counsel for the defendant that the collateral agreements in the rabbit cases were agreements that something should be done after the lease was taken, and that in the present case the agreement or warranty is that the drains were then in good order. This is true; but if in the rabbit cases the agreements were collateral and outside the leases, the leases not containing the whole terms and the collateral agreements not contradicting the leases, I cannot see why the warranty in this case is not collateral also. Then some cases were cited by the defendant's counsel to show that representations as to drains were never held to be warranties; but where examined I do not think they show this; for the representations in the cases cited were by no means such complete and emphatic statements of facts as were made in this case. And, indeed, upon principle why should there be any difference in the case of drains? . . . In my opinion, even if the jury had not found a warranty, the true inference is that there was a warranty given in this case collateral to the lease, and therefore the judgment entered for the defendant must be set aside, and judgment entered for the plaintiff. . . .

ANGELL v. DUKE.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1875.

32 L. T. 320; 23 W. R. 548.

[Where the whole of a contract between the parties is contained in a written document, no additional or conflicting oral terms may be proved; where the document does not contain the whole of their contract, a collateral oral agreement is admissible.]

The defendant let to the plaintiff, by written agreement, a house and the furniture therein. The plaintiff offered evidence of a verbal agreement made at the same time to the effect that the defendant would send in additional furniture. It was held that such evidence was inadmissible, it being inconsistent with the written agreement.

The following is from the Law Times:—

COCKBURN, C.J. . . . To allow the plaintiff to recover in this action would be to allow a parol agreement to conflict with a written agreement afterwards entered into. I agree with the cases which have been cited to this extent, that there may be instances of collateral parol agreements which would be admissible, but this is not the case here: something passes between the parties during the course of the negotiations, but afterwards the plaintiff enters into a written agreement to take the house and the furniture in the house, which is specified. Having once executed that, without making the terms of the alleged parol agreement a part of it, he cannot afterwards set up the parol agreement.

MELLOR, J. There is one contract; the house is the same, the rent the same, and the general terms the same. During the negotiations it appears to have been suggested that some more furniture should be put in, but afterwards a written contract is made affecting the house, affecting the furniture, and affecting the rent, and to this agreement the plaintiff is attempting to add an additional term. . . .

BLACKBURN, J. It is a most important rule that where there is a contract in writing it should not be added to if the written contract is intended to be the record of all the terms agreed upon between the parties; where there is a collateral contract the written contract does not contain the whole of the terms. . . .

Here the lease expresses the whole of the terms; the defendant agrees to let, and the plaintiff to take, the house and furniture at a certain rent; there is said to have been an arrangement made beforehand during the negotiation, that the defendant should let the plaintiff have more furniture for the same rent; how is this collateral? I cannot perceive that it is. . . .

FIELD, J., concurred.

PYM v. CAMPBELL.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1856.

25 L. J. Q. B. 277; 27 L. T. 122; 4 W. R. 528;
2 JUR. (N.S.) 641; 6 E. & B. 370.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove any collateral verbal agreement, to the effect that a document, apparently complete and operative on its face, should be conditional upon, and not operate until the happening of, a certain event, which has not occurred.

The defendants agreed in writing to buy of the plaintiff a certain invention. Evidence was tendered by the defendants to the effect that they declined to purchase unless one Abernethy, an engineer, approved of the machine, and that as Abernethy was absent, and one of the defendants could not conveniently return to sign the document after seeing him, it was expressly agreed verbally that the written document was signed conditionally upon Abernethy's approval being obtained; and that Abernethy had disapproved of the machine. It was held that such evidence was admissible to show that the written document was not operative.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

ERLE, J. . . . There was a paper signed by the parties, and there would be a very strong presumption that it contained all the terms agreed upon, and if the jury had found that it was signed animo contrahendi, I am clearly of opinion that no evidence to vary it would be admissible. But the matter goes a step farther here, for the jury have found that the parties, when they signed the paper, expressly said, "we do not agree to the terms contained in it; we are prevented by the absence of a person whose judgment we desire to have from making up our minds definitely, and therefore, although we put our names to the paper, we do so without making an agreement." I grant that there may be danger in admitting such evidence, and that a jury ought to look very scrupulously at such a case; but if it is a true case, all that can be said about the danger of admitting parol evidence tells equally against the party seeking to set up as an agreement a document which was never intended so to operate. The distinction is, that the evidence is admitted not to vary or alter an actual agreement, but to show that the paper was not at the time an agreement.

CROMPTON, J. . . . If the parties really intended this agreement to operate from its date, no doubt it could not be varied by parol. But the jury have found that no absolute agreement was ever intended to be made, and they were justified in so finding. Therefore the parties never had an agreeing mind, but signed the paper for convenience, leaving it to take effect or not according as Abernethy did or did not approve; and there is nothing to prevent their so doing. . . .

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. . . . It is well established that no alteration of a written instrument can be made by parol. But here the evidence was not admitted to vary the written instrument, but to show that no agreement had been entered into; and that evidence is found by the jury to be true. Before the paper was signed it was expressly declared by the defendants, and the plaintiff agreed, that the document was not to operate until the machine had been shown to Abernethy and he had approved of it. The paper was signed at that time merely because one of the defendants had another engagement, and could not conveniently go and see Abernethy and return and sign the paper, the plaintiff being contented with this; the signature, therefore, not being put for the purpose of binding the defendants, did not constitute an agreement. By this evidence the plea denying the making of the agreement was proved.

Note.—Another useful case is Wallis v. Littell, 11 C. B. N. S. 369, in which evidence was allowed of a verbal arrangement that a written agreement for the sale of a lease should be conditional on the consent of the landlord. The Court said, "It is in analogy with the delivery of a deed as an escrow; it neither varies nor contradicts the writing, but suspends the commencement of the obligation." Thus, even a formal deed, fully executed, may be suspended in its operation by a verbal agreement, as an "escrow."

In Davis v. Jones, 17 C. B. 625, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that a written contract, which was undated, was not intended to operate from its delivery, but from a future uncertain period. ✓

GOSS v. LORD NUGENT.

KING'S BENCH. 1833.

2 L. J. K. B. 127; 5 B. & Ad. 58; 2 N. & M. 28;
39 R. R. 392.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove any subsequent verbal agreement rescinding or altering the terms of a written document; unless writing is required by law to render the transaction in question enforceable, in which case such evidence cannot be given to alter the terms of such written document.

The plaintiff agreed to sell fourteen lots of freehold land to the defendant, by a written agreement, undertaking to make a good title to each lot; and he offered evidence of a subsequent verbal agreement discharging him from the duty of making a good title to one of the lots. It was held that such evidence would have been admissible but for the Statute of Frauds, which requires writing in the case of any agreement relating to land.

The following is from Barnewall and Adolphus:—

DENMAN, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included TAUNTON, LITLEDALE, PARKE and PATTESON, JJ.). By the general rules of the common law, if there be a contract which has been reduced into writing, verbal evidence is not allowed to be given of what passed between the parties, either before the written instrument was made, or during the time that it was in a state of preparation, so as to add to or subtract from, or in any manner to vary or qualify the written contract; but after the agreement has been reduced into writing, it is competent to the parties, at any time before breach of it, by a new contract not in writing, either altogether to waive, dissolve, or annul the former agreements, or in any manner to add to, or subtract from, or vary or qualify the terms of it, and thus to make a new contract; which is to be proved, partly by the written agreement, and partly by the subsequent verbal terms engrafted upon what will be thus left of the written agreement.

And if the present contract was not subject to the control of any Act of Parliament, we think that it would have been competent for the parties, by word of mouth, to dispense with requiring a good title to be made to the lot in question, and that the action might be maintained.

But the Statute of Frauds has made certain regulations as to contracts for the sale of lands. . . .

We think the object of the Statute of Frauds was to exclude all oral evidence as to contracts for the sale of lands, and that any contract which is sought to be enforced must be proved by writing only. . . .

Note.—The provisions of the Statute of Frauds (s. 4) are given, post, p. 411.

It appears clear that parol evidence may be given of an agreement to rescind a transaction in writing or evidenced by writing, notwithstanding that writing is required by Statute to render such transaction enforceable; but it cannot be given in order to modify or alter the terms expressed in the writing. In the former case the evidence is not given in order to enforce the subsequent verbal agreement, but to show why the writing should not be enforced; in the latter case the evidence would be given in order to enforce the alteration. See Noble v. Ward, L. R. 2 Ex. 135; Vezey v. Rashleigh, [1904] 1 Ch. 634.

WIGGLESWORTH v. DALLISON.

KING'S BENCH. 1779.

DOUGLAS, 201.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove any local custom of general application, in order that it may be applied to the subject-matter and bind the parties to a written transaction, unless it is inconsistent with the writing.

In the case of an agricultural lease, evidence was allowed of a custom whereby, contrary to the general law, the tenant, on leaving at the end of his term, was allowed to take away his "way-going crop, that is to say, all the corn growing upon the said lands which hath before the expiration of such term been sown by such tenant upon any part of such lands"; although the lease was in writing and no mention was therein made of such custom.

LORD MANSFIELD, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, which then included WILLES, ASHHURST and BULLER, JJ.). . . . The custom is good. It is just, for he who sows ought to reap, and it is for the benefit and encouragement of agriculture. It is, indeed, against the general rule of law concerning emblements, which are not allowed to tenants who know when their term is to cease, because it is held to be their fault or folly to have sown, when they knew their interest would expire before they could reap. But the custom of a particular place may rectify what otherwise would be imprudence or folly. The lease being by deed does not vary the case. The custom does not alter or contradict the agreement in the lease; it only superadds a right which is consequential to the taking, as a heriot may be due by custom, although not mentioned in the grant or lease.

Note.—Another important case is Dashwood v. Magniac, [1891] 3 Ch. 306, in which evidence of local usage as to waste and cutting of timber was held admissible on the construction of a will, the testator being taken to have framed his will with reference to such local usage.

BROWN v. BYRNE.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1854.

23 L. J. Q. B. 313; 18 JUR. 700; 2 W. R. 471;
3 E. & B. 703; 2 C. L. R. 1599.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove any trade or mercantile custom or usage, either as to the obligations of the parties in such transactions as that in question, or as to the meaning of words or terms used, in order that it may be applied to the subject-matter and bind the parties to a written transaction, unless it is inconsistent with the writing.

A bill of lading specified a certain amount as payable for freight. Parol evidence was offered of a custom whereby three months' credit or discount was allowed for freight. The evidence was held admissible.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

COLERIDGE, J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, COLERIDGE, WIGHTMAN, ERLE and CROMPTON, JJ.). . . . The principles on which this case is to be decided are perfectly clear; the difficulty lies in the application of them to the facts. Mercantile contracts are very commonly framed in a language peculiar to merchants; the intention of the parties, though perfectly well known to themselves, would often be defeated if this language were strictly construed according to its ordinary import in the world at large: evidence, therefore, of mercantile custom and usage is admitted in order to expound it and arrive at its true meaning. Again, in all contracts, as to the subject-matter of which known usages prevail, parties are found to proceed with the tacit assumption of these usages; they commonly reduce into writing the special particulars of their agreement but omit to specify these known usages, which are included, however, as of course, by mutual understanding: evidence therefore of such incidents is receivable. The contract in truth is partly express and in writing, partly implied or understood and unwritten. But, in these cases, a restriction is established on the soundest principle, that the evidence received must not be of a particular which is repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the written contract. Merely that it varies the apparent contract is not enough to exclude the evidence; for it is impossible to add any material incident to the written terms of a contract without altering its effect, more or less. Neither, in the construction of a contract among merchants, tradesmen, or others, will the evidence be excluded because the words are in their ordinary meaning unambiguous; for the principle of admission is, that words perfectly unambiguous in their ordinary meaning are used by the contractors in a different sense from that. What words more plain than "a thousand," "a week," "a day"? Yet the cases are familiar in which "a thousand" has been held to mean twelve hundred, "a week" a week only during the theatrical season, "a day" a working day. In such cases the evidence neither adds to, nor qualifies nor contradicts the written contract; it only ascertains it, by expounding the language. Here the contract is, to pay freight on delivery at a certain rate per pound: is it inconsistent with this to allege that, by the custom, the shipowner, on payment, is bound to allow three months' discount? We think not. . . . Webb v. Plummer (2 B. & Ald. 746) and Hutton v. Warren (1 M. & W. 466) are cases which illustrate this principle. In the first of these, by the custom of the country the outgoing tenant was bound to do certain acts, and entitled to receive certain compensation; but the lease which formed the written contract bound him to do the same acts in substance and specially provided for his payment as to some of them, omitting the others; and the Court held that the expression as to some excluded the implication as to the remainder, and that the language of the lease was equivalent to a stipulation that the lessor should pay for the things mentioned and no more. The custom therefore would have been repugnant to the contract. But in the latter case, in which the former was expressly recognised, the Court held that a specific provision, as to a matter dehors the custom, left the custom untouched and in full force. This latter case appears to us like the present: the contract settles the right of freight; whether or not discount is to be allowed on the payment, it leaves open; and to that the usage applies. . . .

Note.—The cases in which evidence of custom or usage is receivable have been well summarized by an eminent author, thus:—

- (1) To annex incidents to contracts and wills.

- (2) to explain the meaning of peculiar or technical terms
- (3) To furnish standards of comparisons on questions of negligence, etc.
- (4) To fix a party with knowledge or notice of this subject-matter of the usage.
- (5) To rebut a fraudulent intent.

The methods of proof of such customs or usages are also stated, thus:—

- (1) By the direct evidence of witness (which must be positive and not amount to mere opinion).
- (2) By a series of particular instances in which it has been acted upon.
- (3) By proof of similar customs in the same or analogous trades in other localities.
- (4) When ancient, by, e.g., the declarations of deceased persons of competent knowledge, or other forms of reputation.
(Phipson, 6th ed., 107; to which reference should be made for further details.)

DOE v. NEEDS.

EXCHEQUER. 1836.

6 L. J. EX. 59; 2 M. & W. 129; 46 R. R. 52.

Parol evidence is admissible to show the subject-matter to which, or the persons to whom, a written document applies or refers; and for such purpose to explain "latent" ambiguities,

Such parol evidence may be of the surrounding circumstances, or [in cases of equivocation] of statements of intention made by parties to a document.

Thus, where a devise was "to George Gord the son of Gord," and there appeared by extrinsic evidence to be two persons answering such description, evidence was allowed of the circumstances and of the testator's statements of intention to show which of the two persons he meant.

The following is from Meeson and Welsby:—

PARKE, B. (delivering the judgment of the Court, BOLLAND, GURNEY, ALDERSON and PARKE, BB.). . . . If upon the face of the devise, it had been uncertain whether the devisor had selected a particular object of his bounty, no evidence would have been admissible to prove that he intended a gift to a certain individual: such would have been a case of ambiguitas patens within the meaning of Lord Bacon's rule, which ambiguity could not be holpen by averment; for to allow such evidence would be, with respect to that subject, to cause a parol will to operate as a written one; or, adopting the language of Lord Bacon, "to make that pass without writing which the law appointeth shall not pass but by writing." But here, on the face of the devise, no such doubt arises. There is no blank before the name of Gord the father, which might have occasioned a doubt whether the devisor had finally fixed on any certain person in his mind. The devisor has clearly selected a particular individual as the devisee. . . . Upon the proof of extrinsic facts, which is always allowed in order to enable the Court to place itself in the situation of the devisor, and to construe his will, it would have appeared that there were at the date of the will two persons, to each of whom the description would be equally applicable. . . . The evidence of the declarations of the testator has not the effect of varying the instrument in any way whatever; it only enables the Court to reject one of the subjects, or objects, to which the description in the will applies; and to determine which of the two the devisor understood to be signified by the description which he used in the will. . . . He is pointed out in the devise itself by a description which, so far as it goes, is perfectly correct. . . .

Note.—A latent ambiguity is one which does not appear from the words of the document itself, but is created or shown by extrinsic evidence. Obviously, similar evidence should be allowed to explain or remove it. A patent ambiguity is one apparent on the face of the document. It is indicated in the above judgment that parol evidence is inadmissible to explain such an ambiguity. On this question see the note to the next case. The admissibility of statements of intention, as distinguished from that of surrounding circumstances, is a very difficult question, which cannot be here treated with the necessary detail. For a very full and clear statement of the matter see Phipson, 6th ed., 608—14, 627—9.

Evidence has also been allowed in cases of written documents executed by agents, in order to identify their principals as the real parties thereto. See Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834; Calder v. Dobell, L. R. 6 C. P. 486.

It was held that where there was a discrepancy between words and figures as to the amount payable on a bill of exchange, evidence could not be given that a larger amount shown by the figures was the amount payable. Saunderson v. Piper, 5 Bing. N. C. 425; see now Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 9 (2), post, p. 453.

COLPOYS v. COLPOYS.

CHANCERY. 1822.

JACOB, 451; 53 R. R. 42.

Parol evidence is admissible to explain even patent ambiguities, but only, it would seem, when they cannot be otherwise explained by construction of the context.

So, evidence of the nature and amount of a testator's property was held admissible to explain the meaning of certain bequests ambiguous in themselves.

SIR T. PLUMER, M.R. . . . I hope it will not be supposed that I dissent from the case of Fonnercau v. Poyntz (1 Bro. C. C. 472); nor that I agree to the opinion, that parol evidence is never to be let in, except in cases where there is a latent ambiguity. The admission of extrinsic circumstances to govern the construction of a written instrument, is in all cases an exception to the general rule of law, which excludes everything dehors the instrument. It is only from necessity, and then with great jealousy and caution, that Courts, either of law or equity, will suffer this rule to be departed from. It must be the case of an ambiguity, which cannot otherwise be removed, and which may by these means be clearly and satisfactorily explained. This is always permitted in the case of a latent ambiguity, which not appearing on the face of the instrument, but arising entirely from extrinsic circumstances, may always be removed by a reference to extrinsic circumstances.

In the case of a patent ambiguity, that is one appearing on the face of the instrument, as a general rule a reference to matter dehors the instrument is forbidden. It must, if possible, be removed by construction, and not by averment. But in many cases this is impracticable; where the terms used are wholly indefinite and equivocal, and carry on the face of them no certain or explicit meaning, and the instrument furnishes no materials by which the ambiguity thus arising can be removed: if in such cases the Court were to reject the only mode by which the meaning could be ascertained, viz. the resort to extrinsic circumstances, the instrument must become inoperative and void. As a minor evil, therefore, common sense, and the law of England (which are seldom at variance), warrant the departure from the general rule, and call in the light of extrinsic evidence. The books are full of instances sanctioned by the highest authorities both in law and equity. When the person or the thing is designated on the face of the instrument, by terms imperfect and equivocal, admitting either of no meaning at all by themselves, or of a variety of different meanings, referring tacitly or expressly for the ascertainment and completion of the meaning to extrinsic circumstances, it has never been considered an objection to the reception of the evidence of those circumstances, that the ambiguity was patent, manifested on the face of the instrument. When a legacy is given to a man by his surname, and the Christian name is not mentioned; is not that a patent ambiguity? Yet, it is decided, that evidence is admissible (Price v. Page, 4 Ves. 680). So where there is a gift of the testator's stock, that is ambiguous, it has different meanings when used by a farmer and a merchant. So with a bequest of jewels; if by a nobleman, it would pass all; but if by a jeweller, it would not pass those that he had in his shop. Thus, the same expression may vary in meaning according to the circumstances of the testator.

To show how mistaken the idea is, that extrinsic evidence is never to be received in cases of patent ambiguity, we may refer to a case in the House of Lords, unquestionably of that description, where the evidence was admitted. I mean the case of Doe dem. Jersey v. Smith (2 Brod. & Bing. 553). Mr. Justice Bayley thus states the principle upon which it was introduced. "The evidence here is not to produce a construction against the direct and natural meaning of the words; not to control a provision which was distinct and accurately described; but because there is an ambiguity on the face of the instrument; because an indefinite expression is used capable of being satisfied in more ways than one; and I look to the state of the property at the time, to the estate and interest the settlor had, and the situation in which she stood with regard to the property she was settling, to see whether that estate, or interest, or situation, would assist us in judging what was her meaning by that indefinite expression."

If it were necessary, I could refer to many other instances of resorting to extrinsic matter in cases of patent ambiguity; but this decision I ground upon the case of Fonnereau v. Poyntz.

Note.—It is commonly stated that parol evidence is not admissible to explain a "patent" ambiguity, or one appearing on the face of the document itself. But it is pointed out by a very well-known writer that this is not generally true, and that "the only patent ambiguity that is not open to explanation by extrinsic matter is one which in the nature of things is incapable of explanation." (Phipson, 6th ed., 613—14, where it is explained how the supposed rule arose out of a misapplication of Bacon's maxim referred to in the case of Doe v. Needs, ante, p. 377.) See also a very full discussion of the matter in Thayer, 423, where it is said: "The maxim appears to have been wholly Bacon's own; it was well on towards two centuries before the profession took it up. . . . The intuitus of it, and the state of professional opinion to which it was addressed, may be appreciated if one observes the amazing pedantry of legal discussion in those days, in cases where the construction of writings was in question." The correct rule appears to have been thus stated in 1852, in the last edition of Phillipps, 391: "The result appears to be, with regard to an ambiguity apparent on the face of the instrument, that there is no peremptory rule of law, which, in all instances, should exclude the reception of extrinsic evidence; and that, although some descriptions are so uncertain as to be beyond the aid of extrinsic evidence, and incurable, others are capable of explanation, and when sufficiently explained, may admit of being carried into effect." But, as a very recent treatise says, "where after the application of extrinsic evidence to determine the literal meaning of the words used, and of extrinsic evidence to determine in what secondary meaning, if any, they are employed, a patent ambiguity remains as to the person or the thing intended, or as to what is to be done, the intention of the parties cannot be ascertained, or, as the rule is commonly expressed, the deed or clause is void for uncertainty" (Norton on Deeds, 97). See also Jarman on Wills, I. 516.

It would certainly not be in accordance with common sense (as was indicated in the above case), if parol evidence were to be rejected where it could satisfactorily clear up an ambiguity, on the mere ground that it was patent. But if the words used are so defective or ambiguous as to be meaningless, and really incapable of being thus solved, they must fail (see Baylis v. A.-G., post, p. 384).

In short, the suggested rule excluding such evidence must have meant, if it had any substance at all, that you must not remove doubts and show the true meaning of such a document, even if you could do so beyond all question and to the complete satisfaction of the Court. This is very different from not being allowed to show a meaning not expressed at all in the words.

If, however, the words used are unambiguous, parol evidence cannot be allowed even of such matters as surrounding circumstances. Higgins v. Dawson, infra.

HIGGINS v. DAWSON.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

[1902] A. C. 1; 71 L. J. Ch. 132.

A testator, after directing payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and bequeathing a number of pecuniary legacies, gave "all the residue and remainder of the sum of £9,187 lent on mortgage to A., and £4,000 lent on mortgage to B., after payment of my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," to certain persons, there being no general residuary gift. The question being whether the pecuniary legacies were to be paid out of the two mortgages, or only out of the general personal estate excluding the mortgages:—Held, that the latter construction was correct; and that, the words in inverted commas being unambiguous, evidence of the circumstances surrounding the testator at the date of the execution of the will (viz., that if the legacies were to be paid out of the then general personal estate, without resorting to the mortgages, the legacies could not be paid in full) was not admissible to explain the words "residue and remainder" in the will.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C. . . . Now, it has been said, and said very truly, that "residue and remainder" are relative terms; you cannot tell what they mean until you have found out in relation to what they are used. If, as Collins, L.J., says, these words had been left by themselves and without an exposition of what they were to be read in relation to, there would have been considerable justice in the suggestion that you might read them as applicable to the residue of the whole estate, after payment of its natural and just burdens. . . . But when I come to look at the will itself,

I must construe them as they stand in the context, and in their grammatical meaning, and with reference to what is there said; and then, it seems to me, the problem is solved without the smallest difficulty. . . . The observations of very learned Judges have been quoted to show that you must read all the words in every instrument with reference to the circumstances under which they are uttered or written. In one sense that is quite true. It is quite true that where you are finding out persons or things—who are the persons designated by the will, and what are the things left by the will—you may find either the person or the thing by proper external evidence of what is referred to. . . . And here the odd thing is that the supposed ambiguous words which you are to construe are the words “residue and remainder,” and yet, from first to last, the learned counsel have refused to refer to the words “residue and remainder” as they are used in the will. It is not “residue and remainder” absolutely, and that is the fallacy of the whole argument that has been addressed to your Lordships. It is the residue and remainder of a particular thing, and you cannot cut the phrase in two and pretend that it becomes ambiguous because you take one part of a phrase which is admittedly relative and treat it apart from the context in which it is, and the thing of which it purports to be the residue. And that is really the key to the whole matter. . . . Now, if I were to concede—what I certainly do not in this case, for I know nothing about it—that it is more probable that the testator would have treated the residue as being the residue of his whole estate, and not of this particular sum of which it is stated to be the residue, if he had had the facts and circumstances of his property before him; if I were to concede that, it would not help the present respondents, because, in the view I take, if you were to construe it with reference to any such question, it would be making a new will for him, and not construing the will which he has made. . . . The language, therefore is to my mind absolutely unambiguous. . . . I confess I am confirmed in the view which I entertain, by the 24th section of the Wills Act, that I am to construe this will as if the condition of things to which it refers was that immediately before the testator's death. I do not believe that for any such purpose as is now contended you have any right to go into the history of the testator's property and see when he came into possession of it.

LORD DAVEY. . . . No doubt the word "residue" is in itself a relative term; but in this case the testator has himself told us the meaning in which he uses the word "residue," and the subject-matter with reference to which the word "residue" is used, namely, it is to be the residue of the mortgage debts after the payment of the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. Am I to change my opinion of the meaning of these words, which I think very plain, because I know that at the time when he made his will the mortgage debts formed the bulk of his property? I think not.

BAYLIS v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

CHANCERY. 1741.

2 ATKYNS, 239.

Parol evidence is not admissible to supply total blanks in written documents, or to explain the meaning of words or expressions so defective or ambiguous as to be meaningless in themselves, by showing what a party to such document intended to say.

A legacy was given to the ward of Bread Street, London, "according to Mr. — his will." It was held that evidence could not be received to supply the blank.

LORD HARDWICKE, L.C. There are instances where this Court has admitted parol evidence to ascertain the person intended by the testator, where he has been mentioned only by a nickname, or where there have been two persons who have had the same Christian name and surname; but I do not remember any case where the Court has gone so far, as to allow parol evidence of the intention of a testator, where there is only a blank. . . .

Note.—A clear and sharp distinction must be drawn between a total blank, or an expression incapable of any meaning at all, and an expression which is capable of two or more meanings. It is submitted that the former is not truly an ambiguity, but the latter is. If so.

there seems to be no need at all to talk of or consider ambiguities in laying down the very obvious rule that a person must make his own document complete, and the Court will not do it for him, by speculating as to and supplying what he meant to say. So, in the case of Hunt v. Hort, 3 Br. C. C. 311, Thurlow considered that a bequest to "Lady ——" was equivalent to a total blank and that the name could not be supplied by parol evidence, and the same would doubtless be the case in a gift to "Mrs. ——" But in Abbot v. Massie, 3 Ves. 148, evidence was allowed to show the identity of "Mrs. G.," a partial or imperfect description; and in Price v. Page, 4 Ves. 680, to show who "— Price" was. See Phipson, 6th ed., 613—14.

SMITH v. WILSON.

KING'S BENCH. 1832.

1 L. J. K. B. 194; 3 B. & Ad. 728; 37 R. R. 536.

Parol evidence is admissible to interpret or translate a document or words or phrases therein, or to show that a word therein has been used with, and has acquired a special and unusual meaning, in the locality or among the persons in question, with reference to the subject-matter; unless a definite meaning has been given to such word or term by statute.

In a lease it was provided that at the end of the term the tenant should leave not less than 10,000 rabbits on the premises, to be taken and paid for by the landlord, at the rate of 60l. "per thousand." It was held that evidence was admissible to show that the custom of that part of the country, in counting rabbits, was to allow six score to the hundred.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD TENTERDEN, C.J. . . . I think that where in a deed, or in a declaration, or other pleading, a term is used, to which an Act of Parliament has given a definite meaning, the use of the term will be governed by the meaning given by the Act of Parliament. There is no Act of Parliament which provides that an hundred rabbits shall consist of five score to the hundred. Then we must suppose that the

*Correct
authentic deed!*

parties to this deed used the word "thousand" with reference to the subject-matter, according to the meaning which it received in that part of the country. I cannot say, then, that evidence to show what was the acceptation of the term "thousand," with reference to this subject-matter ought not to have been received at all.

PARKE, J. I am of the same opinion. I think the principle has been correctly laid down from the authorities, in the passage cited from Mr. Starkie's book—"Where terms are used which are known and understood by a particular class of persons, in a certain special and peculiar sense, evidence to that effect is admissible, for the purpose of applying the instrument to its proper subject-matter."

LITTLEDALE and TAUNTON, JJ., concurred.

Note.—It may be said that this is but a case of translation of a document according to legal language. As foreign language might be translated by verbal evidence, so might local, technical, obsolete, trade, or family, language be translated, it would appear. "There is no doubt that not only where the language of the instrument is such as the Court does not understand, it is competent to receive evidence of the proper meaning of that language, as when it is written in a foreign tongue; but it is also competent, where technical words or peculiar terms, or indeed any expressions are used, which at the time the instrument was written had acquired an appropriate meaning, either generally or by local usage, or amongst particular classes" (Shore v. Wilson, 9 C. & F. 555). See also the case of Morrell v. Frith, ante, p. 11.

KELL v. CHARMER.

CHANCERY. 1856.

23 BEAV. 195; 4 W. R. 787.

In order to interpret or ascertain the meaning of a written document, parol evidence may be given of the meaning or sense in which, not only words, but also signs, symbols, private marks, or nicknames, have been used. Such evidence may be given although the words, etc., the meaning of which is in question, appear to have been used with a particular meaning only by the person whose document is under construction; and not so used by any class of persons or in any locality.

A testator gave legacies by his will as follows: "I give and bequeath to my son William the sum of i. x. x.; to my son Robert Charles the sum of o. x. x.; to my daughter Harriet Emily the sum of —; to my daughter Georgiana Five Hundred Pounds."

Evidence was given by the shopman of the testator to the effect that the testator had carried on the business of a jeweller, in the course of which he had used certain private marks or symbols to denote prices or sums of money, and that, according to such marks or symbols as used by him, i. x. x. meant 100*l.* and o. x. x. meant 200*l.*

SIR JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., held that such evidence was admissible to determine the amount of the first two legacies.

Note.—Parol, or extrinsic, evidence has been admitted to show the meaning of the following expressions, among many others:—

"Children." Although words descriptive of relationship must be taken primâ facie to mean legitimate relations, evidence has been admitted to show that illegitimate relations were intended. So the word "children" in a will has been held to mean illegitimate children where (a) there are not and cannot be any legitimate children of the person mentioned; as where the gift is to the children of a person dead at the date of the will (Woodhouselee v. Dalrymple, 2 Mer. 419), or where (b) the circumstances otherwise show that illegitimate children were clearly intended, as where a testator knew of his daughter's invalid marriage with her deceased sister's husband, and had treated her children as his grandchildren, such children took under a gift to her children (Hill v. Crook, L. R. 6 H. L. 265). In this case Lord Cairns said: "The terms 'husband' and 'wife,' 'father' and 'mother' and 'children,' are all correlative terms. If a father knows that his daughter has children by a connection which he calls a 'marriage' with a man whom he calls her 'husband,' terming the daughter the 'wife' of that husband, I am at a loss to understand the meaning of language if you are not to impute to that same person, when he speaks of the 'children' of his daughter, this meaning, that, as he termed his daughter and the man with whom she was living, 'wife' and 'husband,' so also he means to term the offspring born of that so-called 'marriage' the children, according to that nomenclature. . . . If you find that that is the nomenclature used by the testator, taking his will as the dictionary from which you are to find the meaning of the terms he has used, that is all which the law, as I understand the cases, requires." This "dictionary principle" has been frequently applied to the meaning of words.

"Family." Evidence of circumstances may be given to explain this word, for "under different circumstances it may mean a man's household consisting of himself, his wife, children and servants; it may mean his wife and children, or his children excluding his wife, or in the absence of wife and children, it may mean his brothers and sisters or his next of kin; or it may mean the genealogical stock from which he may have sprung" (Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Keen, 181).

"Relations." This word primâ facie means legitimate relations, but evidence may show that illegitimate relations are intended (see supra, "Children").

"Wife." Although this word generally means in a will the legitimate wife at the date of the will of the person mentioned, it has, according to circumstances, been held to apply to a later wife (Re Lyne, L. R. 8 Eq. 65), to a reputed wife (Re Lowe, 61 L. J. Ch. 415), and to a divorced wife (Bullmore v. Wynter, 23 Ch. D. 619).

"Niece." Evidence has been admitted to show that a great-great-niece of the name was intended, when the testator had no actual niece of the name (Stringer v. Gardiner, 27 Beav. 35).

"Land." As regards subject-matter, this word embraces, primâ facie, everything on or under the soil, but not, apparently, incorporeal rights, as advowsons, tithes, etc. But it seems that evidence may be given to show that the testator must have intended such rights to pass. "Thus it seems that if a man devise all his lands in A., and he has no other real estate there but tithes, they will pass. So, if he devise a certain manor, and has only a fee farm rent issuing out of it, such rent will pass" (Jarman on Wills, 1287). And as regards estates or interests in land, the former rule was that the word "land" in a will meant, primâ facie, freehold interests only, unless the evidence showed that the testator had no freeholds answering the description, in which case it passed leaseholds. But the Wills Act, 1837, s. 26, now provides that the expression shall include all estates in land "unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

"Money." Evidence of circumstances may be admitted to show that this word was intended to include stock, where there was no actual cash answering the description, or even general personal estate. "There should be no absolute technical meaning given to such a word as 'money' in a will, but its meaning in every case must depend upon the context if there is any which can explain it, and upon those surrounding circumstances, which the Court is bound to take into consideration in determining the construction" (per Kay, J., in Re Bramley, [1902] F., p. 157).

"Year." Where a person was engaged to perform at a theatre for "three years" at a certain salary "per week," evidence was admitted to show that actors were only paid during the theatrical season, and the word "year" was held to mean only the parts of the year during which the theatre was open (Grant v. Maddox, 15 M. & W. 737). And a gift by will of a "year's wages" to servants was held to apply only to those shown to be employed at yearly wages (Re Ravensworth, [1905] 2 Ch. 1).

"Month." This term generally means a lunar month, but evidence of usage has been admitted to show that calendar months were intended, in a charterparty (Jolly v. Young, 1 Esp. 186), and in an option to purchase a patent within six months (Bruner v. Moore, [1904] 1 Ch. 305).

"Week." This has been held, under the special circumstances, to apply only to weeks during a certain season (Grant v. Maddox, supra).

In the above cases, however, it is not always clear how far the construction was influenced by extrinsic evidence, or how far it was merely a matter of pure construction of words according to the context.

The question of admissibility of evidence has also arisen concerning Ademption and Repetition of Legacies. The equitable presumption of "ademption" has been referred to. ante, p. 25. Parol evidence is generally admissible to rebut such presumption when it arises, but not to raise the presumption. So, if two legacies are given by different instruments, whether of the same amount or not, the rule of construction is that the legatee takes both, and evidence cannot be given to the contrary; unless the legacies are of the same amount and also the same motive is expressed for giving them, in which case there is a presumption that only one legacy is intended, and evidence may be given to rebut such presumption (Hurst v. Beach, 5 Mad. 351).

Extrinsic evidence is not admissible for the following purposes, among others:—

- Filling up a total blank (Baylis v. Att.-Gen., ante, p. 384).
 - Inserting a devise omitted by mistake (Newburgh v. Newburgh, 5 Mad. 364).
 - Proving what was intended by an unintelligible word (Goblet v. Beechey, 3 Sim. 24).
 - Changing the person described (Delmare v. Robello, 1 Ves. Jr. 412).
 - Reconciling conflicting clauses in a will (Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 372).
 - Constructing a will with reference to instructions given for preparing it (Gooding v. Gooding, 1 Ves. Sen. 230).
 - Controlling a technical rule of verbal construction (Lane v. Stanhope, 6 T. R. 345).
 - Raising a presumption (Rachfield v. Cureless, 2 P. W. 157).
 - Adding to, detracting from, or altering a will (Herbert v. Reid, 16 Ves. Jr. 481).
 - Proving intention, generally (Doc v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & W. 363).
- (On this matter generally, reference should be made to the standard works, Wigram on Extrinsic Evidence in Interpretation of Wills, and Hawkins on Construction of Wills, new editions of which have recently been published.)

REAL EVIDENCE.

It has been stated (ante, p. 255) that the third kind of evidence recognised by the English law is that known as "Real Evidence," or the evidence afforded by production of chattels or other physical objects for inspection by the Court.

The Court most naturally expects to see, and is invariably allowed to see, such things as implements with which an alleged crime is said to have been committed, wounds or other damage alleged to have been inflicted, young persons whose age is in question, animals alleged to be vicious, writings alleged to have been tampered with, labels or devices alleged to be an infringement, the premises in question in cases of obstruction of light, nuisance, or other injury, and the like.

Even the conduct and demeanour of a witness in the witness box, from which the Court may draw conclusions, may be considered real evidence.

The necessity and reason for such evidence are indeed so obvious that there are few cases dealing with the matter, and even text-books on the law of evidence commonly neglect the subject. But, for the sake of completeness, it appears proper to refer shortly to the main features of such evidence. [For a detailed examination of this topic, see Best, 12th ed., §§ 28; 196—214; and App. A., pp. 593—606; Taylor, §§ 554—566; Phipson, 6th ed., pp. 4—5, 7—10; Powell, Bk. II., Ch. X.] One of the most important points to be noticed is that dealt with in the second case given below—production of chattels or physical objects is not legally requisite in order to render parol evidence as to their nature admissible. Even if such production were easy, and manifestly the proper course, non-production would only be matter of observation or comment. This is so even although an important feature of the object in question consists of writing or words (R. v. Hunt, ante,

p. 333), so long as it does not really amount to a "document," in which case, as we have seen (ante, p. 329), parol evidence is not allowed without satisfactorily accounting for the original. It may indeed be a fine question whether a particular physical object with words inscribed on it is a document or not. On the one hand, objects without any words upon them may be documents, such as pieces of wood with notches only on them indicating the quantity of goods delivered, such as the "nick-sticks" referred to in Scott's Antiquary, Chapter XV., and the old Exchequer tallies indicating money paid in the same manner. On the other hand, flags, banners and the like with verbal inscriptions, or labels on bottles or packages, bearing descriptive words, would generally not be documents.

The well-known case of Armory v. Delamirie (1 Strange 504, post, p. 394), illustrates the disadvantage of not producing an object when necessary. There, a chimney-sweeper's boy sued a goldsmith for detaining a jewel which the latter had taken from a ring found by the former. As the jewel was not produced, when the question came as to the value of the jewel to be paid by the defendant, the evidence of several jewellers was taken as to the value of the best jewel to fit the socket, and such value was taken as the measure of the damages.

Real evidence generally requires some oral evidence to introduce it or to explain it, e.g., to prove where the object was found, its condition, or the use to which it was put or to identify it.

There is danger in real evidence, especially with juries or persons inexperienced in judicial enquiries. Although, primâ facie, such evidence is most satisfactory, being directly addressed to the senses of the tribunal, a jury may too readily draw conclusions from it. They may, in their natural horror or sympathy, excited by the sight of a bloody weapon or serious wound, too readily connect it with the prisoner charged, and lose sight of the necessity of establishing a clear connection, or showing that the object in question had actually been used as alleged. Readers of Dickens will remember how the country folk in "Barnaby Rudge" were satisfied that Queen Elizabeth had really stayed at the Maypole Inn, and had cuffed an unlucky page whilst standing on a mounting block, by merely being shown that there was such a mounting block outside the inn; and how the patriarch Jacob drew the hasty but erroneous conclusion that Joseph had been devoured by an evil beast, on the sight of his bloody coat of many colours. But when such evidence is strictly and carefully dealt with and properly applied, it may fairly be said to be most reliable.

Statutory recognition of real evidence appears in the provisions of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, s. 17 (see post, p. 475), and the Children Act, 1908, s. 123 (see post, p. 490).

Inspection out of Court may also be had by special order, mainly under the provisions of the Juries Act, 1825 (see post, p. 414), and Order 50 of the Rules of the Supreme Court (see post, p. 517).

LINE v. TAYLOR,

HERTFORD ASSIZES. 1862.

3 FOSTER & FINLASON, 731.

Evidence may be adduced by production in Court, for inspection by the Judge or jury, of physical objects, such as chattels, persons, animals, or objects with inscriptions or words thereon. Such evidence is known as "Real Evidence."

In an action for knowingly keeping a fierce and mischievous dog, which bit and wounded the plaintiff, the defendant's counsel proposed that the dog should be brought into Court, in charge of his keeper, to be inspected by the jury. Counsel for the plaintiff objected.

ERLE, C.J. "When I last went upon Circuit with the late lamented Lord Chief Justice Campbell, I recollect that, in a similar case, his Lordship allowed the dog to be brought into Court; I see no objection to it."

The dog was accordingly brought in, led by his keeper, with a chain. The jury had him brought up to them, and at their desire the keeper let go of him. They examined him, and appeared to be of opinion that, from the expression of his eyes and other indications, he was not of a vicious disposition.

ERLE, C.J. (to the jury), said they "might judge partly from their knowledge of dogs and their own observance of the animal in question."

R. v. FRANCIS.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. 1874.

L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128; 43 L. J. M. C. 97; 30 L.T. 503;
22 W. R. 663; 12 Cox, 612.

Non-production of a chattel or physical object, which might conveniently be produced for inspection by the Court, does not render oral evidence respecting the same inadmissible. Such non-production is only a matter for observation or criticism; going merely to the weight, not to the admissibility, of the oral evidence.

The prisoner was indicted for false pretences, by having falsely represented a ring to be a diamond ring. In order to prove his guilty knowledge, evidence was admitted of attempts on other occasions to obtain money on a false ring, at Leicester. It was held that oral evidence of the nature of such ring was admissible, although it was not produced in Court.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J. (delivering the judgment of the Court, LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., BLACKBURN and LUSH, JJ., PICOTT and CLEASBY, BB.). . . It was objected that the evidence of what took place at Leicester was not properly received, because the cluster ring which he there attempted to pass was not produced in Court, and that the evidence of two witnesses who saw it, and swore to its being false, was not admissible. No doubt if there was not admissible evidence that this ring was false it ought not to have been left to the jury; but though the non-production of the article may afford ground for observation more or less weighty, according to circumstances, it only goes to the weight, not to the admissibility, of the evidence, and no question as to the weight of this evidence is now before us. Where the question is as to the effect of a written instrument, the instrument itself is primary evidence of its contents, and until it is produced, or the non-production is excused, no secondary evidence can be received. But there is no case whatever deciding that, when the issue is as to the state of a chattel, e.g. the soundness of a horse, or the equality of the bulk of the goods to the sample, the production of the chattel is primary evidence, and that no other evidence can be given till the chattel is produced in Court for the inspection of the jury. The law of evidence is the same in criminal and civil suits.

Note.—See also R. v. Hunt, ante, p. 333.

ARMORY v. DELAMIRIE.

KING'S BENCH. 1722.

1 STRANGE, 505.

Non-production of a chattel or physical object, by a party who could produce it, or who has prevented himself from producing it, may induce the Court to discredit his evidence concerning it, and even to presume the strongest against him,

“The plaintiff being a chimney sweeper's boy found a jewel and carried it to the defendant's shop (who was a goldsmith) to know what it was, and delivered it into the hands of the apprentice, who, under pretence of weighing it, took out the stones, and calling to the master to let him know it came to three halfpence, the master offered the boy the money, who refused to take it, and insisted to have the thing again, whereupon the apprentice delivered him back the socket without the stones. And now in trover against the master these points were ruled" by SIR JOHN PRATT, C.J. 1. That the finder of a jewel, though he does not by such finding acquire an absolute property or ownership, yet he has such a property as will enable him to keep it against all but the rightful owner, and consequently may maintain trover.

2. That the action will lay against the master, who gives a credit to his apprentice, and is answerable for his neglect.

3. As to the value of the jewel, several of the trade were examined to prove what a jewel of the finest water that would fit the socket would be worth; and the Chief Justice directed the jury, that unless the defendant did produce the jewel and show it not to be of the finest water, they should presume the strongest against him, and make the value of the best jewels the measure of their damages, which they accordingly did.

X

THE ADDUCTION OF EVIDENCE.

The proceedings, necessary or proper for the purpose of bringing evidence before the Court, would seem to be more appropriate for discussion in Books on the Procedure of the Courts. It may, however, be well to set out in this place some short account of the proceedings in ordinary civil and criminal cases, for adduction of evidence (i.) before trial, (ii.) at trial, and (iii.) on appeal.

I. EVIDENCE BEFORE TRIAL.

(a) In Civil Cases.

In civil cases it is unusual to take evidence before trial. The witnesses must generally be "examined vivâ voce and in open Court" (Order 37, r. 1, post, p. 512). But various provisions are made for taking evidence before trial. In the High Court evidence may be so taken by the following methods.

1. Affidavits. These may be of the evidence generally, by agreement in writing between all parties; or of particular facts, by Order of Court, under Order 37, r. 1, post, p. 512).

2. Commissions. Depositions may be taken by examination of witnesses before a commissioner or examiner, under Order 37, r. 1, post, p. 512; or before the Court, Judge, officer of the Court or any other person, at any place, under Order 37, r. 5, post, p. 513. Such order is generally made only in cases where the witness is abroad, or is unable to attend the trial owing to age, illness, or physical incapacity. The examination is generally taken before an examiner of the Court, or a practising lawyer. As to the procedure in such matters, see Order 37, rr. 7 et seq., post, p. 513, and the Evidence by Commission Acts, 1843 and 1859, post, pp. 418, 431. As to the circumstances in which depositions in civil cases may be put in evidence at the trial, see Order 37, r. 18, post, p. 514.

3. Letters of Request. An order may be made for the issue of a "request in lieu of a commission, under Order 37, r. 6a, post, p. 513. This process is used when the evidence is required of a witness resident in certain countries which object to the administration of an oath by anyone except their own officials, e.g., Austria, Germany, Russia and Sweden. A request is also frequently issued to Colonial and Indian Courts. It is addressed to the tribunal of the other country asking the Judges thereof to order the evidence to be taken and remitted to the High Court.

4. Interrogatories. An order may be made for any party to deliver interrogatories in writing for examination of opposite parties, under Order 31, rr. 1, 2, post, p. 509. The answers by affidavit, may be put in evidence at the trial, as provided by Order 31, rr. 8, 24, post, p. 510.

5. Perpetuation of Testimony. Proceedings may be taken for perpetuating testimony in certain cases for use in a subsequent action, under Order 37, r. 35, post, p. 515.

As regards other civil courts reference should be made to books on the practice thereof.

(b) In Criminal Cases.

In cases of indictable offences depositions are always taken by the justices before whom a person is charged. This is generally under the provisions of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867. Several other provisions have also been made for taking depositions in criminal cases; and for the perpetuation of testimony. The chief provisions are the following:—

1. The Indictable Offences Act, 1848, by ss. 17, 18, post, p. 421, provides for the taking of depositions on behalf of the prosecution in all cases of indictable offences.
2. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, by s. 3, post, p. 441, provides for the taking of depositions on behalf of the accused person, in all cases of indictable offences; and by s. 6, post, p. 442, provides for perpetuating the testimony of witnesses who are dangerously ill.

3. The Coroners Act, 1887, by s. 4, post, p. 458, provides for the taking of depositions of all persons tendering evidence on inquests held before coroners.

4. The Children Act, 1908, by s. 28, post, p. 488, provides for the taking of depositions of children or young persons whose attendance before a Court would involve serious danger to life or health.

The duties of the justices in taking depositions, under the Acts of 1848 and 1867, supra, may be thus summarised. They must:—

1. Take the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, in the presence of the accused, allowing him to cross-examine, putting such evidence into writing, cause it to be read to and signed by the witnesses, and sign it themselves. (Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 17, post, p. 421.)

2. Cause such evidence to be read over to the accused, and ask him whether he wishes to say anything in answer, warning him that he need not do so, but that what he says may be given in evidence against him, take down in writing what he says, read it over to him, and sign it themselves. (Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 18, post, p. 422.)

3. Ask the accused whether he desires to call witnesses, take their evidence in the presence of the accused, cause it to be read to and signed by the witnesses, and sign it themselves. (Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, s. 3, post, p. 441.)

It will be observed that the prisoner's statement, under par. 2 above, is unsworn, and is not strictly a deposition, but it is practically treated as part of the depositions and is read at the trial by the prosecution, whether it is in his favour or not. But it should be distinguished from the unsworn statement of the prisoner made at the trial itself, the right to make which is recognised and preserved by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1 (h), post, p. 469.

As to the circumstances in which depositions in criminal cases may be put in evidence at the trial, see post, p. 402.

II. EVIDENCE AT TRIAL.

(a) In Civil Cases.

A witness is generally brought to Court and called by the party desiring his evidence; not by the Court or any official. There seems to be some doubt as to the power of the Judge to call a witness not called by the parties. It was indeed said by Lord Esher, M.R., in Coulson v. Disborough, [1894] 2 Q. B. 316, that the Judge might himself call a person who happened to be in Court and was not called by either side, in order to discover the truth, especially if the jury desired it. This dictum was disapproved in Re Enoch, [1910] 1 K. B. 327, from which case it would appear that a witness can only be called by consent of the parties, in a civil case. The parties can surely have the case decided solely upon the evidence or material they choose to bring before the Court. And it appears that a person, who has not been subpoenaed as a witness, but who is present and is called by one of the parties as a witness, can decline to give evidence in a civil case (R. v. Sadler, 4 C. & P. 218). The party against whom a witness is called may object that he is incompetent. The objection should be made as soon as such incompetency appears; before he is sworn or examined on the voir dire if possible. But the objection may be taken at any time; even after he has answered certain questions, the answers to which may be struck out and disregarded if he is held by the Judge to be incompetent (Jacobs v. Layborn, post, p. 405; R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 33).

The attendance of witnesses is compelled, generally, by a writ of subpœna ad testificandum, if to give evidence merely, or subpœna duces tecum, if to produce documents, issued in the High Court, under the provisions of Order 37, rr. 26—34a, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, and in other Courts by various rules applicable thereto. As to trial by referee, see Order 36, r. 49, post, p. 512. In the case of a witness out of the Jurisdiction of the High Court, a subpœna in a special form must be issued under the Attendance of Witnesses Act, 1854, post, p. 428. A witness in prison is generally brought up by a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum or by a warrant or order of a Judge of the High Court.

A party to an action may subpœna any person as a witness without leave, but the Court can set aside a subpœna issued improperly or being an abuse of the process of the Court (R. v. Baines, post, p. 403).

(b) In Criminal Cases.

As in a civil case, a witness is generally brought to Court and called by the party desiring his evidence, the prosecutor or the accused; not by the Court or any official. It is, however, submitted that the Judge has, in a criminal case, a greater power of calling a witness not called otherwise, as he is charged with the public duty of enquiring into the offence, and cannot be restricted to the evidence or material which the parties choose to bring before the Court. It appears also that a person who has not been subpœnaed as a witness, but who is present and is called for the prosecution or the defence, cannot decline to give evidence in a criminal case (R. v. Sadler, 4 C. & P. 218). The remarks made above as to objections to competency equally apply to criminal cases.

The attendance of witnesses is compelled, generally, by recognisances, whereby witnesses are bound over to appear at the trial by the Justices who committed the accused for trial, under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 20, post, p. 422, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, s. 3, post, p. 441. Other witnesses can be compelled to attend by subpœna, issued by the Clerk of Quarter Sessions or Assize, or from the Crown Office.

III. EVIDENCE ON APPEAL.

(a) In Civil Cases.

Evidence is brought before the Court of Appeal in accordance with the provisions of Order 58, rr. 4, 11, 13, post, p. 517; before the Divisional Court, on appeal from an inferior Court, in accordance with the provisions of Order 59, rr. 8, 13, post, p. 519.

(b) In Criminal Cases.

Evidence is brought before the Court of Criminal Appeal in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, ss. 8, 9, 16, post, p. 480.

See Table of Contents, ante, p. xviii, for details.

R. v. SCAIFE.

QUEEN'S BENCH: 1851.

20 L. J. M. C. 229; 15 JUR. 607; 17 Q. B. 242;
2 DEN. 281; 5 COX, 243.

The deposition of a witness in a criminal case, if properly taken before a magistrate under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, is admissible in evidence at the trial, not only if the witness is "dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel," as provided by such Act, but also when the witness is kept out of the way by the prisoner's procurement; but not if there be merely unexplained absence. If procurement of the absence be shown, and there are several prisoners, the deposition is evidence against those only who are proved to have procured such absence.

Scaife was indicted with two other persons for felony. It appeared that a certain witness, whose deposition had been regularly taken, had been kept out of the way by one of the prisoners, Smith. At the trial the Judge admitted the evidence against all the three prisoners, Scaife and one other being found guilty. On an application for a new trial, it was held that the evidence was rightly admitted against Smith only.

The following is from the Law Journal:—

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J. . . . The prisoner Smith having resorted to a contrivance to keep the witness out of the way, the evidence would be admissible against him, but it would not be admissible on that ground against the other prisoners. The learned Judge does not seem to have made any distinction in this respect, but to have admitted the evidence against the two who were convicted, without proof of any contrivance on their part. . . .

PATTESON, J. If there were enough to show that the witness was kept out of the way by Smith, the deposition would be admissible against him; but it would not be admissible against the other prisoners, unless they were affected with the contrivance of Smith. No such distinction appears to have been made, but the evidence was admitted generally against all the prisoners. It was assumed that all were connected with the contrivance, without any evidence whatever to support such an assumption.

ERLE, J. With respect to two of the prisoners, the admissibility of the deposition must be rested solely upon the ground of absence unexplained; . . . it is not receivable on that ground.

COLERIDGE, J., concurred.

Note.—Although depositions are, by the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 17, to be taken "in all cases where any person shall appear or be brought before any justice or justices of the peace charged with any indictable offence," yet they are not used as evidence upon the trial of such person if the witnesses are able to be present and to give their evidence again. The Act provides that "if upon the trial of the person so accused as first aforesaid it shall be proved, by the oath or affirmation of any credible witness, that any person whose depositions shall have been taken as aforesaid is dead or so ill as not to be able to travel, and if also it shall be proved that such deposition was taken in the presence of the person so accused, and that he or his counsel or attorney had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness, then, if such deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition," etc.

It was held in the above case that the admissibility of the depositions was not limited to the two cases mentioned in the Act, death, and illness. They can probably be used also in the case of the insanity of a witness (R. v. Marshall, C. & M. 147), but not merely because he has gone abroad (R. v. Austin, 7 Cox, 55).

The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, and the Children Act, 1903, both specify the circumstances in which depositions taken thereunder are admissible in evidence (see post, pp. 442—488). The Coroners Act, 1837, does not specify the circumstances (see post, p. 458). They appear to be admissible in the same events as those taken under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (see Phipson, 511—12).

R. v. BAINES.

KING'S BENCH. 1908.

L. R. [1909] 1 K. B. 258; 78 L. J. K. B. 119; 100
L. T. 78; 25 T. L. R. 79.

A party to legal proceedings may subpoena any person as a witness, without leave of the Court. But the Court has jurisdiction to interfere and set aside a subpoena where it is satisfied that its process is being used for indirect or improper objects or is being abused.

The defendant issued and served subpoenas commanding the Prime Minister, the Rt. Hon. H. H. Asquith, and the Home Secretary, the Rt. Hon. H. J. Gladstone, to attend and give evidence at the Leeds Assizes, on the trial of an indictment against him for breach of the peace and unlawful assembly. Mr. Asquith and Mr. Gladstone applied to the King's Bench Division for an order that the subpoenas served on them should be set aside on the ground that the issue thereof was an abuse of the process of the Court; supporting their application by affidavits to the effect (inter alia) that they were unable to give any relevant evidence, that they had so informed the defendant's solicitor, that no application had been made to either of them for any proof, and that they believed the subpoenas to have been issued, not with any bonâ fide belief that they could give any material evidence, but for purposes of vexation. The Court set aside the subpoenas.

The following is from the Law Reports:—

BIGHAM, J. . . . There can be no doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Court to interfere where it is satisfied that its process is being used for indirect or improper objects. It must not be supposed that the position which the applicants occupy affords them any privilege. They stand in the same position as any other of His Majesty's subjects. But the Court has to inquire whether its process has been issued against them with the object and expectation on reasonable grounds of obtaining from them evidence which can be relevant. What are the facts? (His Lordship here considered the facts.) I do not believe, as a matter of fact, that they saw or could have seen or that they heard or could have heard anything that can be material to the inquiry at Leeds. We have before us the affidavits of the applicants, in which they both swear that they are wholly unable to give any evidence which can possibly be relevant to any issue which may arise. I believe that to be true. Therefore it would be an idle waste of time and money to require them to go down to Leeds to give evidence. The applicants further say that no application has been made to them by the defendants for any proof of the evidence to be given by them. This statement satisfies me that this process has not been issued for the simple and proper purpose of obtaining evidence, but for a different and ulterior purpose, a purpose to which the process of the Court ought not to be applied. It is sufficient to say, first, that I am satisfied that neither of the applicants can give relevant evidence; and, secondly, that the process of the Court has not been issued for the purpose of obtaining relevant evidence, but for other reasons.

WALTON, J. I agree. There is no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain this application. There is no distinction on this point between civil and criminal proceedings. . . . This case must not be taken as a precedent establishing any rule that a person can, by swearing that he can give no relevant evidence, get a subpoena set aside. Ministers of the Crown have no special privilege. But these subpoenas are not bonâ fide required for the purpose of obtaining any evidence that can be relevant. Our decision in no way interferes with the power of the Judge at the trial, if anything arises which leads him to think that the attendance of these gentlemen is necessary—although it is difficult to see how anything can arise to induce him to think so—to make an order for them to attend.

JACOBS v. LAYBORN.

EXCHEQUER. 1843.

11 M. & W. 685.

An objection to the competency of a witness may be taken whenever his incompetency appears. It may be taken even after he has been allowed to go into the witness box, has been sworn, and has answered certain questions.

A witness was called on behalf of the defendant and allowed to answer several questions. The plaintiff's counsel then interposed and asked him whether he was not responsible for the costs of the defendant's attorney, and, on his answering in the affirmative, objected to him as incompetent (as the law then stood, he being an interested party). The defendant's counsel contended that the objection came too late, as the witness ought to have been examined on the "voir dire." The objection was overruled and the evidence received, the defendant obtaining a verdict. On an application for a new trial, the plaintiff's counsel contended that the practice was to allow such objection whenever the incompetency was discovered. This was held to be so, and a new trial was ordered.

LORD ABINGER, C.B. . . . The plaintiff's counsel have furnished us with a proof of the antiquity, at least, of the practice contended for by them. They have shown that it has been recognised by the high authority of Lord King (see note, post) . . . and confirmed afterwards (on the Trial of Lord Lovat, 18 St. Tr. 596) by the opinion of Lord Hardwicke, one of the greatest Judges who ever presided in this country, not only on the law, but on the reason of the law. To this I can add the testimony of my own experience, which has been of more than forty years, that, whenever a witness was discovered to be incompetent, the Judge always struck the evidence which he had given out of his notes. I have known both Lord Ellenborough and Mr. Baron Bayley erase whole pages in this way; and it was not the practice to swear the witness on the voir dire, unless specially required by the party against whom he appeared. . . . In Courts of Equity, also, it is every day's practice to object to a witness as incompetent, whenever his incompetency appears. . . . The reason of the practice rests on this ground,—the law will not allow a verdict to stand which has been obtained on the evidence of a person whom the rules of law have declared incompetent to give evidence. Historians and others may receive all kinds of evidence of facts, hearsay as well as any other; but with juries it is otherwise, for the law (whether wisely or not it is unnecessary to discuss) excludes all testimony that it considers dangerous. . . . There is no statute which says that the incompetency of a witness must be determined by an examination on the voir dire; when a man is examined on the voir dire, the examination is only to satisfy the conscience of the Judge, the jury having nothing to do with it. Now a witness may, on his examination on the voir dire, appear perfectly competent; and the circumstance showing him not to be so may appear afterwards. Suppose, for instance, a man examined on the voir dire were, in answer to questions put to him, to swear distinctly that he had never been convicted of felony or perjury, he is then prima facie competent, and is sworn in chief; but while his examination is being proceeded with, the attorney for the party against whom he appears goes away, and fetches the record of his conviction—is not the opposite counsel to be permitted to question him anew as to that conviction? So, in any other case, I do not see why counsel should be restrained from inquiring at any moment into the witness's competency; and, if they see that he is swearing falsely, excluding his testimony if they can. A counsel who knows of an objection to the competency of a witness may very fairly say, "I will lie by, and see whether he will speak the truth; if he does not, I will exclude his evidence." I see no hardship or injustice at all in that course. In short, there is ample authority to show that the ancient, if not universal, practice has been to allow objections of this kind to be taken as was done in this case. . . . I think, also, that there is much weight in the observation of my Brother Rolfe, that the question of competency is not for the jury; so that, in every case where any question is raised about it, there ought properly to be an inquiry made of the witness, who should be sworn "to make true answer to all such questions as the Court should demand of him"; in other words, that an examination on the voir dire may be instituted at any period of the examination. For the sake of convenience, it is the usual practice to swear him, in the first instance, to give his evidence in the cause, and the peculiar form of the oath administered on the voir dire arises from the circumstance, that the points to which the witness is about to be examined are not evidence in the cause. It may be very proper to interpolate that oath at any period of the examination of the witness that justice may require, and his consideration will reconcile all the difficulties which have been raised.

ROLFE, B., concurred.

Note.—The case referred to above as that in which Lord Chancellor King is said to have recognised the rule in question was Needham v. Smith, 2 Vern. 463, decided in 1704, before Lord Keeper Sir Nathan Wright, ten years before Lord King became a Judge.

SHOP BOOK DEPTS ACT, 1893

7 JAN 1 1893

Wholesale and retail trade and manufacturing and other business, the books and documents of their customers upon their shopbooks and other books and documents of the same nature shall be preserved for a period of six years from the date of the delivery of the goods or the completion of the contract or the termination of the business, and shall be produced to the person to whom they are due upon demand made in writing by that person.

PART II.
STATUTES ON EVIDENCE.

ACT OF SUPREMACY, 1558.

1 ELIZ. C. 1.

21. No person or persons shall be hereafter indicted or arraigned for any offences made, ordained, revived, or adjudged by this Act, unless there be two sufficient witnesses or more to testify and declare the said offences whereof he shall be indicted or arraigned; and the said witnesses or so many of them as shall be living and within this realm at the time of the arraignment of such person so indicted, shall be brought forth in person, face to face before the party so arraigned, and there shall testify and declare what they can say against the party so arraigned, if he require the same.

Note.—This is one of the four cases in which two witnesses are required for corroboration. See hereon, ante, p. 147.

SHOP BOOK DEBTS ACT, 1609.

7 JAC. 1, C. 12.

Whereas divers men of trades and handicraftsmen keeping shop-books, do demand debts of their customers upon their shopbooks long time after the same hath been due, and when as they have supposed the particulars and certainty of the wares delivered to be forgotten, then either they themselves or their servants have inserted into their said shopbooks divers other wares supposed to be delivered to the same parties or to their use, which in truth never were delivered and this of purpose to increase by such undue means the said debt: And whereas divers of the said tradesmen and handicraftsmen having received all the just debt due upon their said shopbooks, do oftentimes leave the same books uncrossed or any way discharged, so as the debtors, their executors or administrators are often by suit of law enforced to pay the same debts again to the party that trusted the said wares or to his executors or administrators, unless he or they can produce sufficient proof by writing or witnesses of the said payment that may countervail the credit of the said shopbooks, which few or none can do in any long time after the said payment: Be it therefore enacted by the authorities of this present Parliament, that no tradesman or handicraftsman keeping a shopbook as is aforesaid, his or their executors or administrators, shall after the Feast of St. Michael the Archangel next coming, be allowed, admitted, or received to give his shopbook in evidence in any action for any money due for wares hereafter to be delivered or for work hereafter to be done, above one year, before the same action brought, except he or they, their executors or administrators shall have obtained or gotten a bill of debt or obligation of the debtor for the said debt, or shall have brought or pursued against the said debtor, his executors or administrators some action for the said debt, wares or work done, within one year next after the same wares delivered, money due for wares delivered, or work done.

Provided always, that this Act or any thing therein contained shall not extend to any intercourse of traffic, merchandizing, buying, selling, or other trading or dealing for wares delivered or to be delivered, money due or work done or to be done between merchant and merchant, merchant and tradesman, or between tradesman and tradesman, for anything directly falling within the circuit or compass of their mutual trades and merchandizes; but that for such things only they and every of them shall be in the case as if this Act had never been made; anything herein contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

Note.—Although this Act appears to have been for a long time ignored in practice, it seems proper to include it here owing to its express recognition by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 125), which made the provision perpetual. “No doubt this statute, in modern times, has been treated in courts of justice as a dead letter. . . . What will be the practical result when this Parliamentary freak is brought under the notice of the Judges is a question that cannot be readily answered. . . . It is a curious specimen of quaint legislation, and it will at least furnish useful hints when stale demands are sought to be enforced in the county courts" (Taylor, 8th ed., 620). It appears clear, however, that, at the time of the passing of the Statute such books were treated as admissible in evidence, a practice characterised by Mr. Best as "a violation of the rule, alike of law and common sense, that a man shall not be allowed to manufacture evidence for himself" (s. 503). For the history and explanation of this topic, see Phipson, 6th ed., 229—30.

For the cases in which shop books are otherwise available in evidence, see post, p. 522.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS, 1677.

29 CAR. 2, C. 3.

4. No action shall be brought whereby to charge any executor or administrator upon any special promise to answer damages out of his own estate or whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriages of another person or to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage or upon any contract or sale of lands tenements or hereditaments or any interest in or concerning them or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith or some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorised.

7. All declarations or creations of trusts or confidences of any lands tenements or hereditaments shall be manifested and proved by some writing signed by the party who is by law enabled to declare such trust or by his last will in writing or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect.

8. (Exception of trusts by implication of law.)

9. All grants and assignments of any trust or confidence shall likewise be in writing signed by the party granting or assigning the same or by such last will or devise or else shall likewise be utterly void and of none effect.

Note.—The Statute of Frauds contains several other sections requiring writing for certain transactions; but those given above appear to be the only sections actually dealing with "evidence." Other sections require the transaction itself to be in writing, or a written transaction; the sections above are understood to require merely written evidence of the transaction, which may itself be verbal. This appears, indeed, from the actual wording of ss. 4 and 7. But s. 9 is worded differently, and it may be that it requires the transaction itself to be in writing, unless the word "likewise" gives it the same effect as s. 7. See Maitland's Equity, 58. The position under ss. 4 and 7 respectively is explained in Leroux v. Brown, 22 L. J. C. P. 1, and Forster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 696. For details concerning the particular matters referred to in the Statute, reference must be made to books on Common Law, Contracts, and Trusts.

[S. 16 (commonly cited as s. 17) of the Statute of Frauds (supra), was repealed by the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, but re-enacted with slight alterations by s. 4 of the latter Act (see post, p. 463).]

TREASON ACT, 1695.

7 & 8 WILL. 3, c. 3.

2. No person or persons whatsoever shall be indicted, tried or attainted of high treason, whereby any corruption of blood may or shall be made to any such offender or offenders, or to any the heir or heirs of any such offender or offenders or of misprision of such treason but by and upon the oaths and testimony of two lawful witnesses, either both of them to the same overt act or one of them to one and the other of them to another overt act of the same treason, unless the party indicted and arraigned or tried shall willingly, without violence in open court confess the same.

Note.—Treason is one of the four cases in which two witnesses are required for corroboration. See hereon, ante, p. 147.

BLASPHEMY ACT, 1697.

9 WILL. 3, c. 35.

If any person or persons having been educated in or at any time having made profession of the Christian religion within this realm shall by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking deny any one of the persons in the Holy Trinity to be God or shall assert or maintain there are more gods than one, or shall deny the Christian religion to be true, or the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be of divine authority, and shall upon indictment or information in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, or at the assizes be thereof lawfully convicted by the oath of two or more credible witnesses such person or persons for the first offence shall be adjudged incapable and disabled in law to all intents and purposes whatsoever to have or enjoy any office or offices, employment or employments, ecclesiastical, civil, or military or any part in them or any profit or advantage appertaining to them or any of them. . . . (Then follows a similar provision as to second convictions "as aforesaid.")

Note.—This is one of the four cases in which two witnesses are required for corroboration. See hereon, ante, p. 147.

TREASON ACT, 1795.

36 GEO. 3, c. 7.

1. . . . If any person or persons whatsoever after the day of the passing of this Act, during the natural life of our most gracious sovereign lord the King (whom Almighty God preserve and bless with a long and prosperous reign), and until the end of the next session of Parliament after a demise of the Crown, shall, within the realm or without, compass, imagine, invent, devise or intend death or destruction, or any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, imprisonment or restraint, of the person of the same our sovereign lord the King, his heirs and successors, . . . and such compassings, imaginations, inventions, devices or intentions, or any of them, shall express, utter or declare, by publishing any printing or writing, or by any overt act or deed, being legally convicted thereof upon the oaths of two lawful and credible witnesses upon trial, or otherwise convicted and attainted by due course of law, then every such person and persons so as aforesaid offending shall be deemed, declared and adjudged to be a traitor and traitors, and shall suffer pains of death, and also lose and forfeit as in cases of high treason.

Note.—Treason is one of the four cases in which two witnesses are required for corroboration. See hereon, ante, p. 147; and compare the Treason Act, 1695, ante, p. 412.

WITNESSES ACT, 1806.

46 GEO. 3, c. 37.

Whereas doubts have arisen whether a witness can by law refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, the answering of which has no tendency to accuse himself, or to expose him to any penalty or forfeiture, but the answering of which may establish, or tend to establish, that he owes a debt, or is otherwise subject to a civil suit at the instance of his Majesty, or of some other person or persons; be it therefore declared . . . that a witness cannot by law refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, the answering of which has no tendency to accuse himself, or to expose him to penalty or forfeiture of any nature whatsoever, by reason only or on the sole ground that the answering of such question may establish, or tend to establish that he owes a debt, or is otherwise subject to a civil suit, either at the instance of his Majesty, or of any other person or persons.

Note.—As to the privilege of refusing to answer criminating questions, see ante, p. 312.

JURIES ACT, 1825.

6 GEO. 4, c. 50.

23. Where in any case, either civil or criminal, or on any penal statute, depending in any of the said courts of record at Westminster or in the counties palatine, or great sessions in Wales, it shall appear to any of the respective courts, or to any judge thereof in vacation, that it will be proper and necessary that some of the jurors who are to try the issues in such case should have the view of the place in question, in order to their better understanding the evidence that may be given upon the trial of such issues, in every such case such court, or any judge thereof in vacation, may order a rule to be drawn up, containing the usual terms. . . .

24. Where a view shall be allowed in any case, those men who shall have had the view, or such of them as shall appear upon the jury to try the issue, shall be first sworn, and so many only shall be added to the viewers who shall appear as shall after all defaulters and challenges allowed make up a full jury of twelve.

Note.—As to inspection of property, see ante, p. 390, and post, p. 517.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS AMENDMENT ACT, 1828.

9 GEO. 4, c. 14.

Lord Tenterden's Act.

1. . . . In Actions of Debt or upon the Case grounded upon any Simple Contract no Acknowledgment or Promise by Words only shall be deemed sufficient Evidence of a new or continuing Contract, whereby to take any Case out of the Operation of (the Limitation Act, 1623), or to deprive any Party of the Benefit thereof, unless such Acknowledgment or Promise shall be made or contained by or in some Writing to be signed by the Party chargeable thereby. . . .

3. No Indorsement or Memorandum of any Payment written or made . . . upon any Promissory Note, Bill of Exchange, or other Writing, by or on Behalf of the Party to whom such Payment shall be made, shall be deemed sufficient Proof of such Payment, so as to take the Case out of the Operation of (the Limitation Act, 1623).

6. No action shall be brought whereby to charge any Person upon or by reason of any Representation or Assurance made or given concerning or relating to the Character, Conduct, Credit, Ability, Trade, or Dealings of any other Person, to the Intent or Purpose that such other Person may obtain Credit, Money, or Goods upon, unless such Representation or Assurance be made in Writing, signed by the Party to be charged therewith.

Note.—The above statute is one of the few requiring written evidence. See hereon, ante, p. 148.

PREVIOUS CONVICTION ACT, 1836.

6 & 7 WILL. 4, c. 111.

Whereas by an Act passed in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for further improving the administration of justice in criminal cases," provision is made for the more exemplary punishment of offenders who shall commit any felony not punishable with death after a previous conviction for felony: And whereas since the passing of the said Act the practice has been on the trial of any person for any such subsequent felony to charge the jury to inquire at the same time concerning such previous conviction: And whereas doubts may be reasonably entertained whether such practice is consistent with a fair and impartial inquiry as regards the matter of such subsequent felony, and it is expedient that such practice should from henceforth be discontinued: Be it therefore enacted . . . it shall not be lawful on the trial of any person for any such subsequent felony to charge the jury to inquire concerning such previous conviction until after they shall have inquired concerning such subsequent felony, and shall have found such person guilty of the same; and whenever in any indictment such previous conviction shall be stated, the reading of such statement to the jury as part of the indictment shall be deferred until after such finding as aforesaid: Provided nevertheless, that if upon the trial of any person for any such subsequent felony as aforesaid such person shall give evidence of his or her good character, it shall be lawful for the prosecutor, in answer thereto, to give evidence of the indictment and conviction of such person for the previous felony before such verdict of guilty shall have been returned, and the jury shall inquire concerning such previous conviction for felony at the same time that they inquire concerning the subsequent felony.

Note.—The law as to evidence of previous convictions is summarised, ante, p. 100.

OATHS ACT, 1838.

1 & 2 VICT. c. 105.

In all cases in which an oath may lawfully be and shall have been administered to any person, either as a juryman or a witness, or a deponent in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in any court of law or equity in the United Kingdom, or on appointment to any office or employment, or on any occasion whatever, such person is bound by the oath administered, provided the same shall have been administered in such form and with such ceremonies as such person may declare to be binding; and every such person in case of wilful false swearing may be convicted of the crime of perjury in the same manner as if the oath had been administered in the form and with the ceremonies most commonly adopted.

Note.—This Act should be read in connection with the Oaths Act, 1838, post, p. 459, and the Oaths Act, 1909, post, p. 494. See hereon, ante, p. 271.

PARLIAMENTARY REGISTRATION ACT, 1843.

6 & 7 VICT. c. 18.

88. (Dealing with Personation at Elections.) If on the hearing of the said charge the said two justices shall be satisfied, upon the evidence on oath of not less than two credible witnesses, that the said person so brought before them has knowingly personated and falsely assumed to vote in the name of some other person within the meaning of this Act, and is not in fact the person in whose name he voted, then it shall be lawful for the said two justices to commit the said offender to the gaol of the county, city, or borough within which the offence was committed, to take his trial according to law, and to bind over the witnesses in their respective recognizances to appear and give evidence on such trial as in the case of other misdemeanours.

Note.—This is one of the four cases in which two witnesses are required for corroboration. See hereon, ante, p. 147.

EVIDENCE BY COMMISSION ACT, 1843.

6 & 7 VICT. c. 82.

5. Whereas there are at present no means of compelling the attendance of persons to be examined under any commission for the examination of witnesses issued by the courts of law or equity in England or Ireland, or by the courts of law in Scotland, to be executed in a part of the realm subject to different laws from that in which such commissions are issued, and great inconvenience may arise by reason thereof: Be it therefore enacted, that if any person, after being served with a written notice to attend any commissioner or commissioners appointed to execute any such commission for the examination of witnesses as aforesaid (such notice being signed by the commissioner or commissioners, and specifying the time and place of attendance), shall refuse or fail to appear and be examined under such commission, such refusal or failure to appear shall be certified by such commissioner or commissioners, and it shall thereupon be competent, to or on behalf of any party suing out such commission, to apply to any of the superior courts of law in that part of the kingdom within which such commission is to be executed, or any one of the judges of such courts, for a rule or order to compel the person or persons so refusing or failing as aforesaid to appear before such commissioner or commissioners, and to be examined under such commission, and it shall be lawful for the court or judge to whom such application shall be made by rule or order to command the attendance and examination of any person to be named or the production of any writings or documents to be mentioned in such rule or order.

7. Provided always, . . . that no person shall be compelled to produce under such rule or order any writing or other document that he or she would not be compellable to produce at a trial, nor to attend on more than two consecutive days, to be named in such rule or order.

Note.—As to attendance of witnesses generally, see ante, p. 396.

EVIDENCE ACT, 1843.

6 & 7 VICT. c. 85.

Lord Denman's Act.

No person offered as a witness shall hereafter be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime or interest from giving evidence, either in person or by deposition, according to the practice of the court, on the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question or on any inquiry arising in any suit, action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in any court, or before any judge, jury, sheriff, coroner, magistrate, officer, or person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence; but that every person so offered may and shall be admitted to give evidence on oath, or solemn affirmation in those cases wherein affirmation is by law receivable, notwithstanding that such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question, or injury; or of the suit, action, or proceeding in which he is offered as a witness, and notwithstanding that such person offered as a witness may have been previously convicted of any crime or offence.

Note.—This Act abolished incompetency from crime or interest, but it further provided that it should not render the parties themselves, or their husbands or wives competent witnesses. The parties and their husbands and wives were made competent by the Evidence Acts, 1851, 1853 and 1869. See ante, p. 257, and post, pp. 424, 427, and 445.

BASTARDY ACT, 1845.

8 & 9 VICT. c. 10.

6. (Dealing with Appeals to Quarter Sessions against Bastardy Orders.) On the trial of any such appeal before any court of quarter sessions the justices therein assembled, or the recorder (as the case may be), shall hear the evidence of the said mother, and such other evidence as she may produce, and any evidence tendered on behalf of the appellant, and proceed to hear and determine the said appeal in other respects according to law, but shall not confirm the order so appealed against unless the evidence of the said mother shall have been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices in quarter sessions assembled, or the said recorder.

Note.—This Act deals with appeals only. The Bastardy Act, 1872, post, p. 448, requires corroboration also on original applications. As to corroboration generally, see ante, p. 146.

EVIDENCE ACT, 1845.

8 & 9 VICT. c. 113.

Lord Brougham's Act (No. 1).

1. . . . Whenever by any Act now in force or hereafter to be in force any certificate, official or public document, or document or proceeding of any corporation or joint stock or other company, or any certified copy of any document, bye-law, entry in any register or other book, or of any other proceeding, shall be receivable in evidence of any particular in any court of justice, or before any legal tribunal, or either House of Parliament, or any committee of either House, or in any judicial proceeding, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence, provided they respectively purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, as required, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the respective Acts made or to be hereafter made, without any proof of the seal or stamp, where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, and without any further proof thereof, in every case in which the original record could have been received in evidence.

2. All courts, judges, justices, masters in chancery, master of courts, commissioners judicially acting, and other judicial officers, shall henceforth take judicial notice of the signature of any of the equity or common law judges of the superior courts at Westminster, provided such signature be attached or appended to any decree, order, certificate, or other judicial or official document.

3. All copies of private and local and personal Acts of Parliament not public Acts, if purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers, and all copies of the journals of either House of Parliament, and of royal proclamations, purporting to be printed by the printers to the crown or by the printers to either House of Parliament, or by any or either of them, shall be admitted as evidence thereof by all courts, judges, justices, and others, without any proof being given that such copies were so printed.

Note.—Ss. 1, 3. As to proof of public documents, see ante, p. 341.
S. 2. As to judicial notice, see ante, p. 13.

INDICTABLE OFFENCES ACT, 1848.

11 & 12 VICT. c. 42.

Jervis's Act.

17. Where any person shall appear or be brought before any justice or justices of the peace, charged with any indictable offence, whether committed in England or Wales, or upon the high seas, or on land beyond the sea, or whether such person appear voluntarily upon summons or have been apprehended, with or without warrant, or be in custody for the same or any other offence, such justice or justices, before he or they shall commit such accused person to prison for trial, or before he or they shall admit him to bail, shall, in the presence of such accused person, who shall be at liberty to put questions to any witness produced against him, take the statement on oath or affirmation of those who shall know the facts and circumstances of the case, and shall put the same into writing, and such depositions shall be read over to and signed respectively by the witnesses who shall have been so examined, and shall be signed also by the justice or justices taking the same; and the justice or justices before whom any such witness shall appear to be examined as aforesaid shall, before such witness is examined, administer to such witness the usual oath or affirmation, which such justice or justices shall have full power and authority to do; and if upon the trial of the person so accused as first aforesaid it shall be proved, by the oath or affirmation of any credible witness, that any person whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, and if also it be proved that such deposition was taken in the presence of the person so accused, and that he or his counsel or attorney had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness, then, if such deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such depositions as evidence in such prosecution, without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that such deposition was not in fact signed by the justice purporting to sign the same.

18. After the examinations of all the witnesses on the part of the prosecution as aforesaid shall have been completed, the justices of the peace or one of the justices by or before whom such examination shall have been so completed as aforesaid shall, without requiring the attendance of the witnesses, read or cause to be read to the accused the depositions taken against him, and shall say to him these words, or words to the like effect: "Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say any thing in answer to the charge? you are not obliged to say any thing unless you desire to do so, but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you upon your trial"; and whatever the prisoner shall then say in answer thereto shall be taken down in writing and read over to him, and shall be signed by the said justice or justices, and kept with the depositions of the witnesses, and shall be transmitted with them as hereinafter mentioned; and afterwards upon the trial of the said accused person the same may, if necessary, be given in evidence against him, without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that the justice or justices purporting to sign the same did not in fact sign the same: Provided always, that the said justice or justices, before such accused person shall make any statement, shall state to him, and give him clearly to understand, that he has nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat which may have been holden out to him to induce him to make any admission or confession of his guilt, but that whatever he shall then say may be given in evidence against him upon his trial, notwithstanding such promise or threat: Provided nevertheless, that nothing herein enacted or contained shall prevent the prosecutor in any case from giving in evidence any admission or confession or other statement of the person accused or charged, made at any time, which by law would be admissible as evidence against such person.

20. It shall be lawful for the justice or justices before whom any such witness shall be examined as aforesaid to bind by recognizance the prosecutor and every such witness to appear at the next court . . . at which the accused is to be tried, then and there to prosecute, or to prosecute and give evidence, or to give evidence, as the case may be, against the party accused, . . . and the several recognizances so taken, together with the written information (if any), the depositions, the statement of the accused, and the recognizance of bail (if any) in every such case, shall be delivered by the said justice or justices, or he or they shall cause the same to be delivered, to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be had, before or at the opening of the said court on the first day of the sitting thereof, or at such other time as the judge, recorder, or justice who is to preside in such court at the said trial, shall order and appoint: Provided always, that if any such witness shall refuse to enter into or acknowledge such recognizance as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such justice or justices of the peace, by his or their warrant, to commit him to the common gaol or house of correction for the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place, in which the accused party is to be tried, there to be imprisoned and safely kept until after the trial of such accused party.

Note.—S. 17. As to the events in which depositions can be read at the trial, see ante, p. 401.

S. 18. As to admissions and confessions in criminal cases, see ante, pp. 162, 167 and 188.

The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867, makes provision for taking the depositions of witnesses on behalf of the person charged with an indictable offence (s. 3), and also for taking the depositions of any persons dangerously ill, by way of "perpetuation of testimony," whether any person is already accused or not (s. 6). See post, p. 441.

SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACT, 1848.

11 & 12 VICT. C. 43.

9. In all cases of informations for any offences or acts punishable upon summary conviction any variance between such information and the evidence adduced in support thereof as to the time at which such offence or act shall be alleged to have been committed shall not be deemed material, if it be proved that such information was in fact laid within time limited by law for laying the same; and any variance between such information and the evidence adduced in support thereof as to the parish or township in which the offence or act shall be alleged to have been committed shall not be deemed material, provided that the offence or act be proved to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the justice or justices by whom such information shall be heard and determined; . . .

14. (Dealing with Proceedings before Courts of Summary Jurisdiction.) . . . If the information or complaint in any such case shall negative any exemption, exception, proviso, or condition in the statute on which the same shall be framed it shall not be necessary for the prosecutor or complainant in that behalf to prove such negative, but the defendant may prove the affirmative thereof in his defence, if he would have advantage of the same.

Note.—S. 14. This provision should be read in connection with s. 39 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, post, p. 452. See also note, ante, p. 139.

EVIDENCE ACT, 1851.

14 & 15 VICT. C. 99.

Lord Brougham's Act (No. 2).

2. On the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any suit, action, or other proceeding in any court of justice, or before any person having by law, or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, the parties thereto, and the persons in whose behalf any such suit, action or other proceeding may be brought or defended, shall, except as herein-after excepted, be competent and compellable to give evidence, either vivâ voce or by deposition, according to the practice of the court, on behalf of either or any of the parties to the said suit, action, or other proceeding.

3. But nothing herein contained shall render any person who in any criminal proceeding is charged with the commission of any indictable offence, or any offence punishable on summary conviction, competent or compellable to give evidence for or against himself or herself, or shall render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself or herself, or shall in any criminal proceeding render any Husband competent or compellable to give evidence for or against his wife, or any wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against her husband.

4. Nothing herein contained shall apply to any action, suit, proceeding, or bill in any court of common law, or in any ecclesiastical court, or in either House of Parliament, instituted in consequence of adultery, or to any action for breach of promise of marriage.

7. All proclamations, treaties, and other acts of state of any foreign state or of any British colony, and all judgments, decrees, orders, and other judicial proceedings of any court of justice in any foreign state or in any British colony, and any affidavits, pleadings, and other legal documents filed or deposited in any such court, may be proved in any court of justice, or before any person having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, either by examined copies or by copies authenticated as herein-after mentioned; that is to say, if the document sought to be proved be a proclamation, treaty, or other act of state, the authenticated copy to be admissible in evidence must purport to be sealed with the seal of the foreign state or British colony to which the original document belongs; and if the document sought to be proved be a judgment, decree, order, or other judicial proceeding of any foreign or colonial court, or an affidavit, pleading, or other legal document filed or deposited in any such court, the authenticated copy to be admissible in evidence must purport either to be sealed with the seal of the foreign or colonial court to which the original document belongs, or, in the event of such court having no seal to be signed by the judge, or, if there be more than one judge, by any one of the judges of the said court; and such judge shall attach to his signature a statement in writing on the said copy that the court whereof he is a judge has no seal; but if any of the aforesaid authenticated copies shall purport to be sealed or signed as hereinbefore respectively directed, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence in every case in which the original document could have been received in evidence without any proof of the seal where a seal is necessary, or of the signature, or of the truth of the statement attached thereto, where such signature and statement are necessary, or of the judicial character of the person appearing to have made such signature and statement.

13. . . . Whenever in any proceeding whatever it may be necessary to prove the trial and conviction or acquittal of any person charged with any indictable offence, it shall not be necessary to produce the record of the conviction or acquittal of such person, or a copy thereof; but it shall be sufficient that it be certified or purport to be certified under the hand of the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where such conviction or acquittal took place, or by the deputy of such clerk or other officer, that the paper produced is a copy of the record of the indictment, trial, conviction, and judgment or acquittal, as the case may be, omitting the formal parts thereof.

14. Whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom shall be admissible in evidence in any court of justice, or before any person now or hereafter having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, provided it be proved to be an examined copy or extract, or provided it purport to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is intrusted, and which officer is hereby required to furnish such certified copy or extract to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same, upon payment of a reasonable sum for the same, not exceeding fourpence for every folio of ninety words.

16. Every court, judge, justice, officer, commissioner, arbitrator, or other person, now or hereafter having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, is hereby empowered to administer an oath to all such witnesses as are legally called before them respectively.

Note.—S. 3. As to the evidence of persons charged with criminal offences, and their husbands and wives, see now the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, post, p. 468; and generally as to competency and compellability, ante, p. 256. As to criminating questions, see ante, p. 312.

S. 4. This was repealed by the Evidence Act, 1869, a new provision being made thereby. See post, p. 445.

Ss. 7, 13, 14. As to proof of public documents generally, see ante, p. 344.

EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT, 1853.

16 & 17 VICT. c. 83.

Lord Brougham's Act (No. 3).

1. On the Trial of any Issue joined, or of any Matter or Question, or on any Inquiry arising in any Suit, Action, or other Proceeding in any Court of Justice, or before any Person having by Law or by Consent of Parties Authority to hear, receive, and examine Evidence, the Husbands and Wives of the Parties thereto, and of the Persons in whose Behalf any such Suit, Action, or other Proceeding may be brought or instituted, or opposed or defended, shall, except as herein-after excepted, be competent and compellable to give Evidence either vivâ voce or by Deposition according to the Practice of the Court, on behalf of either or any of the Parties to the said Suit, Action, or other Proceeding.

2. Nothing herein shall render any Husband competent or compellable to give Evidence for or against his Wife, or any Wife competent or compellable to give Evidence for or against her Husband, in any Criminal Proceeding or in any Proceeding instituted in consequence of Adultery.

3. No Husband shall be compellable to disclose any Communication made to him by his Wife during the Marriage, and no Wife shall be compellable to disclose any Communication made to her by her Husband during the Marriage.

Note.—S. 1. As to the evidence of husbands and wives generally, see ante, p. 260.

S. 2. As to criminal proceedings, see now the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, post, p. 468. The words in italics were repealed by the Evidence Act, 1869, post, p. 445.

S. 3. As to the disclosure of matrimonial communications compare s. 1 (d) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, post, p. 469.

ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES ACT, 1854.

17 & 18 VICT. c. 34.

1. If in any action or suit now or at any time hereafter depending in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster or Dublin, or the Court of Session or Exchequer in Scotland, it shall appear to the court in which such action is pending, or, if such court is not sitting, to any judge of any of the said courts respectively, that it is proper to compel the personal attendance at any trial of any witness who may not be within the jurisdiction of the court in which such action is pending, it shall be lawful for such court or judge, if in his or their discretion it shall so seem fit to order that a writ called a writ of subpoena ad testificandum or of subpoena duces tecum or warrant of citation shall issue in special form, commanding such witness to attend such trial, wherever he shall be within the United Kingdom; and the service of any such writ or process in any part of the United Kingdom shall be as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if same had been served within the jurisdiction of the court from which it issues.

2. Every such writ shall have at foot thereof a statement or notice that the same is issued by the special order of the court or judge, as the case may be; and no such writ shall issue without such special order.

3. (Witness making default to be punished.)

4. (But not unless sufficient expenses tendered.)

5. Nothing herein contained shall alter or affect the power of any such courts to issue a commission for the examination of witnesses out of their jurisdiction in any case in which, notwithstanding this Act, they shall think fit to issue such commission.

6. Nothing herein contained shall alter or affect the admissibility of any evidence at any trial, where such evidence is now by law receivable on the ground of any witness being beyond the jurisdiction of the court; but the admissibility of all such evidence shall be determined as if this Act had not passed.

Note.—As to attendance of witnesses generally, see ante, p. 396.

FOREIGN TRIBUNALS EVIDENCE ACT, 1856.

19 & 20 VICT. c. 113.

Whereas it is expedient that facilities be afforded for taking evidence in Her Majesty's dominions in relation to civil and commercial matters pending before foreign tribunals: . . .

1. Where, upon an application for this purpose, it is made to appear to any court or judge having authority under this Act that any court or tribunal of competent jurisdiction in a foreign country, before which any civil or commercial matter is pending, is desirous of obtaining the testimony in relation to such matter of any witness or witnesses within the jurisdiction of such first-mentioned court, or of the court to which such judge belongs, or of such judge, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to order the examination upon oath, upon interrogatories or otherwise, before any person or persons named in such order, of such witness or witnesses accordingly; and it shall be lawful for the said court or judge, by the same order, or for such court or judge, or any other judge having authority under this Act, by any subsequent order, to command the attendance of any person to be named in such order, for the purpose of being examined, or the production of any writings or other documents to be mentioned in such order, and to give all such directions as to the time, place and manner of such examination, and all other matters connected therewith, as may appear reasonable and just; and any such order may be enforced in like manner as an order made by such court or judge in a cause depending in such court or before such judge.

2. A certificate under the hand of the ambassador, minister, or other diplomatic agent of any foreign power, received as such by Her Majesty, or in case there be no such diplomatic agent, then of the consul general or consul of any such foreign power at London, received and admitted as such by Her Majesty, that any matter in relation to which an application is made under this Act is a civil or commercial matter pending before a court or tribunal in the country of which he is the diplomatic agent or consul having jurisdiction in the matter so pending, and that such court or tribunal is desirous of obtaining the testimony of the witness or witnesses to whom the application relates, shall be evidence of the matters so certified; but where no such certificate is produced, other evidence to that effect shall be admissible.

3. It shall be lawful for every person authorised . . . to take all such examinations upon the oath of the witnesses, or affirmation in cases where affirmation is allowed by law instead of oath. . . .

5. Provided, that every person examined under any order made under this Act shall have the like right to refuse to answer questions tending to criminate himself, and other questions, which a witness in any cause pending in the court by which or by a judge whereof or before the judge by whom the order for examination was made would be entitled to; and that no person shall be compelled to produce under any such order as aforesaid any writing or other document that he would not be compellable to produce at a trial of such a cause.

6. Her Majesty's Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster and in Dublin respectively, the Court of Session in Scotland, and any Supreme Court in any of Her Majesty's colonies or possessions abroad, and any judge of any such court, and every judge in any such colony or possession who by any Order of Her Majesty in Council may be appointed for this purpose, shall respectively be courts and judges having authority under this Act.

Note.—S. 1. As to attendance of witnesses generally, see ante, p. 396.

S. 5. As to privileged questions and documents generally, see ante, p. 303. A recent case on this section is Eccles v. Louisville Ry. Co., [1912] 1 K. B. 135.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1857.

20 & 21 VICT. C. 85.

13. (Referring to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.) The Lord Chancellor shall direct a seal to be made for the said Court . . . and all decrees and orders, or copies of decrees or orders, of the said Court, sealed with the said seal, shall be received in evidence.

43. The Court may, if it shall think fit, order the attendance of the petitioner, and may examine him or her, or permit him or her to be examined or cross-examined on oath on the hearing of any petition; but no such petitioner shall be bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery.

Note.—S. 13. As to proof of public documents generally, see ante, p. 344.

S. 43. As to attendance of witnesses generally, see ante, p. 396. As to criminating questions, see ante, p. 312.

EVIDENCE BY COMMISSION ACT, 1859.

22 VICT. C. 20.

Whereas it is expedient that facilities be afforded for taking evidence in or in relation to actions, suits, and proceedings pending before tribunals in Her Majesty's dominions in places in such dominions out of the jurisdiction of such tribunals: . . .

1. Where upon an application for this purpose it is made to appear to any court or judge having authority under this Act that any court or tribunal of competent jurisdiction in Her Majesty's dominions has duly authorized, by commission, order, or other process, the obtaining the testimony in or in relation to any action, suit, or proceeding pending in or before such court or tribunal of any witness or witnesses out of the jurisdiction of such court or tribunal, and within the jurisdiction of such first-mentioned court, or of the court to which such judge belongs, or of such judge, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to order the examination before the person or persons appointed, and in manner and form directed by such commission, order, or other process as aforesaid, of such witness or witnesses accordingly; and it shall be lawful for the said court or judge by the same order, or for such court or judge, or any other judge having authority under this Act, by any subsequent order, to command the attendance of any person to be named in such order for the purpose of being examined, or the production of any writings or other documents to be mentioned in such order, and to give all such directions as to the time, place, and manner of such examination, and all other matters connected therewith, as may appear reasonable and just; and any such order may be enforced, and any disobedience thereof punished, in like manner as in case of an order made by such court or judge in a cause depending in such court or before such judge.

2. (Persons giving false evidence guilty of perjury.)

3. (Payment of expenses.)

4. Provided, that every person examined under any such commission, order, or other process as aforesaid, shall have the like right to refuse to answer questions tending to criminate himself, and other questions which a witness in any cause pending in the court by which, or by a judge whereof, or before the judge by whom the order for examination was made, would be entitled to; and that no person shall be compelled to produce under any such order as aforesaid any writing or other document that he would not be compellable to produce at a trial of such a cause.

5. Her Majesty's Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster and in Dublin respectively, the Court of Session in Scotland, and any Supreme Court in any of Her Majesty's colonies or possessions abroad, and any judge of any such court, and every judge in any such colony or possession, who by any order of Her Majesty in Council, may be appointed for this purpose shall respectively be courts and judges having authority under this Act.

6. (Power to frame rules, etc., for giving effect to provisions of this Act.)

Note.—S. 1. As to attendance of witnesses generally, see ante, p. 396.

S. 4. As to privileged questions and documents generally, see ante, p. 303.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES ACT, 1859.

22 & 23 VICT. c. 61.

6. On any petition presented by a wife, praying that her marriage may be dissolved by reason of her husband having been guilty of adultery coupled with cruelty, or of adultery coupled with desertion, the husband and wife respectively shall be competent and compellable to give evidence of or relating to such cruelty or desertion.

Note.—As to competency and compellability of husbands and wives as witnesses generally, see ante, p. 260.

BRITISH LAW ASCERTAINMENT ACT,

1859.

22 & 23 VICT. c. 63.

1. If in any action depending in any court within Her Majesty's dominions, it shall be the opinion of such court, that it is necessary or expedient for the proper disposal of such action to ascertain the law applicable to the facts of the case as administered in any other part of Her Majesty's dominions on any point on which the law of such other part of Her Majesty's dominions is different from that in which the court is situate, it shall be competent to the court in which such action may depend to direct a case to be prepared setting forth the facts, as these may be ascertained by verdict of a jury or other mode competent, or may be agreed upon by the parties, or settled by such person or persons as may have been appointed by the court for that purpose in the event of the parties not agreeing; and upon such case being approved of by such court or a judge thereof, they shall settle the questions of law arising out of the same on which they desire to have the opinion of another court, and shall pronounce an order remitting the same, together with the case, to the court in such other part of Her Majesty's dominions, being one of the superior courts thereof, whose opinion is desired upon the law administered by them as applicable to the facts set forth in such case, and desiring them to pronounce their opinion on the questions submitted to them in the terms of the Act; and it shall be competent to any of the parties to the action to present a petition to the court whose opinion is to be obtained, praying such last-mentioned court to hear parties or their counsel, and to pronounce their opinion thereon in terms of this Act, or to pronounce their opinion without hearing parties or counsel; and the court to which such petition shall be presented shall, if they think fit, appoint an early day for hearing parties or their counsel on such case, and shall thereafter pronounce their opinion upon the questions of law as administered by them which are submitted to them by the court; and in order to their pronouncing such opinion they shall be entitled to take such further procedure thereupon as to them shall seem proper.

2. Upon such opinion being pronounced, a copy thereof, certified by an officer of such court, shall be given to each of the parties to the action by whom the same shall be required, and shall be deemed and held to contain a correct record of such opinion.

3. (Opinion to be applied by the court making the remit, etc.)

4. (Her Majesty in Council or House of Lords on appeal may adopt or reject opinion.)

5. (Interpretation of terms.)

Note.—S. 1. As to proof of Colonial Law generally, see ante, p. 18.

S. 2. As to proof of judicial proceedings, see ante, p. 344.

FOREIGN LAW ASCERTAINMENT ACT,

1861.

24 & 25 VICT. c. 11.

Whereas an Act was passed in the twenty-second and twenty-third years of Her Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act to afford facilities for the more certain ascertainment of the law administered in one part of Her Majesty's dominions when pleaded in the courts of another part thereof": And whereas it is expedient to afford the like facilities for the better ascertainment, in similar circumstances, of the law of any foreign country or state with the Government of which Her Majesty may be pleased to enter into a convention for the purpose of mutually ascertaining the law of such foreign country or state when pleaded in actions depending in any courts within Her Majesty's dominions and the law as administered in any part of Her Majesty's dominions when pleaded in actions depending in the courts of such foreign country or state: . . .

1. If, in any action depending in any of the Superior Courts within Her Majesty's dominions, it shall be the opinion of such court that it is necessary or expedient, for the disposal of such action, to ascertain the law applicable to the facts of the case as administered in any foreign state or country with the Government of which Her Majesty shall have entered into such convention as aforesaid, it shall be competent to the court in which such action may depend to direct a case to be prepared setting forth the facts as these may be ascertained by verdict of jury or other mode competent, or as may be agreed upon by the parties, or settled by such person or persons as may have been appointed by the court for that purpose in the event of the parties not agreeing; and upon such case being approved of by such court or a judge thereof, such court or judge shall settle the question of law arising out of the same on which they desire to have the opinion of another court, and shall pronounce an order remitting the same, together with the case, to such superior court in such foreign state or country as shall be agreed upon in said convention, whose opinion is desired upon the law administered by such foreign court as applicable to the facts set forth in such case, and requesting them to pronounce their opinion on the questions submitted to them; and upon such opinion being pronounced, a copy thereof, certified by an officer of such court, shall be deemed and held to contain a correct record of such opinion.

2. (Copy of opinion to be lodged in court in which action depends. Court to apply opinion to the facts set forth in the case, etc. Remitter of case back to foreign court.)

3. (Courts in Her Majesty's dominions shall pronounce opinion on case remitted by a foreign court.)

4. (Interpretation of terms.)

Note.—S. 1. As to proof of foreign law generally, see post, p. 532. As to proof of judicial proceedings, see post, pp. 530—532.

LARCENY ACT, 1861.

24 & 25 VICT. C. 96.

29. (Dealing with Larceny of Deeds and Wills, etc.) No person shall be liable to be convicted of any of the felonies in this and the last preceding section mentioned, by any evidence whatever, in respect of any act done by him, if he shall at any time previously to his being charged with such offence have first disclosed such act, on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved, or if he shall have first disclosed the same in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency.

85. (Dealing with Frauds by Bankers, Agents, etc.) Nothing in any of the last ten preceding sections of this Act contained shall enable or entitle any person to refuse to make a full and complete discovery by answer to any bill in equity, or to answer any question or interrogatory in any civil proceeding in any court, or upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency; and no person shall be liable to be convicted of any of the misdemeanours in any of the said sections mentioned by any evidence whatever in respect of any act done by him, if he shall at any time previously to his being charged with such offence have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been bonâ fide instituted by any party aggrieved [or if he shall have first disclosed the same in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court upon the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy or insolvency].

116. . . . the proceedings upon any indictment for committing any offence after a previous conviction or convictions shall be as follows; (that is to say,) the offender shall, in the first instance, be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and if he plead not guilty, or if the court order a plea of not guilty to be entered on his behalf, the jury shall be charged, in the first instance, to inquire concerning such subsequent offence only; and if they find him guilty, or if on arraignment he plead guilty, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he had been previously convicted, as alleged in the indictment; and if he answer that he had been so previously convicted, the court may proceed to sentence him accordingly; but if he deny that he had been so previously convicted, or stand mute of malice, or will not answer directly to such question, the jury shall then be charged to inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions, and in such case it shall not be necessary to swear the jury again but the oath already taken by them shall for all purposes be deemed to extend to such last-mentioned inquiry: Provided, that if upon the trial of any person for any such subsequent offence such person shall give evidence of his good character, it shall be lawful for the prosecutor, in answer thereto, to give evidence of the conviction of such person for the previous offence or offences before such verdict of guilty shall be returned, and the jury shall inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions at the same time that they inquire concerning such subsequent offence.

Note.—Ss. 29, 85. These sections afford instances of the cases in which a witness is compelled to answer criminating questions but is protected from subsequent prosecution for the offences disclosed. Other instances are given, ante, p. 314. S. 85 [of which the last four lines are repealed] should be read with the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, post, p. 500 [and the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 43, post, p. 503].

S. 116. The law as to proof of previous convictions is summarized ante, p. 100. The rules of this section are applied to certain other crimes by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, ss. 9, 20, post, pp. 446, 447.

COINAGE OFFENCES ACT, 1861.

24 & 25 VICT. C. 99.

37. Where any person shall have been convicted of any offence against this Act, or any former Act relating to the coin, and shall be indicted for any offence against this Act subsequent to such conviction, . . . a certificate containing the substance and effect only of the indictment and conviction for the previous offence, purporting to be signed by the officer having the custody of the records of the court . . . shall, upon proof of the identity of the offender, be sufficient evidence of the previous conviction; and . . . the proceedings upon any indictment for committing any offence after a previous conviction or convictions shall be as follows; (that is to say,) the offender shall, in the first instance, be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and if he plead not guilty, or if the court order a plea of not guilty to be entered on his behalf, the jury shall be charged, in the first instance, to inquire concerning such subsequent offence only; and if they find him guilty, or if on arraignment he plead guilty, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he had been previously convicted as alleged in the indictment; and if he answer that he had been so previously convicted, the court may proceed to sentence him accordingly; but if he deny that he had been so previously convicted, or stand mute of malice, or will not answer directly to such question, the jury shall then be charged to inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions, and in such case it shall not be necessary to swear the jury again, but the oath already taken by them shall for all purposes be deemed to extend to such last-mentioned inquiry: Provided, that if upon the trial of any person for any such subsequent offence such person shall give evidence of his good character, it shall be lawful for the prosecutor, in answer thereto, to give evidence of the conviction of such person for the previous offence or offences, before such verdict of guilty shall be returned, and the jury shall inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions at the same time that they inquire concerning such subsequent offence.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE ACT, 1865.

28 & 29 VICT. c. 18.

1. The Provisions of Sections from Three to Eight, inclusive, of this Act shall apply to all Courts of Judicature, as well Criminal as all others, and to all Persons having, by law or by Consent of Parties, Authority to hear, receive, and examine Evidence.

2. If any Prisoner or Prisoners, Defendant or Defendants, shall be defended by Counsel, but not otherwise, it shall be the Duty of the presiding Judge, at the Close of the Case for the Prosecution, to ask the Counsel for each Prisoner or Defendant so defended by Counsel whether he or they intend to adduce Evidence, and in the event of none of them thereupon announcing his Intention to adduce Evidence, the Counsel for the Prosecution shall be allowed to address the Jury a Second Time in support of his Case, for the Purpose of summing up the Evidence against such Prisoner or Prisoners, or Defendant or Defendants; and upon every Trial for Felony or Misdemeanour, whether the Prisoners or Defendants, or any of them, shall be defended by Counsel or not, each and every such Prisoner or Defendant, or his or their Counsel respectively, shall be allowed if he or they shall think fit, to open his or their Case or Cases respectively; and after the Conclusion of such Opening or of all such Openings, if more than One, such Prisoner or Prisoners, or Defendant or Defendants, or their Counsel, shall be entitled to examine such Witnesses as he or they may think fit, and when all the Evidence is concluded to sum up the Evidence respectively; and the Right of Reply, and Practice and Course of Proceedings, save as hereby altered, shall be as at present.

3. A Party producing a Witness shall not be allowed to impeach his Credit by general Evidence of bad character, but he may, in case the Witness shall, in the Opinion of the Judge, prove adverse, contradict him by other Evidence, or, by Leave of the Judge, prove that he has made at other Times a Statement inconsistent with his present Testimony; but before such last-mentioned Proof can be given the Circumstances of the supposed Statement, sufficient to designate the particular Occasion, must be mentioned to the Witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such Statement.

4. If a Witness, upon Cross-examination as to a former Statement made by him relative to the Subject Matter of the Indictment or Proceeding, and inconsistent with his present Testimony, does not distinctly admit that he has made such Statement, Proof may be given that he did in fact make it; but before such Proof can be given the Circumstances of the supposed Statement, sufficient to designate the particular Occasion, must be mentioned to the Witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such Statement.

5. A Witness may be cross-examined as to previous Statements made by him in Writing or reduced into Writing relative to the Subject Matter of the Indictment or Proceeding, without such Writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such Witness by the Writing, his Attention must, before such contradictory Proof can be given, be called to those Parts of the writing which are to be used for the Purpose of so contradicting him: Provided always, that it shall be competent for the Judge, at any Time during the Trial, to require the Production of the Writing for his Inspection, and he may thereupon make such Use of it for the Purposes of the Trial as he may think fit.

6. A Witness may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any Felony or Misdemeanour, and upon being so questioned, if he either denies or does not admit the Fact, or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the cross-examining Party to prove such Conviction; and a Certificate containing the Substance and Effect only (omitting the formal Part) of the Indictment and Conviction for such Offence, purporting to be signed by the Clerk of the Court or other Officer having the Custody of the Records of the Court where the Offender was convicted, or by the Deputy of such Clerk or Officer (for which Certificate a Fee of Five Shillings and no more shall be demanded or taken), shall, upon Proof of the Identity of the Person, be sufficient Evidence of the said Conviction, without Proof of the Signature or official Character of the Person appearing to have signed the same.

7. It shall not be necessary to prove by the attesting Witness any instrument to the Validity of which Attestation is not requisite, and such Instrument may be proved as if there had been no attesting Witness thereto.

8. Comparison of a disputed Writing with any Writing proved to the Satisfaction of the Judge to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by Witnesses; and such Writings, and the Evidence of Witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the Court and Jury as Evidence of the Genuineness or otherwise of the Writing in dispute.

Note.—S. 1. It should be particularly noted that, notwithstanding its inconsistent title, the Act applies to civil cases.

S. 2. The right of the prosecution to a second speech, by way of "summing up" the evidence, depends upon the prisoner being defended by counsel. The right of the prosecution to a second speech, by way of "reply," to the case of the prisoner, depends upon the prisoner adducing evidence, by witnesses or documents. See Powell, 10th ed., 520-4.

Ss. 3-5. The law as to evidence to discredit witnesses is dealt with generally, ante, p. 295; as to previous inconsistent statements, by an opponent's witness, ante, p. 296, and by a party's own witness, ante, p. 299.

S. 6. It appears that such conviction may be proved, although it is wholly irrelevant to the issue (Ward v. Sinfield, 49 L. J. C. P. 696).

S. 7. As to attestation of documents, see ante, p. 352.

S. 8. [As to who are permitted to testify as "experts" in hand-writing, see R. v. Silverlock, ante, p. 126.]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1867.

30 & 31 VICT. c. 35.

Russell Gurney's Act.

3. Whereas complaint is frequently made by persons charged with indictable offences, upon their trial, that they are unable by reason of poverty to call witnesses on their behalf, and that injustice is thereby occasioned to them; and it is expedient to remove, as far as practicable, all just ground for such complaint: Therefore, in all cases where any person shall appear or be brought before any justice or justices of the peace, charged with any indictable offence, whether committed within this realm or upon the high seas or upon land beyond the sea, and whether such person appear voluntarily upon summons, or has been apprehended with or without warrant, or be in custody for the same or any other offence, such justice or justices, before he or they shall commit such accused person for trial or admit him to bail, shall, immediately after obeying the directions of the eighteenth section of the Act eleventh and twelfth Victoria, chapter forty-two, demand and require of the accused person whether he desires to call any witness: and if the accused person shall in answer to such demand call or desire to call any witness or witnesses, such justice or justices shall, in the presence of such accused person, take the statement on oath or affirmation, both examination and cross-examination, of those who shall be so called as witnesses by such accused person, and who shall know anything relating to the facts and circumstances of the case, or anything tending to prove the innocence of such accused person, and shall put the same into writing; and such depositions of such witnesses shall be read over to and signed respectively by the witnesses who shall have been so examined, and shall be signed also by the justice or justices taking the same, and transmitted in due course of law with the depositions; and such witnesses, not being witnesses merely to the character of the accused, as shall in the opinion of the justice or justices give evidence in any way material to the case or tending to prove the innocence of the accused person, shall be bound by recognizance to appear and give evidence at the said trial; and afterwards, upon the trial of such accused person, all the laws now in force relating to the depositions of witnesses for the prosecution shall extend and be applicable to the depositions of witnesses hereby directed to be taken.

6. Whereas it may happen that a person dangerously ill, and unable to travel, may be able to give material and important information relating to an indictable offence, or to a person accused thereof, . . . and it is desirable in the interests of truth and justice that means should be provided for perpetuating such testimony, and for rendering the same available in the event of the death of the person giving the same: Therefore, whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any justice of the peace that any person dangerously ill, and in the opinion of some registered medical practitioner not likely to recover from such illness, is able and willing to give material information relating to any indictable offence, or relating to any person accused of any such offence, . . . it shall be lawful for the said justice to take in writing the statement on oath or affirmation of such person so being ill, and such justice shall thereupon subscribe the same, and shall add thereto by way of caption a statement of his reason for taking the same, and of the day and place when and where the same was taken, and of the names of the persons (if any) present at the taking thereof, and, if the same shall relate to any indictable offence for which any accused person is already committed or bailed to appear for trial, shall transmit the same with the said addition to the proper officer of the court for trial at which such accused person shall have been so committed or bailed; and in all other cases he shall transmit the same to the clerk of the peace of the county, division, city, or borough in which he shall have taken the same, who is hereby required to preserve the same, and file it of record; and if afterwards, upon the trial of any offender or offence to which the same may relate, the person who made the same statement shall be proved to be dead, or if it shall be proved that there is no reasonable probability that such person will ever be able to travel or to give evidence, it shall be lawful to read such statement in evidence, either for or against the accused, without further proof thereof, if the same purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken, and provided it be proved to the satisfaction of the court that reasonable notice of the intention to take such statement has been served upon the person (whether prosecutor or accused) against whom it is proposed to be read in evidence, and that such person, or his counsel or attorney, had or might have had, if he had chosen to be present, full opportunity of cross-examining the deceased person who made the same.

Note.—These provisions should be read in connection with those of ss. 17, 18, and 20 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (ante, p. 421, referred to in s. 3 above) under which depositions generally are taken.

S. 3. The object of this provision is to require justices to take the evidence of witnesses for the defence, having taken them for the prosecution under the Act of 1848.

S. 6. The object of this provision is to enable depositions to be taken in criminal cases by way of "perpetuation of testimony," of persons dangerously ill, whether any person is actually accused of the offence in question or not. As to perpetuation of testimony in civil cases, see Order 37, r. 35, post, p. 515. As to the events in which depositions can be read at the trial, see ante, p. 401.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE ACT, 1868.

31 & 32 VICT. C. 37.

2. Primâ facie evidence of any proclamation, order, or regulation issued before or after the passing of this Act by Her Majesty, or by the Privy Council, also of any proclamation, order, or regulation issued before or after the passing of this Act by or under the authority of any such department of the Government or officer as is mentioned in the first column of the schedule hereto, may be given in all courts of justice, and in all legal proceedings whatsoever, in all or any of the modes hereinafter mentioned; that is to say:—

- (1) By the production of a copy of the Gazette purporting to contain such proclamation, order or regulation.
- (2) By the production of a copy of such proclamation, order, or regulation, purporting to be printed by the Government printer, or, where the question arises in a court in any British colony or possession, of a copy purporting to be printed under the authority of the legislature of such British colony or possession.
- (3) By the production, in the case of any proclamation, order, or regulation issued by Her Majesty or by the Privy Council, of a copy or extract purporting to be certified to be true by the clerk of the Privy Council, or by any one of the lords or others of the Privy Council, and, in the case of any proclamation, order, or regulation issued by or under the authority of any of the said departments or officers, by the production of a copy or extract purporting to be certified to be true by the person or persons specified in the second column of the said schedule in connection with such department or officer.

Any copy or extract made in pursuance of this Act may be in print or in writing, or partly in print and partly in writing.

No proof shall be required of the handwriting or official position of any person certifying, in pursuance of this Act, to the truth of any copy of an extract from any proclamation, order, or regulation.

3. Subject to any law that may be from time to time made by the legislature of any British colony or possession, this Act shall be in force in every such colony and possession.

6. The provisions of this Act shall be deemed to be in addition to, and not in derogation of, any powers of proving documents given by any existing statute, or existing at common law.

SCHEDULE.

COLUMN 1. Name of Department or Officer.	COLUMN 2. Name of Certifying Officers.
The Commissioners of the Treasury.	Any Commissioner, Secretary, or Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.
The Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral.	Any of the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral or either of the Secretaries to the said Commissioners.
Committee of Privy Council for Trade.	Any member of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, or any Secretary or Assistant Secretary of the said Committee.
The Poor Law Board.	Any Commissioner of the Poor Law Board, or any Secretary or Assistant Secretary of the said Board.

[Note.—S. 2 (2). As to who are now Government printers, etc., see Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, post, p. 453.

Schedule. This has been altered or added to by various later Acts, see, e.g., post, pp. 453, 468, 502, 504-5; and for fuller lists, see Taylor, s. 1527; Phipson, 551-2.]

EVIDENCE FURTHER AMENDMENT ACT,

1869.

32 & 33 VICT. c. 68.

1. The fourth section of chapter ninety-nine of the statutes passed in the fourteenth and fifteenth years of Her present Majesty, and so much of the second section of "The Evidence Amendment Act, 1853," as is contained in the words "or in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery," are hereby repealed.

2. The parties to any action for breach of promise of marriage shall be competent to give evidence in such action: Provided always, that no plaintiff in any action for breach of promise of marriage shall recover a verdict unless his or her testimony shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise.

3. The parties to any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of such parties, shall be competent to give evidence in such proceedings: Provided that no witness in any proceeding, whether a party to the suit or not, shall be liable to be asked or be bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless such witness shall have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery.

Note.—S. 1. As to the effect of this section, see ante, p. 259.

S. 2. As to the effect of this section, see ante, p. 259. As to corroboration generally, see ante, p. 303.

S. 3. As to the effect of this section, see ante, p. 259. As to the evidence of husbands and wives, see ante, p. 260. It seems that the privilege given by this section applies only in proceedings in the Divorce Court on the ground of adultery. It was held not to apply to a petition to vary a settlement under s. 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (Evans v. Evans, [1904] P. 378); nor to bastardy proceedings (Nottingham v. Tomkinson, L. R. 4 C. P. D. 343). See Phipson, 216-17. As to privileged questions generally, see ante, p. 303.

PREVENTION OF CRIMES ACT, 1871.

34 & 35 VICT. c. 112.

9. The rules contained in the one hundred and sixteenth section of (the Larceny Act, 1861: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), . . . in relation to the form of, and the proceedings upon an indictment for any offence punishable under that Act committed after previous conviction, shall, with the necessary variations, apply to any indictment for committing a crime as defined by this Act after previous conviction for a crime, whether the crime charged in such indictment or the crime to which such previous conviction relates be or be not punishable under the said Act. . . .

15. (Dealing with Proceedings under sect. 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824.) . . . In proving the intent to commit a felony it shall not be necessary to show that the person suspected was guilty of any particular act or acts tending to show his purpose or intent, and he may be convicted if from the circumstances of the case, and from his known character as proved to the justice of the peace or court before whom or which he is brought, it appears to such justice or court that his intent was to commit a felony. . . .

17.—(3) (Dealing with Proceedings before Courts of Summary Jurisdiction.) Any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse, or qualification, whether it does or does not accompany the description of the offence in this Act, may be proved by the defendant, but need not be specified or negatived in the information or complaint, and if so specified or negatived no proof in relation to the matters so specified or negatived shall be required on the part of the informant or prosecutor or complainant.

18. A previous conviction may be proved in any legal proceeding whatever against any person by producing a record or extract of such conviction, and by giving proof of the identity of the person against whom the conviction is sought to be proved with the person appearing in the record or extract of conviction to have been convicted.

A record or extract of a conviction shall in the case of an indictable offence consist of a certificate containing the substance and effect only (omitting the formal part of the indictment and conviction), and purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court by which such conviction was made, or purporting to be signed by the deputy of such clerk or officer; and in the case of a summary conviction shall consist of a copy of such conviction purporting to be signed by any justice of the peace having jurisdiction over the offence in respect of which such conviction was made, or to be signed by the proper officer of the court by which such conviction was made, or by the clerk or other officer of any court to which such conviction has been returned.

A record or extract of any conviction made in pursuance of this section shall be admissible in evidence without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same.

[19. Where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such person knew the property to be stolen which forms the subject of the proceedings taken against him.

Where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, and evidence has been given that the stolen property has been found in his possession, then if such person has within five years immediately preceding been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, evidence of such previous conviction may be given at any stage of the proceedings, and may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that the person accused knew the property which was proved to be in his possession to have been stolen; provided that not less than seven days' notice in writing shall have been given to the person accused that proof is intended to be given of such previous conviction; and it shall not be necessary for the purposes of this section to charge in the indictment the previous conviction of the person so accused.]

20. The expression "crime" means, in England and Ireland, any felony, or the offence of uttering false or counterfeit coin, or of possessing counterfeit gold or silver coin, or the offence of obtaining goods or money by false pretences, or the offence of conspiracy to defraud or any misdemeanour under the fifty-eighth section of the Act passed in the session of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter ninety-six. . . .

Note.—S. 9. The section of the Larceny Act referred to is set out ante, pp. 436-7. As to evidence of previous convictions, see ante, p. 100. The expression "crime" for the purposes of this section is defined by s. 20 above.

S. 17 (3). See similar provisions in the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848 (ante, p. 424) and 1879 (post, p. 452), and note, ante, p. 139.

S. 18. This should be read in connection with s. 28 (1) of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, see post, p. 498, and s. 22 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, see post, p. 451. As to proof of convictions generally, see post, p. 531.

S. 19. It is commonly understood that the offence of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, is particularly difficult of proof, so far as regards the guilty knowledge. The above provisions were designed to facilitate the proof of such knowledge.

[This section is repealed by the Larceny Act, 1916, s. 43 (1) (post, p. 503), which substantially re-enacts it, but declares that the date from which the twelve months and five years respectively are to be computed is "the date of the offence charged," and not, as was held under the former Act, the date of the commencement of the proceedings.]

S. 20. The Act referred to in this section is the Larceny Act, 1861, and the misdemeanour in question is being armed with intent to break and enter any house in the night.

BASTARDY LAWS AMENDMENT ACT, 1872.

35 & 36 VICT. C. 65.

4. (Dealing with Summonses in Petty Sessions by Women for Bastardy Orders.) The justices in such petty session shall hear the evidence of such woman and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father, and if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other evidence to the satisfaction of the said justices, they may adjudge the man to be the putative father of such bastard child.

Note.—This Act deals with original applications only. The Bastardy Act, 1845, ante, p. 419, requires corroboration also on appeals. As to corroboration generally, see ante, p. 146.

DIVIDED PARISHES ACT, 1876.

39 & 40 VICT. c. 61.

34. Where any person shall have resided for the term of three years in any parish, in such manner and under such circumstances in each of such years as would in accordance with the several statutes in that behalf render him irremovable, he shall be deemed to be settled therein until he shall acquire a settlement in some other parish by a like residence or otherwise; provided that an order of removal in respect of a settlement acquired under this section shall not be made upon the evidence of the person to be removed, without such corroboration as the justices or court think sufficient.

Note.—As to corroboration generally, see ante, p. 146.

EVIDENCE ACT, 1877.

40 & 41 VICT. c. 14.

1. On the trial of any indictment or other proceeding for the non-repair of any public highway or bridge, or for a nuisance to any public highway, river, or bridge, and of any other indictment or proceeding instituted for the purpose of trying or enforcing a civil right only, every defendant to such indictment or proceeding, and the wife or husband of any such defendant, shall be admissible witnesses and compellable to give evidence.

Note.—As to the evidence of husbands and wives generally, see ante, p. 260; where it will be observed that, when a wife or husband is by statute made a competent witness in criminal cases, she or he is not generally rendered compellable also.

BANKERS' BOOKS EVIDENCE ACT, 1879.

42 VICT. c. 11.

3. Subject to the provisions of this Act, a copy of any entry in a banker's book shall in all legal proceedings be received as prima facie evidence of such entry, and of the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded.

4. A copy of an entry in a banker's book shall not be received in evidence under this Act unless it be first proved that the book was at the time of the making of the entry one of the ordinary books of the bank, and that the entry was made in the usual and ordinary course of business, and that the book is in the custody or control of the bank.

Such proof may be given by a partner or officer of the bank, and may be given orally or by an affidavit sworn before any commissioner or person authorised to take affidavits.

5. A copy of an entry in a banker's book shall not be received in evidence under this Act unless it be further proved that the copy has been examined with the original entry and is correct.

Such proof shall be given by some person who has examined the copy with the original entry, and may be given either orally or by an affidavit sworn before any commissioner or person authorised to take affidavits.

6. A banker or officer of a bank shall not, in any legal proceeding to which the bank is not a party, be compellable to produce any banker's book the contents of which can be proved under this Act, or to appear as a witness to prove the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded, unless by order of a judge made for special cause.

7. On the application of any party to a legal proceeding a court or judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book for any of the purposes of such proceedings. An order under this section may be made either with or without summoning the bank or any other party, and shall be served on the bank three clear days before the same is to be obeyed, unless the court or judge otherwise directs.

9. In this Act the expressions "bank" and "bankers" mean any person, persons, partnership, or company carrying on the business of bankers and having duly made a return to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and also any savings bank certified under the Acts relating to savings banks, and also any post office savings bank. Expressions in this Act relating to "bankers' books" include ledgers, day books, cash books, account books, and all other books used in the ordinary business of the bank.

Note.—Books of the Bank of England seem to have been treated as "public documents" at Common Law; and production thereof was excused, secondary evidence being admissible. But books of other banks were not so treated. See note, ante, p. 344.

S. 5. The words "some person" are not limited to a partner or officer of a bank, they include any person who has examined the copy (R. v. Albutt, 75 J. P. 112).

S. 7. A magistrate before whom criminal proceedings are pending is a "court" within this section (R. v. Kinghorn, [1908] 2 K. B. 949).

SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACT, 1879.

42 & 43 VICT. C. 49.

22.—(1) The clerk of every court of summary jurisdiction shall keep a register of the minutes or memorandums of all the convictions and orders of such court, and of such other proceedings as are directed by a rule under this Act to be registered, and shall keep the same with such particulars and in such form as may be from time to time directed by a rule under this Act.

(2) Such register, and also any extract from such register certified by the clerk of the court keeping the same to be a true extract, shall be primâ facie evidence of the matters entered therein for the purpose of informing a court of summary jurisdiction acting for the same county borough or place as the court whose convictions, orders, and proceedings are entered in the register; but nothing in this section shall dispense with the legal proof of a previous conviction for an offence when required to be proved against a person charged with another offence.

(4) The entries relating to each minute, memorandum, or proceeding shall be either entered or signed by the justice or one of the justices constituting the court by or before whom the conviction or order or proceeding referred to in the minute or memorandum was made or had, except that when a court of summary jurisdiction is not a petty sessional court a return signed as aforesaid, and made and entered in the register in manner provided by a rule under this Act, shall suffice.

31. Where any person is authorised by this Act or by any future Act to appeal from the conviction or order of a court of summary jurisdiction to a court of general or quarter sessions, he may appeal to such court subject to the conditions and regulations following: . . .

(6) Whenever a decision is not confirmed by the court of appeal, the clerk of the peace shall send to the clerk of the court of summary jurisdiction from whose decision the appeal was made, for entry in his register, and also indorse on the conviction or order appealed against, a memorandum of the decision of the court of appeal, and whenever any copy or certificate of such conviction or order is made, a copy of such memorandum shall be added thereto, and shall be sufficient evidence of the said decision in every case where such copy or certificate would be sufficient evidence of such conviction or order.

39.—(2) (Dealing with Proceedings before Courts of Summary Jurisdiction.) Any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse, or qualification, whether it does or does not accompany in the same section the description of the offence in the act, order, byelaw, regulation, or other document creating the offence, may be proved by the defendant, but need not be specified or negated in the information or complaint, and, if so specified or negated, no proof in relation to the matter so specified or negated shall be required on the part of the informant or complainant.

Note.—Ss. 22, 31. As to proof of convictions and judicial proceedings generally, see post, p. 530. The clause in italics at the end of s. 22 (2) has been repealed by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, post, p. 498.

S. 39 (2). This provision should be read in connection with s. 14 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, ante, p. 424. See also note, ante, p. 139.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE ACT, 1882.

45 VICT. C. 9.

2. Where any enactment, whether passed before or after the passing of this Act, provides that a copy of any Act of Parliament, proclamation, order, regulation, rule, warrant, circular, list, gazette, or document shall be conclusive evidence, or be evidence, or have any other effect, when purporting to be printed by the Government printer, or the Queen's printer, or a printer authorised by Her Majesty, or otherwise under Her Majesty's authority, whatever may be the precise expression used, such copy shall also be conclusive evidence, or evidence, or have the said effect (as the case may be) if it purports to be printed under the superintendence or authority of Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

4. The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, as amended by this Act, shall apply to proclamations, orders, and regulations issued by the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, either alone or acting with the advice of the Privy Council in Ireland, as fully as it applies to proclamations, orders, and regulations issued by Her Majesty. . . .

Note.—S. 2. As to proof of public documents generally, see ante, p. 344.

S. 4. The Act of 1868 is given ante, p. 443.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT, 1882.

45 & 46 VICT. C. 61.

PART II.—BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

9.—(2). Where the sum payable is expressed in words and also in figures, and there is a discrepancy between the two, the sum denoted by the words is the amount payable.

27.—(2) Where value has at any time been given for a bill the holder is deemed to be a holder for value as regards the acceptor and all parties to the bill who became parties prior to such time.

(3) Where the holder of a bill has a lien on it, arising either from contract or by implication of law, he is deemed to be a holder for value to the extent of the sum for which he has a lien.

30.—(1) Every party whose signature appears on a bill is primâ facie deemed to have become a party thereto for value.

(2) Every holder of a bill is primâ facie deemed to be a holder in due course; but if in an action on a bill it is admitted or proved that the acceptance, issue, or subsequent negotiation of the bill is affected with fraud, duress, or force and fear, or illegality, the burden of proof is shifted, unless and until the holder proves that, subsequent to the alleged fraud or illegality, value has in good faith been given for the bill.

Liabilities of Parties.

54. The acceptor of a bill, by accepting it— . . .

(2) Is precluded from denying to a holder in due course:—

(a) The existence of the drawer, the genuineness of his signature, and his capacity and authority to draw the bill;

(b) In the case of a bill payable to drawer's order, the then capacity of the drawer to indorse, but not the genuineness or validity of his indorsement;

(c) In the case of a bill payable to the order of a third person, the existence of the payee and his then capacity to indorse, but not the genuineness or validity of his indorsement.

55.—(1) The drawer of a bill, by drawing it— . . .

(b) Is precluded from denying to a holder in due course the existence of the payee and his then capacity to indorse.

(2) The indorser of a bill, by indorsing it— . . .

(b) Is precluded from denying to a holder in due course the genuineness and regularity in all respects of the drawer's signature and all previous indorsements;

(c) Is precluded from denying to his immediate or a subsequent indorsee that the bill was at the time of his indorsement a valid and subsisting bill, and that he had then a good title thereto. . . .

PART IV.—PROMISSORY NOTES.

89.—(1) Subject to the provisions in this part, and, except as by this section provided, the provisions of this Act relating to bills of exchange apply, with the necessary modifications, to promissory notes.

Note.—S. 9 (2). This expresses the rule laid down in Saunderson v. Piper, 5 Bing. N. C. 425. See ante, p. 378.

Ss. 27 (2), (3), 30 (1), (2). Consideration is here, contrary to the general rule, presumed, and the burden of proof consequently shifted. It may be proved that no consideration was given. The term "holder in due course" is defined by s. 29.

Ss. 54, 55. These sections afford instances of statutory estoppel, as to which, see ante, p. 41.

S. 89 (1). There appear to be no provisions of the Act preventing the full application of the above sections to promissory notes.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1882.

45 & 46 VICT. C. 75.

12. Every woman, whether married before or after this Act, shall have in her own name against all persons whomsoever, including her husband, the same civil remedies, and also (subject, as regards her husband, to the proviso hereinafter contained) the same remedies and redress by way of criminal proceedings, for the protection and security of her own separate property, as if such property belonged to her as a feme sole, but, except as aforesaid, no husband or wife shall be entitled to sue the other for a tort . . . and in any proceeding under this section a husband or wife shall be competent to give evidence against each other, any statute or rule of law to the contrary notwithstanding. . . .

16. A wife doing any act with respect to any property of her husband, which, if done by the husband with respect to property of the wife, would make the husband liable to criminal proceedings by the wife under this Act, shall in like manner be liable to criminal proceedings by her husband.

Note.—S. 12. Criminal proceedings under this section afford one of the instances in which husband or wife can give evidence without consent of wife or husband. See ante, p. 261.

S. 16. This section did not enable a husband to give evidence in criminal proceedings against his wife, although s. 12 expressly allowed both husband and wife to give evidence in proceedings by wife against husband. This is now altered by the Act of 1884, which also renders both husband and wife compellable witnesses (see below); and, as to competency and compellability of husbands and wives as witnesses, ante, p. 260.

CORRUPT PRACTICES PREVENTION ACT, 1883.

46 & 47 VICT. C. 51.

59.—(1) A person who is called as a witness respecting an election before any election court shall not be excused from answering any question relating to any offence at or connected with such election, on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate or tend to criminate himself or on the ground of privilege;

Provided that—

(a) A witness who answers truly all questions which he is required by the election court to answer shall be entitled to receive a certificate of indemnity under the hand of a member of the court stating that such witness has so answered: and

(b) An answer by a person to a question put by or before any election court shall not, except in the case of any criminal proceeding for perjury in respect of such evidence, be in any proceeding, civil or criminal, admissible in evidence against him.

Note.—This is an instance of the cases in which a witness is compelled to answer criminating questions, but is protected from subsequent proceedings thereon. See note, ante, p. 314.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1884.

47 & 48 VICT. C. 14.

1. In any such criminal proceeding against a husband or wife as is authorized by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the husband and wife respectively shall be competent and admissible witnesses, and, except when defendant, compellable to give evidence.

Note.—See the provisions of the Act of 1882, ante, p. 455; and, as to competency and compellability of husbands and wives as witnesses, ante, p. 260.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1885.

48 & 49 VICT. c. 69.

2. (Providing Penalties for Procuration of Girls, &c.) No person shall be convicted of any offence under this section upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused.

3. (Providing Penalties for Threatening, Intimidating, and Administering Drugs, &c., to Girls, &c., for Purposes of Prostitution, &c.) No person shall be convicted of an offence under this section upon the evidence of one witness only, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused.

4. (Providing Penalties for Carnal Knowledge of Girls of Tender Age, &c.) Where, upon the hearing of a charge under this section, the girl in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed, or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not, in the opinion of the court or justices, understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of such girl or other child of tender years may be received, though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the court or justices, as the case may be, such girl or other child of tender years is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understands the duty of speaking truth; Provided that no person shall be liable to be convicted of the offence unless the testimony admitted by virtue of this section and given on behalf of the prosecution shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused: Provided also, that any witness whose evidence has been admitted under this section shall be liable to indictment and punishment for perjury in all respects as if he or she had been sworn.

Note.—As to corroboration generally, see ante, p. 146. As to taking evidence of children, etc., not upon oath, see ante, pp. 264, 271, and post, pp. 489, 498.

CORONERS ACT, 1887.

50 & 51 VICT. C. 71.

4.—(1) The coroner and jury shall, at the first sitting of the inquest, view the body, and the coroner shall examine on oath touching the death all persons who tender their evidence respecting the facts and all persons having knowledge of the facts whom he thinks it expedient to examine.

(2) It shall be the duty of the coroner in a case of murder or manslaughter to put into writing the statement on oath of those who know the facts and circumstances of the case, or so much of such statement as is material, and any such deposition shall be signed by the witness and also by the coroner.

5.—(3) The coroner shall deliver the inquisition, deposition, and recognizances, with a certificate under his hand that the same have been taken before him, to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be, before or at the opening of the court.

Note.—It will be observed that this Act contains no provision as to the circumstances under which the depositions are admissible in evidence at the trial. In this respect it differs from the Indictable Offences Act, 1848 (ante, p. 421), the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867 (ante, p. 441), and the Children Act, 1908 (post, p. 487). As to such circumstances, see ante, p. 401.

It was held in R. v. Butcher, 64 J. P. 808, that depositions taken before coroners are on the same footing as those taken before justices. But, in R. v. Cowle, 71 J. P. 152, it was held that they are not governed by either of the Acts of 1848 or 1867, and they were held admissible if (a) they were signed by the deponent and coroner; (b) the accused had opportunity of cross-examination, and (c) the deponent is dead. And in R. v. Marriott, 75 J. P. 288, it was held that a deposition of the prisoner could be proved by any person present at the inquest who could prove the coroner's handwriting and that the deposition was read over to and signed by the prisoner, and that the deposition was read over to and signed by the prisoner, the deponent. See also R. v. Black, 74 J. P. 71.

COUNTY COURTS ACT, 1888.

51 & 52 VICT. C. 43.

28. The registrar of every court shall cause a note of all complaints and summonses, and of all orders, and of all judgments and executions and returns thereto, and of all fines, and of all other proceedings of the court, to be fairly entered from time to time in a book belonging to the court, which shall be kept at the office of the court; and such entries in the said book, or a copy thereof bearing the seal of the court and purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the registrar of the court, shall at all times be admitted in all courts and places whatsoever as evidence of such entries, and of the proceeding referred to by such entry or entries, and of the regularity of such proceeding, without any further proof.

180. For every court there shall be a seal of the court, and all summonses and other process issuing out of the said court shall be sealed or stamped with the seal of the court, and all such summonses and other process purporting to be so sealed shall in England be received in evidence without further proof thereof. . . .

Note.—As to proof of judicial proceedings generally, see post, pp. 530—532.

OATHS ACT, 1888.

51 & 52 VICT. C. 46.

1. Every person upon objecting to be sworn, and stating, as the ground of such objection, either that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation instead of taking an oath in all places and for all purposes where an oath is or shall be required by law, which affirmation shall be of the same force and effect as if he had taken the oath; and if any person making such affirmation shall wilfully, falsely, and corruptly affirm any matter or thing which, if deposed on oath, would have amounted to wilful and corrupt perjury, he shall be liable to prosecution, indictment, sentence, and punishment in all respects as if he had committed wilful and corrupt perjury.

2. Every such affirmation shall be as follows:

“I, A.B., do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm,” and then proceed with the words of the oath prescribed by law, omitting any words of imprecation or calling to witness.

3. Where an oath has been duly administered and taken, the fact that the person to whom the same was administered had, at the time of taking such oath, no religious belief, shall not for any purpose affect the validity of such oath.

5. If any person to whom an oath is administered desires to swear with uplifted hand, in the form and manner in which an oath is usually administered in Scotland, he shall be permitted to do so, and the oath shall be administered to him in such form and manner without further question.

Note.—This Act should be read in connection with the Oaths Act, 1838 (ante, p. 417), and the Oaths Act, 1909 (post, p. 494). As to oaths generally, see ante, p. 271.

ARBITRATION ACT, 1889.

52 & 53 VICT. C. 49.

8. Any party to a submission may sue out a writ of subpœna ad testificandum or a writ of subpœna duces tecum, but no person shall be compelled under any such writ to produce any document which he could not be compelled to produce on the trial of an action.

27. In this Act, unless the contrary intention appears—

“Submission” means a written agreement to submit present or future differences to arbitration, whether an arbitrator is named therein or not.

Note.—S. 8. As to subpœnas, see ante, p. 399. As to privileged documents, see ante, p. 303.

INTERPRETATION ACT, 1889.

52 & 53 VICT. C. 63.

9. Every Act passed after the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty, whether before or after the commencement of this Act, shall be a public Act and shall be judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary is expressly provided by the Act.

20. In this Act and in every other Act whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act, expressions referring to writing shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as including references to printing, lithography, photography, and other modes of representing or reproducing words in a visible form.

Note.—S. 9. As to judicial notice of Acts of Parliament, see ante, pp. 16, 254.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT, 1890.

53 & 54 VICT. c. 37.

4.—(1) If in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in a court in Her Majesty's dominions, or held under the authority of Her Majesty any question arises as to the existence or extent of any jurisdiction of Her Majesty in a foreign country, a Secretary of State shall, on the application of the court, send to the court within a reasonable time his decision on the question, and his decision shall for the purposes of the proceeding be final.

(2) The court shall send to the Secretary of State, in a document under the seal of the court, or signed by a judge of the court, questions framed so as properly to raise the question, and sufficient answers to those questions shall be returned by the Secretary of State to the court, and those answers shall, on production thereof, be conclusive evidence of the matters therein contained.

Note.—A similar method of informing the Court of enquiry at the Foreign Office is appropriate when questions arise as to foreign States. See note, ante, p. 19.

PARTNERSHIP ACT, 1890.

53 & 54 VICT. c. 39.

2.—(3) The receipt by a person of a share of the profits of a business is prima facie evidence that he is a partner in the business but the receipt of such a share, or of a payment contingent on or varying with the profits of a business, does not of itself make him a partner in the business; and in particular . . . (such receipt by creditors, servants, agents, widows or children of deceased partners, lenders, and vendors of goodwill does not make such persons partners).

14.—(1) Every one who by words spoken or written or by conduct represents himself, or who knowingly suffers himself to be represented, as a partner in a particular firm, is liable as a partner to any one who has on the faith of any such representation given credit to the firm whether the representation has or has not been made or communicated to the person so giving credit by or with the knowledge of the apparent partner making the representation or suffering it to be made.

(2) Provided that where after a partner's death the partnership business is continued in the old firm-name, the continued use of that name or of the deceased partner's name as part thereof shall not of itself make his executors or administrators estate or effects liable for any partnership debts contracted after his death.

15. An admission or representation made by any partner concerning the partnership affairs, and in the ordinary course of its business, is evidence against the firm.

Note.—S. 2 (3). As to statutory prima facie evidence, see ante, p. 145.

S. 14 (1). This section affords an instance of statutory estoppel, as to which, see ante, p. 41.

S. 15. As to admissions by partners and agents, see ante, pp. 162, 181.

The above provisions are made applicable to Limited Partnerships by the Limited Partnerships Act, 1907, s. 7, see post, p. 482.

STAMP ACT, 1891.

54 & 55 VICT. c. 39.

Adjudication Stamps.

12.—(5) Every instrument stamped with the particular stamp denoting either that it is not chargeable with any duty, or is duly stamped, shall be admissible in evidence, and available for all purposes notwithstanding any objection relating to duty.

Production of Instruments in Evidence.

14.—(1) Upon the production of an instrument chargeable with any duty as evidence in any court of civil judicature in any part of the United Kingdom, or before any arbitrator or referee, notice shall be taken by the judge, arbitrator or referee of any omission or insufficiency of the stamp thereon, and if the instrument is one which may legally be stamped after the execution thereof, it may, on payment to the officer of the court whose duty it is to read the instrument, or to the arbitrator or referee, of the amount of unpaid duty, and the penalty payable on stamping the same, and of a further sum of one pound, be received in evidence, saving all just exceptions on other grounds.

(4) Save as aforesaid, an instrument executed in any part of the United Kingdom, or relating, wheresoever executed, to any property situate, or to any matter or thing done or to be done, in any part of the United Kingdom, shall not, except in criminal proceedings, be given in evidence, or be available for any purpose whatever, unless it is duly stamped in accordance with the law in force at the time when it was first executed.

Note.—As to production and proof of documents, see ante, pp. 326, 346.

SALE OF GOODS ACT, 1893.

56 & 57 VICT. c. 71.

4.—(1) A contract for the sale of any goods of the value of ten pounds or upwards shall be not enforceable by action unless the buyer shall accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the contract, or in part payment, or unless some note or memorandum in writing of the contract be made and signed by the party to be charged or his agent in that behalf.

[Note.—This sub-section repeals, but re-enacts with slight variations, s. 16 (commonly cited as s. 17) of the Statute of Frauds (ante, p. 412). The variations are that the words "enforceable by action" are substituted for "allowed to be good," and the word "value" is substituted for "price." This is one of the few cases in which written evidence is required. As to written evidence generally, see ante, p. 148.]

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT, 1894.

57 & 58 VICT. c. 60.

PART I.

REGISTRY.

64.—(2) The following documents shall be admissible in evidence in manner provided by this Act, namely:—

- (a) Any register book under this Part of this Act on its production from the custody of the registrar or other person having the lawful custody thereof;
- (b) A certificate of registry under this Act purporting to be signed by the registrar or other proper officer;
- (c) An endorsement on a certificate of registry purporting to be signed by the registrar or other proper officer;
- (d) Every declaration made in pursuance of this Part of this Act in respect of a British ship.

A copy or transcript of the register of British ships kept by the Registrar-General of Shipping and Seamen under the direction of the Board of Trade shall be admissible in evidence in manner provided by this Act, and have the same effect to all intents as the original register of which it is a copy or transcript.

PART II.

MASTERS AND SEAMEN.

123. In any legal or other proceeding a seaman may bring forward evidence to prove the contents of any agreement with the crew or otherwise to support his case, without producing, or giving notice to produce the agreement or any copy thereof.

239. An official log shall be kept in every ship (except ships employed exclusively in trading between ports on the coasts of Scotland) in the appropriate form for that ship approved by the Board of Trade.

(4) An entry required by this Act in an official log book shall be made as soon as possible after the occurrence to which it relates, and if not made on the same day as that occurrence shall be made and dated so as to show the date of the occurrence, and of the entry respecting it; and if made in respect of an occurrence happening before the arrival of the ship at her final port of discharge shall not be made more than twenty-four hours after that arrival.

(5) Every entry in the official log book shall be signed by the master, and by the mate, or some other of the crew, and also (by the surgeon, mate and other persons in special cases).

(6) Every entry made in an official log book in manner provided by this Act shall be admissible in evidence.

240. The master of a ship for which an official log is required shall enter or cause to be entered in the official log book the following matters; (that is to say) (here follows a list of matters, e.g., convictions, offences, conduct, character, illnesses, injuries, marriages, wages, collisions, etc.). (By s. 254 births and deaths must be entered.)

457.—(1) If any person sends or attempts to send, or is party to sending or attempting to send a British ship to sea in such an unseaworthy state that the life of any person is likely to be thereby endangered, he shall in respect of each offence be guilty of a misdemeanour, unless he proves either that he used all reasonable means to insure her being sent to sea in a seaworthy state, or that her going to sea in such an unseaworthy state was, under the circumstances, reasonable and justifiable, and for the purposes of giving that proof he may give evidence in the same manner as any other witness.

(2) If the master of a British ship knowingly takes the same to sea in such an unseaworthy state that the life of any person is likely to be thereby endangered, he shall in respect of each offence be guilty of a misdemeanour, unless he proves that her going to sea in such an unseaworthy state was, under the circumstances, reasonable and justifiable, and for the purpose of giving such proof he may give evidence in the same manner as any other witness.

PART XIII.

LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

691.—(1) Whenever in the course of any legal proceeding instituted in any part of Her Majesty's dominions before any judge or magistrate, or before any person authorised by law or by consent of parties to receive evidence, the testimony of any witness is required in relation to the subject matter of that proceeding, then upon due proof, if the proceeding is instituted in the United Kingdom, that the witness cannot be found in that kingdom, or if in any British possession, that he cannot be found in that possession, any deposition that the witness may have previously made on oath in relation to the same subject matter before any justice or magistrate in Her Majesty's dominions, or any British consular officer elsewhere, shall be admissible in evidence, provided that:—

- (a) if the deposition was made in the United Kingdom, it shall not be admissible in any proceeding instituted in the United Kingdom; and
- (b) if the deposition was made in any British possession, it shall not be admissible in any proceeding instituted in that British possession; and
- (c) if the proceeding is criminal it shall not be admissible, unless it was made in the presence of the person accused.

(2) A deposition so made shall be authenticated by the signature of the judge, magistrate, or consular officer before whom it is made; and the judge, magistrate, or consular officer shall certify if the fact is so, that the accused was present at the taking thereof.

(3) It shall not be necessary in any case to prove the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed any such deposition, and in any criminal proceeding a certificate under this section shall, unless the contrary is proved, be sufficient evidence of the accused having been present in manner thereby certified.

(4) Nothing herein contained shall affect any case in which depositions taken in any proceeding are rendered admissible in evidence by any Act of Parliament, or by any Act or ordinance of the legislature of any colony, so far as regards that colony, or interfere with the power of any colonial legislature to make those depositions admissible in evidence, or to interfere with the practice of any court in which depositions not authenticated as hereinbefore mentioned are admissible.

694. Where any document is required by this Act to be executed in the presence of, or to be attested by any witness or witnesses, that document may be proved by the evidence of any person who is able to bear witness to the requisite facts without calling the attesting witness or the attesting witnesses or any of them.

695.—(1) Where a document is by this Act declared to be admissible in evidence, such document shall, on its production from the proper custody, be admissible in evidence in any court or before any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, and, subject to all just exceptions, shall be evidence of the matters stated therein in pursuance of this Act or by any officer in pursuance of his duties as such officer.

(2) A copy of any such document or extract therefrom shall also be so admissible in evidence if proved to be an examined copy or extract, or if it purports to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original document was entrusted. . . . (here follow provisions for supplying copies and extracts on payment therefor).

697. Any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse, or qualification in relation to any offence under this Act, whether it does or does not accompany in the same section the description of the offence, may be proved by the defendant, but need not be specified or negatived in any information or complaint, and, if so specified or negatived, no proof in relation to the matter so specified or negatived shall be required on the part of the informant or complainant.

719. All documents purporting to be made, issued, or written by or under the direction of the Board of Trade, and to be sealed with the seal of the Board, or to be signed by their secretary, or one of their assistant secretaries, or, if a certificate, by one of the officers of the Marine Department, shall be admissible in evidence in manner provided by this Act.

Note.—S. 64. This should be read in connection with s. 695, supra.

S. 123. As to the general rule concerning production of original documents, see ante, p. 326.

Ss. 239, 240. As to entries in log books, etc., in the course of duty generally, see ante, p. 302.

S. 457. This is one of the cases in which the burden of proof is put upon the person charged. See hereon generally, ante, p. 139.

S. 691. As to depositions generally, see ante, p. 397.

S. 694. As to calling attesting witnesses generally, see ante, p. 352.

S. 695. As to proof of documents generally, see ante, pp. 344, 346.

S. 697. This is one of the cases in which the burden of proof is put upon the person charged. See hereon generally, ante, p. 139.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE ACT, 1895.

58 & 59 VICT. c. 9.

1. The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, as amended by the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, shall apply to the Board of Agriculture in like manner as if that Board were mentioned in the first column of the schedule to the first-mentioned Act, and the president or any member of the Board, or the secretary of the Board, or any person authorized by the president to act on behalf of the secretary of the Board, were mentioned in the second column of that schedule and as if the regulations referred to in those Acts included any document issued by the Board.

Note.—The Acts of 1868 and 1882, above referred to, are set out, ante, pp. 443 and 453.

CRIMINAL EVIDENCE ACT, 1898.

61 & 62 VICT. c. 36.

1. Every person charged with an offence, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person. Provided as follows:—

(a) A person so charged shall not be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon his own application:

(b) The failure of any person charged with an offence, or of the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, to give evidence shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution:

(c) The wife or husband of the person charged shall not, save as in this Act mentioned, be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon the application of the person so charged:

(d) Nothing in this Act shall make a husband compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, or a wife compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage:

(e) A person charged and being a witness in pursuance of this Act may be asked any question in cross-examination notwithstanding that it would tend to criminate him as to the offence charged:

(f) A person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall not be asked, and if asked shall not be required to answer any question tending to show that he has committed or been convicted of or been charged with any offence other than that wherewith he is then charged, or is of bad character, unless—

(i.) the proof that he has committed or been convicted of such other offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence wherewith he is then charged; or

(ii.) he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution; or

(iii.) he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence:

(g) Every person called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court, give his evidence from the witness box or other place from which the other witnesses give their evidence:

(h) Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of section eighteen of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, or any right of the person charged to make a statement without being sworn.

2. Where the only witness to the facts of the case called by the defence is the person charged, he shall be called as a witness immediately after the close of the evidence for the prosecution.

3. In cases where the right of reply depends upon the question whether evidence has been called for the defence, the fact that the person charged has been called as a witness shall not of itself confer on the prosecution the right of reply.

4.—(1) The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence under any enactment mentioned in the schedule to this Act may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall affect a case where the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence may at common law be called as a witness without the consent of that person.

5. (Application of Act to Scotland.)

6.—(1) This Act shall apply to all criminal proceedings, notwithstanding any enactment in force at the commencement of this Act, except that nothing in this Act shall affect the Evidence Act, 1877.

SCHEDULE.

ENACTMENTS REFERRED TO.

Session and Chapter.	Short Title.	Enactments referred to.
5 Geo. 4, c. 83.	The Vagrancy Act, 1824.	The enactment punishing a man for neglecting to maintain or deserting his wife or any of his family.
8 & 9 Vict. c. 83.	The Poor Law (Scotland) Act, 1845.	Section eighty.
24 & 25 Vict. c. 100.	The Offences against The Person Act, 1861.	Sections forty-eight to fifty-five.
45 & 46 Vict. c. 75.	The Married Women's Property Act, 1882.	Section twelve and section sixteen.
48 & 49 Vict. c. 69.	The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885.	The whole Act.
57 & 58 Vict. c. 41.	The Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894.	The whole Act (repealed by 4 Edw. 7, c. 15).

ENACTMENTS SINCE ADDED.

Session and Chapter.	Short Title.	Enactments referred to.
8 Edw. 7, c. 45.	The Punishment of Incest Act, 1908.	The whole Act (see post , p. 483).
8 Edw. 7, c. 67.	The Children Act, 1908.	Part II. and First Schedule (see post , pp. 487, 491).

Note.—S. 1. It will be observed that this section provides only that the person charged and the wife and husband may be called for the defence. Section 4 provides that in certain cases the wife or husband may be called for the prosecution also in certain cases. See hereon generally, ante, p. 260.

It is the duty of the judge to inform a prisoner of his right to give evidence, but his neglect to do so will not render the conviction invalid (R. v. Warren, 73 J. P. 359). Although the Act says the person charged shall be a competent witness "for the defence at every stage" of the proceedings, yet, as evidence for the defence is not given before the Grand Jury, the person charged cannot give evidence before them (R. v. Rhodes, [1899] 1 Q. B. 77). Nor can he give evidence in mitigation of sentence after he has pleaded guilty. The phrase "stage of the proceedings" is not applicable to the period between the plea of guilty and sentence (R. v. Hodgkinson, 64 J. P. 808). But he can give evidence both on the preliminary proceedings before the magistrate and at the trial by the petty jury.

A person charged jointly with another is "a competent witness for the defence," so he may give evidence, not only on behalf of himself, but also on behalf of his fellow-prisoner (R. v. McDonald, 73 J. P. 490).

S. 1 (a). If the person charged has chosen to give evidence before the magistrate, it can be put in against him at the trial, although he then chooses not to give evidence (R. v. Bird, 79 L. T. 359). And where a person is about to be committed for trial, the magistrate should impress upon him the advisability of giving any evidence he intends to give at the earliest stage, as the value thereof might otherwise be lessened (R. v. Humphries, 67 J. P. 396).

S. 1 (b). Although the prosecution may not comment on failure to give evidence, the judge may do so. The right to do so rests solely on his discretion; its exercise depends upon the circumstance of each case, and no general rule can be laid down (R. v. Rhodes, [1899] 1 Q. B. 77). And the prosecution may comment on any evidence given by the person charged (R. v. Gardner, [1899] 1 Q. B. 150).

S. 1 (c). See post, s. 4.

S. 1 (d). A similar provision as to such privileged communications in civil cases, is contained in the Evidence Act, 1853, s. 3, ante, p. 427.

S. 1 (e). If the question asked actually tends to show the offence charged, it cannot be objected to on the ground that it tends to show that the person charged has committed another offence, or is of bad character (R. v. Chitson, [1909] 2 K. B. 945). If a person charged does not give evidence on his own behalf, but does so on behalf of a fellow-prisoner, he can be cross-examined in order to show that he himself is guilty of the offence charged (R. v. Rowland, [1910] 1 K. B. 458).

S. 1 (f). As this Act applies to all criminal proceedings (s. 6), a person charged cannot be asked the questions mentioned in this section even in a case in which he is allowed to give evidence under any other statute which renders him a competent witness (Charnock v. Merchant, [1900] 1 Q. B. 474). But the Court will not, as a matter of course, quash a conviction on the ground that a prisoner has been improperly asked and has answered such question, if it appears that his counsel allowed the question to be answered without objection (R. v. Bridgwater, [1905] 1 K. B. 131). And where a man was charged with assault before a court of summary jurisdiction, and a question improperly put to him as to his previous conviction was disallowed, but the solicitor for the prosecution stated that he had a certified copy of the conviction; the justices having convicted, stating that the above incident was entirely ignored by them; it was held by a Divisional Court that the conviction was valid (Barker v. Arnold, [1911] 2 K. B. 120).

In considering whether a question tends to show that a person charged has committed another offence, it must be judged by the light of the other questions put to him. Any questions which would reasonably lead the jury to believe that it is being imputed that he has committed another offence tend to show that he has committed the same. The object of the enactment is that, except in the specified cases, it should not be suggested to the jury by means of questions put to the person charged that he has committed another offence. Where a question of this nature is improperly put, it is the duty of the judge not to wait for counsel to object, but to stop the question himself; and if by mischance the question is put, it was held to be the duty of the judge to direct the jury to disregard it, and not to let it influence them (R. v. Ellis, [1910] 2 K. B. 746). But it has recently been held that a judge may use his discretion whether it would not be against a defendant's interest to warn the jury against the effect of an inadmissible question improperly put and disallowed (R. v. Cohen, 10 Cr. App. R. 91). And the judge has a discretion, with which the Court of Appeal is slow to interfere, whether he will allow cross-examination as to the character of the accused under this section (R. v. Watson, 8 Cr. App. R. 249).

S. 1 (f) (i). This appears to be a restatement of s. 1 (e). So, where a prisoner was charged with an offence against a girl under sixteen, he was allowed to be cross-examined as to his relations with another girl, and his statements made to the prosecutrix in relation thereto, as such evidence tended to show the credibility of the story of the prosecutrix, and was some evidence that he had committed the offence against her (R. v. Chitson, [1909] 2 K. B. 945). So also, evidence of such other offence might be admissible evidence to show the offence charged under the head of "similar conduct" on other occasions (see ante, p. 104), or as being part of the same "transaction" (see ante, p. 66).

S. 1 (f) (ii). The provision with regard to a person charged asking questions or giving evidence as to his good character is intended to apply where witnesses to his character are called, or where evidence thereof is sought to be elicited from witnesses for the prosecution (see ante, p. 114). It does not apply to mere assertions of innocence, or repudiation of guilt, by the person charged, nor to reasons given by him for such assertions or repudiation (R. v. Ellis, [1910] 2 K. B. 746). But evidence by a prisoner that he has been earning an honest living for a considerable time is evidence of his good character within the section (R. v. Baker, 7 Cr. App. R. 252).

The provision with regard to the defence involving imputations on the character of the prisoner, etc., must receive its ordinary and natural interpretation, and must not be qualified by adding or inserting the words "unnecessarily" or "unjustifiably" or "for purposes other than that of developing the defence," or other similar words. So, where prisoner's counsel cross-examined witnesses to show it was they who committed the offence charged, it was held that the conduct or nature of the defence involved imputations on their character within the section (R. v. Hudson, [1912] 2 K. B. 464).

Where a person charged, in reply to a question put to him in cross-examination as to the truth of a statement made by the prosecutor, said, "It is a lie, and he is a liar," it was held that this did not "involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor" within the meaning of the Act (R. v. Rouse, [1904] 1 K. B. 184). And a statement by a prisoner that a constable, who was giving evidence against him, was telling lies, was not such an imputation on the constable's character (R. v. Grout, 26 T. L. R. 60). A mere denial of the truth of the evidence given for the prosecution, or setting up a defence inconsistent with the truth of the statements made by the witnesses for the prosecution, does not thus involve such imputations. It is merely "developing the defence" (R. v. Bridgwater, [1905] 1 K. B. 131).

Nor is a statement that a police officer used unnecessary violence in arresting a prisoner; nor the suggestion that a prosecutor is an habitual drunkard; nor a statement made before the magistrate that the evidence of the prosecution is concocted, put in by the prosecution at the trial, but not made the basis of the defence, an imputation within the section (R. v. Westfall, 7 Cr. App. R. 176).

Where a prisoner alleged, in his evidence, that his identification at the police-station was not reliable, as the persons brought to identify him had been coached for the purpose by a police officer who was called as a witness, saying, "it was not an honest case, but a got-up affair," it was held that such evidence was not part of the "nature or conduct of the defence," and questions as to previous convictions were inadmissible (R. v. Preston, [1909] 1 K. B. 568).

But if answers given by a person charged are not "necessary for the conduct of the defence," and they involve imputations on the character of a witness for the prosecution, he brings himself within the provisions of the Act, and can be cross-examined as to other offences (R. v. Jones, 74 J. P. 30).

So, it is an imputation within the section to suggest that a witness for the prosecution, tendered as an accomplice, and a person of bad character, has committed a crime other than that he has admitted (R. v. Cohen, 10 Cr. App. R. 91). And evidence by a prisoner that a witness for the prosecution had himself committed the offence charged was held to involve an imputation on the character of such witness (R. v. Marshall, 63 J. P. 36). But where a person was tried for rape, and gave evidence to the effect that the prosecutrix consented to the act, it was held that it did not amount to an imputation on her character within the Act (R. v. Sheean, 72 J. P. 232; but see the cases hereon, Phipson, 454).

S. 1 (f) (iii). Where a prisoner gives evidence, and in doing so incriminates another prisoner jointly indicted with him, the latter is entitled to cross-examine the former (R. v. Hadwen, [1902] 1 K. B. 882).

S. 1 (g). The prisoner's "unsworn statement" (see ante, p. 398), if any, is made from the dock.

S. 1 (h). The provisions of the Indictable Offences Act are set out, ante, p. 421. As to the unsworn statement of the person charged, see ante, p. 398.

S. 2. Where the person charged calls other witnesses to the facts (not merely as to his character), his own evidence is given, together with the evidence of his other witnesses, after he or his counsel has opened his defence, and in any order desired (Phipson, 43-4).

S. 3. As to the right of reply, see id., and ante, p. 440. If the person charged calls his or her consort as a witness, the prosecution has a right of reply.

S. 4 (1). The schedule referred to must now be read as including Offences under the Punishment of Incest Act, 1908 (s. 4, post, p. 483), and the Children Act, 1908, and the schedule thereto (s. 27, post, p. 488), and as excluding the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, repealed by s. 33 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904; which latter Act contains, however, a provision bringing offences thereunder within the same rule (s. 12, post, p. 475). The cases in which the husband or wife of a person charged can give evidence without consent of the person charged are summarised, ante, p. 260. As to the effect of this section, see Leach v. R. (ante, p. 268), and R. v. Acaster (ante, p. 270).

S. 4 (2). See hereon, ante, p. 261.

S. 6 (1). See Charnock v. Merchant, supra; and the Evidence Act, 1877, ante, p. 449.

MOTOR CAR ACT, 1903.

3 EDW. 7, c. 36.

9.—(1) (Providing penalties for driving in excess of maximum speed.) A person shall not be convicted under this provision for exceeding the limit of speed of twenty miles merely on the opinion of one witness as to the rate of speed.

Note.—As to corroboration generally, see ante, p. 146.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN ACT, 1904.

4 EDW. 7, c. 15.

Evidence and Procedure.

12. In any proceeding against any person for an offence under this Act, or for any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, such person shall be competent but not compellable to give evidence, and the wife or husband of such person may be required to attend to give evidence as an ordinary witness in the case, and shall be competent but not compellable to give evidence.

17. Where a person is charged with an offence under this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, or any offence under the Employment of Children Act, 1903, in respect of a child who is alleged in the charge or indictment to be under any specified age, and the child appears to the court to be under that age, such child shall for the purposes of this Act, and the Employment of Children Act, 1903, be deemed to be under that age, unless the contrary is proved.

18.—(3) A person shall not be summarily convicted of an offence under this Act, or of an offence mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, unless the offence was wholly or partly committed within six months before the information was laid; but, subject as aforesaid, evidence may be taken of acts constituting, or contributing to constitute, the offence, and committed at any previous time.

23.—(3) For the purposes of this Act—

Any person who is the parent of a child shall be presumed to have the custody of the child; and

Any person to whose charge a child is committed by its parent shall be presumed to have charge of the child; and

Any other person having actual possession or control of a child shall be presumed to have the care of the child.

24. In any proceedings under this Act a copy of an entry in the wages book of any employer of labour, or, if no wages book be kept, a written statement signed by such employer, or by his foreman, shall be prima facie evidence that the wages therein entered, or stated as having been paid to any person, have in fact been paid: Provided that such copy or statement has been signed by such employer, or his foreman, and that the signature of such employer, or foreman, has been witnessed by the person producing the said copy or statement.

Note.—S. 12. The schedule referred to has been repealed by the Children Act, 1908, which itself contains a similar schedule, with slight variations (see post, p. 491). The offences referred to in such schedule are, by s. 27 of such Act, to be read into the schedule to the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (see ante, p. 471). The result appears, as regards such offences, that the wife or husband "may be called" as a witness without consent of the person charged, as provided by s. 4 (1) of the Act of 1898 (see ante, p. 470); whereas, by virtue of s. 12 above, she or he was "competent but not compellable." The two expressions are, however, now shown to be synonymous, by the decision in Leach v. R., ante, p. 268. As regards the evidence of the person charged, also referred to in the above section, although the provision therein that he shall be competent but not compellable to give evidence, in the cases mentioned in the schedule therein referred to, is also annulled by the repeal of such schedule, yet the position appears to be left as before, by virtue of s. 1 of the Act of 1898 (see ante, p. 468).

S. 17. The schedule referred to has been repealed, but sub-tantially re-enacted (see note to s. 12, supra). But s. 123 (2) of the Children Act, 1908, contains a similar provision as to presumption of age; the word "presumed," however, being used instead of "deemed" (see post, p. 490).

S. 18 (3). The schedule referred to has been repealed, but substantially re-enacted (see note to s. 12, supra). But s. 32 (3) of the Children Act, 1908, contains a similar provision as to evidence of acts committed previously (see post, p. 489). As to the general rules concerning evidence of conduct on other occasions, see ante, pp. 98, 102.

S. 23 (3). This section affords an instance of statutory presumption (see ante, pp. 25, 145). The effect appears to be to put the burden of proof upon the person charged (see ante, p. 139).

S. 24. A similar provision appears in the Children Act, 1908, s. 124 (see post, p. 490). As to entries in tradesmen's books, etc., being received in evidence, see ante, pp. 200, 410, and post, p. 522.

MARINE INSURANCE ACT, 1906.

6 EDW. 7, c. 41.

Disclosure and Representations.

18.—(4) Whether any particular circumstance, which is not disclosed, be material or not is, in each case, a question of fact.

20.—(7) Whether a particular representation be material or not is, in each case, a question of fact.

21. A contract of marine insurance is deemed to be concluded when the proposal of the assured is accepted by the insurer, whether the policy be then issued or not; and for the purpose of showing when the proposal was accepted, reference may be made to the slip or covering note or other customary memorandum of the contract, although it be unstamped.

The Policy.

22. Subject to the provisions of any statute, a contract of marine insurance is inadmissible in evidence unless it is embodied in a marine policy in accordance with this Act. The policy may be executed and issued either at the time when the contract is concluded, or afterwards.

23. (What policy must specify.)

24.—(1) A marine policy must be signed by or on behalf of the insurer, provided that in the case of a corporation the corporate seal may be sufficient, but nothing in this section shall be construed as requiring the subscription of a corporation to be under seal.

(2) Where a policy is subscribed by or on behalf of two or more insurers, each subscription, unless the contrary be expressed, constitutes a distinct contract with the assured.

The Premium.

54. Where a marine policy effected on behalf of the assured by a broker acknowledges the receipt of the premium, such acknowledgment is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive as between the insurer and the assured, but not as between the insurer and broker.

Supplemental.

88. Where by this Act any reference is made to reasonable time, reasonable premium, or reasonable diligence, the question what is reasonable is a question of fact.

89. Where there is a duly stamped policy, reference may be made, as heretofore, to the slip or covering note, in any legal proceeding.

Note.—Ss. 18 (4), 20 (7). As to the mode of dealing with questions of fact, see ante, pp. 6, 8 [and for the various facts and representations which are "material," see s. 18 (1), (2), (3), and s. 20 (1), (2), (3), (4)].

S. 21. As to the necessity generally of stamping a document before producing it in evidence, see ante, p. 143, and s. 14 of the Stamp Act, 1891, ante, p. 462.

Ss. 22—24. These provisions are among the few requiring written evidence (see ante, p. 148). Any other contract of insurance may apparently be verbal, without any policy or written evidence of any kind.

S. 54. As to the general effect of a receipt, see ante, p. 50.

S. 88. Questions of "reasonable" time, diligence, and the like, are generally treated as questions of fact, and thus for the jury, if any, to decide, see ante, p. 9.

S. 89. Compare s. 21, and note thereto, supra.

EVIDENCE (COLONIAL STATUTES) ACT, 1907.

7 EDW. 7, C. 16.

1.—(1) Copies of Acts, ordinances, and statutes passed (whether before or after the passing of this Act) by the Legislature of any British possession, and of orders, regulations, and other instruments issued or made, whether before or after the passing of this Act, under the authority of any such Act, ordinance, or statute, if purporting to be printed by the Government printer, shall be received in evidence by all courts of justice in the United Kingdom without any proof being given that the copies were so printed.

(3) In this Act—

The expression "Government printer" means, as respects any British possession, the printer purporting to be the printer authorised to print the Acts, ordinances, or statutes of the Legislature of that possession, or otherwise to be the Government printer of that possession:

The expression "British possession" means any part of His Majesty's dominions exclusive of the United Kingdom, and, where parts of these dominions are under both a central and a local Legislature, shall include both all parts under the central Legislature and each part under a local Legislature.

Note.—As to proof of public documents generally, see ante, p. 344.

CRIMINAL APPEAL ACT, 1907.

7 EDW. 7, C. 23.

3. A person convicted on indictment may appeal under this Act to the Court of Criminal Appeal.

4.—(1) The Court of Criminal Appeal on any such appeal against conviction shall allow the appeal if they think that the verdict of the jury should be set aside on the ground that it is unreasonable or cannot be supported having regard to the evidence, or that the judgment of the court before whom the appellant was convicted should be set aside on the ground of a wrong decision of any question of law or that on any ground there was a miscarriage of justice, and in any other case shall dismiss the appeal :

Provided that the court may, notwithstanding that they are of opinion that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, dismiss the appeal if they consider that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred.

5.—(2) Where an appellant has been convicted of an offence and the jury could on the indictment have found him guilty of some other offence, and on the finding of the jury it appears to the Court of Criminal Appeal that the jury must have been satisfied of facts which proved him guilty of that other offence, the court may, instead of allowing or dismissing the appeal, substitute for the verdict found by the jury a verdict of guilty of that other offence, and pass such sentence in substitution for the sentence passed at the trial as may be warranted in law for that other offence, not being a sentence of greater severity.

8. The judge or chairman of any court before whom a person is convicted shall, in the case of an appeal under this Act against the conviction or against the sentence, or in the case of an application for leave to appeal under this Act, furnish to the Registrar, in accordance with rules of court, his notes of the trial; and shall also furnish to the Registrar in accordance with rules of court a report giving his opinion upon the case or upon any point arising in the case.

9. For the purposes of this Act, the Court of Criminal Appeal may, if they think it necessary or expedient in the interest of justice,—

- (a) order the production of any document, exhibit, or other thing connected with the proceedings, the production of which appears to them necessary for the determination of the case; and
- (b) if they think fit order any witnesses who would have been compellable witnesses at the trial to attend and be examined before the court, whether they were or were not called at the trial, or order the examination of any such witnesses to be conducted in manner provided by rules of court before any judge of the court or before any officer of the court or justice of the peace or other person appointed by the court for the purpose, and allow the admission of any depositions so taken as evidence before the court; and

- (c) if they think fit receive the evidence, if tendered, of any witness (including the appellant) who is a competent but not compellable witness, and, if the appellant makes an application for the purpose, of the husband or wife of the appellant, in cases where the evidence of the husband or wife could not have been given at the trial except on such an application; and
- (d) where any question arising on the appeal involves prolonged examination of documents or accounts, or any scientific or local investigation, which cannot in the opinion of the court conveniently be conducted before the court, order the reference of the question in manner provided by rules of court for inquiry and report to a special commissioner appointed by the court, and act upon the report of any such commissioner so far as they think fit to adopt it; and
- (e) appoint any person with special expert knowledge to act as assessor to the court in any case where it appears to the court that such special knowledge is required for the proper determination of the case;

and exercise in relation to the proceedings of the court any other powers which may for the time being be exercised by the court of appeal on appeals in civil matters, and issue any warrants necessary for enforcing the orders or sentences of the court: Provided that in no case shall any sentence be increased by reason of or in consideration of any evidence that was not given at the trial.

16. Shorthand notes shall be taken, of the proceedings at the trial of any person on indictment who, if convicted, is entitled or may be authorised to appeal under this Act, and on any appeal or application for leave to appeal a transcript of the notes or any part thereof shall be made if the registrar so directs, and furnished to the registrar for the use of the Court of Criminal Appeal or any judge thereof: Provided that a transcript shall be furnished to any party interested upon the payment of such charges as the Treasury may fix.

Note.—S. 4. It will be observed that the Court shall allow the appeal, not only where the verdict cannot be supported by the evidence, but also where it is unreasonable; and not only where the decision is wrong in law, but also where on any ground there is a miscarriage of justice. So, a conviction, upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice was quashed, although corroboration is not in such case required by law (R. v. Tate, [1908] 2 K. B. 680; see ante, p. 149). As to the proviso, see R. v. Murray, 9 Cr. App. R. 248, referred to post, p. 491.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS ACT, 1907.

7 EDW. 7, c. 24.

5. Every limited partnership must be registered as such in accordance with the provisions of this Act, or in default thereof it shall be deemed to be a general partnership, and every limited partner shall be deemed to be a general partner.

6.—(1) A limited partner shall not take part in the management of the partnership business, and shall not have power to bind the firm.

7. Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Partnership Act, 1890, and the rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnerships, except so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of the last-mentioned Act, shall apply to limited partnerships.

8. (Manner and particulars of registration.)

16.—(1) Any person may inspect the statements filed by the registrar in the register offices . . . and any person may require a certificate of the registration of any limited partnership, or a copy of or extract from any registered statement, to be certified by the registrar (on payment of certain fees). . . .

(2) A certificate of registration, or a copy of or extract from any statement registered under this Act, if duly certified, to be a true copy under the hand of the registrar or one of the assistant registrars (whom it shall not be necessary to prove to be the registrar or assistant registrar) shall, in all legal proceedings, civil or criminal, and in all cases whatsoever be received in evidence.

Note.—This Act must be read in connection with the sections of the Partnership Act, 1890, set out ante, p. 461. It would appear that ss. 2 (3) and 14 (1) of such Act cannot apply to limited partners, who must comply with certain formalities in order to be considered as such (see s. 4 of the Act of 1907). Nor can s. 15 of the Act of 1890 apply, apparently, in face of s. 6 (1) of the Act of 1907.

PUNISHMENT OF INCEST ACT, 1908.

8 EDW. 7, c. 45.

4.—(4) Section 4 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, shall have effect as if this Act were included in the schedule to that Act.

Note.—The schedule in question appears ante, p. 470. A noticeable case on this Act is Director of Public Prosecutions v. Ball, [1911] A. C. 47.

PREVENTION OF CRIME ACT, 1908.

8 EDW. 7, c. 59.

PART II.

DETENTION OF HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

10.—(2) A person shall not be found to be a habitual criminal unless the jury finds on evidence:—

(a) that since attaining the age of sixteen years he has at least three times previously to the conviction of the crime charged in the said indictment been convicted of a crime, whether any such previous conviction was before or after the passing of this Act, and that he is leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life; or

(b) that he has on such a previous conviction been found to be a habitual criminal and sentenced to preventive detention.

(3) In any indictment under this section it shall be sufficient, after charging the crime, to state that the offender is a habitual criminal.

(4) In the proceedings on the indictment the offender shall in the first instance be arraigned on so much only of the indictment as charges the crime, and if on arraignment he pleads guilty or is found guilty by the jury, the jury shall, unless he pleads guilty to being a habitual criminal, be charged to inquire whether he is a habitual criminal, and in that case it shall not be necessary to swear the jury again:

Provided that a charge of being a habitual criminal shall not be inserted in an indictment—

- (a) without the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions; and
- (b) unless not less than seven days' notice has been given to the proper officer of the court by which the offender is to be tried, and to the offender, that it is intended to insert such a charge; and the notice to the offender shall specify the previous convictions and the other grounds upon which it is intended to found the charge.
- (5) Without prejudice to any right of the accused to tender evidence as to his character and repute, evidence of character and repute may, if the Court thinks fit, be admitted as evidence on the question whether the accused is or is not leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life.
- (6) For the purposes of this section the expression "crime" has the same meaning as in the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, and the definition of "crime" in that Act, set out in the schedule to this Act, shall apply accordingly.

Note.—S. 10 (2). The burden of proof that a person is a habitual criminal is upon the prosecution (R. v. Young, 9 Cr. App. R. 185; R. v. Stewart, 74 J. P. 246). The jury should be clearly directed that the burden of proof is upon the prosecution, and their attention should be expressly directed to any evidence tending to show that the person charged has been striving to lead an honest life (R. v. Sullivan, 9 Cr. App. R. 201). They should be directed that it is for them to consider whether in the particular circumstances the previous convictions justify them in finding the accused to be a habitual criminal (R. v. Kelly, 74 J. P. 167). It is a question for the jury whether the evidence of the prisoner's having worked honestly and tried to get work since his last release from prison is sufficient (R. v. Martin, 7 Cr. App. R. 227). The nature of the primary offence on which the allegation of being a habitual criminal is founded may alone justify the charge (R. v. Williams, 8 Cr. App. R. 49).

S. 10 (2) (a). As to the person charged being of the age of sixteen, there must be evidence before the court that he was of such age at the date of the first alleged conviction. If the jury cannot act upon their view as to his age, it may be proved by a prison official deposing that his age, as stated in the calendar, was so stated from information given by the accused himself (R. v. Turner, [1910] 1 K. B. 346).

As to the previous convictions, much depends on the nature of the offences of which the accused was convicted. If they were not offences showing deliberation or system, it may not be right to take them as sufficient of themselves to establish the charge of being a habitual criminal; but if they were offences requiring system, planning or deliberation, and were repeated soon after release from prison, they may well be sufficient for the purpose (R. v. Everitt, 27 T. L. R. 570). Evidence of the previous convictions is inadmissible unless it is proved that they were specified in the notice served upon the accused in pursuance of s. 10 (4) (b) (R. v. Turner, supra). A conviction in a foreign country, for an offence which is a crime in all civilised countries, is admissible on the question as to whether an accused person has been leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life (R. v. Heard, 106 L. T. 304). As to evidence of previous convictions generally in criminal cases, see ante, p. 100. As to the manner of proving such convictions, see post, p. 531.

As to leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life, the evidence is not necessarily to be confined to the period since the accused's last conviction (R. v. Turner, [1910] 1 K. B. 346; R. v. Wilson, 28 T. L. R. 561). It must depend on the circumstances of each case whether evidence as to the period prior to such conviction is admissible or not; but the evidence must be brought down to the date when the accused is charged (R. v. Turner, [1910] 1 K. B. 346). Convictions were quashed where no evidence was given as to the conduct of the accused during the time which had elapsed since he last came out of prison (R. v. Kelly, 74 J. P. 167; R. v. Baggott, 74 J. P. 213). An interval so long as six months between a prisoner's last release and the commission of the offence charged, coupled with the fact that he has done some honest work in the meantime, may be sufficient to negative his persistently leading a dishonest or criminal life; but the nature of the offence with which he is charged must be considered. If it does not involve premeditation, but may result from sudden temptation, it is not necessarily inconsistent with a desire to amend his mode of life. But where it is obvious that he intends to return to his criminal courses, such an interval cannot affect the question (R. v. Keane, R. v. Watson, [1912] W. N. 205). No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what interval between such a release and subsequent offence is material (R. v. Heard, supra). A person who is habitually leading a criminal life does not cease to be a habitual criminal merely by the fact that he occupies a small portion of his time in doing some work (R. v. Jennings, 74 J. P. 245). Even the fact that the accused has been doing work during the greater part of a short interval of liberty is not necessarily conclusive against his being a habitual criminal (R. v. Smith, 8 Cr. App. R. 150). But, if a criminal who evades arrest does honest work during that period, such fact should be considered in his favour (R. v. Brown, 9 Cr. App. R. 161). The mere fact that a convict on licence has not reported himself to the police is not sufficient to establish that he is leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life (R. v. Mitchell, 76 J. P. 423). A police officer, called for the prosecution, is entitled to express his opinion in favour of the accused (R.

v. Sullivan, 9 Cr. App. R. 201). [On a charge of being an habitual criminal, the fact that the prisoner has previously been found to be such, does not prevent him from adducing evidence to negative the charge. The matter is in each case wholly for the jury and the proposition that "once a habitual criminal, always one," is not sustainable (R. v. Norman, 18 Cr. App. R. 81).]

S. 10 (4) (a). It is necessary to prove the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions, if it is challenged by the accused, but it is not necessary that anyone should be called to prove his handwriting. It is sufficient if a witness proves that he has been in correspondence with the Director and has received in due course a document purporting to be his consent (R. v. Turner, [1910] 1 K. B. 346). If, however, such consent is not challenged, it will be presumed (R. v. Waller, [1910] 1 K. B. 364).

S. 10 (4) (b). It is not necessary that the notice to the proper officer of the court should be proved by calling such officer; but it was held that it must be proved either by the officer or clerk of the Court or by the person who gave the notice (R. v. Turner, [1910] 1 K. B. 346). It has, however, since been held that there is a presumption that the notice has been given, and the onus is on the prisoner of showing it has not been given (R. v. Westwood, 8 Cr. App. R. 273). The notice to the accused need not state the evidence intended to be given, but it must state the grounds upon which it is intended to found the charge. It is not enough to state that the accused is leading persistently a dishonest or criminal life (R. v. Turner, [1910] 1 K. B. 346; R. v. Moran, 75 J. P. 110; R. v. Maxfield, 28 T. L. R. 404; R. v. Webber, 76 J. P. 476; R. v. Neilson, 8 Cr. App. R. 218). Where such notice stated, in addition to particulars as to previous convictions, that between certain dates "you were given various opportunities of earning an honest living; nevertheless you returned to your dishonest and criminal life," it was held that evidence could not be given that during such period the accused had been seen frequently associating with criminals and acting in concert with them (R. v. Fawcett, 74 J. P. 444). But the notice need not, in addition to specifying the previous convictions, also state any "other grounds," unless the prosecution intend to rely on other grounds than previous convictions (R. v. Waller, [1910] 1 K. B. 364). And where evidence was given, without objection, of offences admitted by the accused, on his arrest, to have been committed by him since his last conviction, although such offences were not mentioned in the notice; the Court of Criminal Appeal dismissed the appeal, as no substantial miscarriage of justice had occurred within the meaning of the proviso to s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, ante, p. 479 (R. v. Marshall, 74 J. P. 381).

S. 10 (5). As to evidence of character generally in criminal cases, see ante, pp. 98, 114.

S. 10 (6). The Act of 1871 is set out ante, p. 446, the definition referred to being in s. 20 thereof.

CHILDREN ACT, 1908.

8 EDW. 7, c. 67.

PART II.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS.

12.—(1) . . . A parent or other person legally liable to maintain a child or young person shall be deemed to have neglected him in a manner likely to cause injury to his health if he fails to provide adequate food, clothing, medical aid, or lodging for the child or young person, or if, being unable otherwise to provide such food, clothing, medical aid, or lodging, he fails to take steps to procure the same to be provided under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor.

(7) A copy of a policy of insurance, certified by an officer or agent of the insurance company granting the policy, to be a true copy, shall, in any proceedings under this section be prima facie evidence that the child or young person therein stated to be insured has been in fact so insured, and that the person in whose favour the policy has been granted is the person to whom the money thereby insured is legally payable.

13. Where it is proved that the death of an infant under three years of age was caused by suffocation (not being suffocation caused by disease or the presence of any foreign body in the throat or air-passages of the infant), whilst the infant was in bed with some other person over sixteen years of age, and that that other person was at the time of going to bed under the influence of drink, that other person shall be deemed to have neglected the infant in a manner likely to cause injury to its health within the meaning of this part of this Act.

14.—(1) (Providing penalties for allowing children or young persons to beg, etc.)

(2) If a person having the custody, charge, or care of a child or young person is charged with an offence under this section, and it is proved that the child or young person was in any street, premises, or place for any such purpose as aforesaid, and that the person charged allowed the child or young person to be in the street, premises, or place; he shall be presumed to have allowed him to be in the street, premises, or place for that purpose unless the contrary is proved.

27. As respects proceedings against any person for an offence under this Part of this Act, or for any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, shall apply as if in the schedule to that Act a reference to this Part of this Act and to the First Schedule to this Act were substituted for the reference to the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894.

28.—(1) Where a justice is satisfied by the evidence of a duly qualified medical practitioner that the attendance before a court of any child or young person in respect of whom an offence under this Part of this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, is alleged to have been committed, would involve serious danger to the life or health of the child or young person, the justice may take in writing the deposition of the child or young person on oath, and shall thereupon subscribe the deposition and add thereto a statement of his reason for taking the deposition and of the day when and place where the deposition was taken, and of the names of the persons (if any) present at the taking thereof.

29. Where, on the trial of any person on indictment for an offence of cruelty, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, the court is satisfied by the evidence of a duly qualified medical practitioner that the attendance before the court of any child or young person in respect of whom the offence is alleged to have been committed would involve serious danger to the life or health of the child or young person, any deposition of the child or young person taken under the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, or this Part of this Act, shall be admissible in evidence either for or against the accused person without further proof thereof—

- (a) if it purports to be signed by the justice by or before whom it purports to be taken; and
- (b) if it is proved that reasonable notice of the intention to take the deposition has been served upon the person against whom it is proposed to use it as evidence, and that that person or his counsel or solicitor had, or might have had if he had chosen to be present, an opportunity of cross-examining the child or young person making the deposition.

30. Where in any proceeding against any person for an offence under this part of this Act, or for any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, the child in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed, or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness, does not in the opinion of the court understand the nature of an oath, the evidence of that child may be received, though not given upon oath, if, in the opinion of the court, the child is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence, and understands the duty of speaking the truth; and the evidence of the child, though not given on oath, but otherwise taken and reduced into writing in accordance with the provisions of section seventeen of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, or of this Part of this Act, shall be deemed to be a deposition within the meaning of that section and that Part respectively:

Provided that—

(a) A person shall not be liable to be convicted of the offence unless the testimony admitted by virtue of this section and given on behalf of the prosecution is corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused.

32.—(3) A person shall not be summarily convicted of an offence under this Part of this Act, or of an offence mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, unless the offence was wholly or partly committed within six months before the information was laid; but, subject as aforesaid, evidence may be taken of acts constituting, or contributing to constitute, the offence, and committed at any previous time.

38.—(2) For the purposes of this Part of this Act—

Any person who is the parent or legal guardian of a child or young person or who is legally liable to maintain a child or young person shall be presumed to have the custody of the child or young person, and as between father and mother the father shall not be deemed to have ceased to have the custody of the child or young person by reason only that he has deserted, or otherwise does not reside with, the mother and child or young person; and

Any person to whose charge a child or young person is committed by any person who has the custody of the child or young person shall be presumed to have charge of the child or young person; and Any other person having actual possession or control of a child or young person shall be presumed to have the care of the child or young person.

PART VI.

MISCELLANEOUS AND GENERAL.

120.—(3) If a child is found in the bar of any licensed premises, except during the hours of closing, the holder of the licence shall be deemed to have committed an offence under this section unless he shows that he has used due diligence to prevent the child being admitted to the bar or that the child was apparently a person over the age of fourteen.

123.—(1) Where a person, whether charged with an offence or not, is brought before any court otherwise than for the purpose of giving evidence, and it appears to the court that he is a child or young person, the court shall make due inquiry as to the age of that person, and for that purpose shall take such evidence as may be forthcoming at the hearing of the case, but an order or judgment of the court shall not be invalidated by any subsequent proof that the age of that person has not been correctly stated to the court, and the age presumed or declared by the court to be the age of the person so brought before it shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be the true age of that person, and, where it appears to the court that the person so brought before it is of the age of sixteen years or upwards, that person shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed not to be a child or young person.

(2) Where in a charge or indictment for an offence under this Act, or any of the offences mentioned in the First Schedule to this Act, except an offence under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, it is alleged that the person by or in respect of whom the offence was committed was a child or young person or was under or above any specified age, and he appears to the court to have been at the date of the commission of the alleged offence a child or young person, or to have been under or above the specified age, as the case may be, he shall for the purposes of this Act be presumed at that date to have been a child or young person or to have been under or above that age, as the case may be, unless the contrary is proved.

124. In any proceedings under this Act, a copy of an entry in the wages book of any employer of labour, or, if no wages book be

COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908.

S EDW. 7, c. 69.

17.—(1) A certificate of incorporation given by the registrar in respect of any association shall be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of this Act in respect of registration and of matters precedent and incidental thereto have been complied with, and that the association is a company authorised to be registered and duly registered under this Act.

23. A certificate under the common seal of the company, specifying any shares or stock held by any member, shall be primâ facie evidence of the title of the member to the shares or stock.

33. The register of members shall be primâ facie evidence of any matters by this Act directed or authorised to be inserted therein.

71.—(1) (Minutes of proceedings of meetings and directors.)

(2) Any such minute if purporting to be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which the proceedings were had, or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting, shall be evidence of the proceedings.

(3) Until the contrary is proved, every general meeting of the company or meeting of directors or managers in respect of the proceedings whereof minutes have been so made shall be deemed to have been duly held and convened, and all proceedings had thereat to have been duly had, and all appointments of directors, managers, or liquidators, shall be deemed to be valid.

87.—(2) The registrar of companies shall, on the filing of this statutory declaration, certify that the company is entitled to commence business, and that certificate shall be conclusive evidence that the company is so entitled.

111. A copy of the report of any inspectors appointed under this Act, authenticated by the seal of the company whose affairs they have investigated, shall be admissible in any legal proceeding as evidence of the opinion of the inspectors in relation to any matter contained in the report.

PART IV.

WINDING UP.

168.—(1) An order made by the court on a contributory shall (subject to any right of appeal) be conclusive evidence that the money, if any, thereby appearing to be due or ordered to be paid is due.

174.—(1) (Power to summon any person to give information, etc.)

(2) The court may examine him on oath concerning the same, either by word of mouth or on written interrogatories, and may reduce his answers to writing and require him to sign them.

(3) The court may require him to produce any books and papers in his custody or power relating to the company.

175.—(1) (Power to order public examination of promoters, directors, etc.)

(4) The court may put such questions to the person examined as the court thinks fit.

(5) The person examined shall be examined on oath, and shall answer all such questions as the court may put or allow to be put to him.

(7) Notes of the examination shall be taken down in writing, and shall be read over to or by, and signed by, the person examined, and may thereafter be used in evidence against him, and shall be open to the inspection of any creditor or contributory at all reasonable times.

220. Where any company is being wound up, all books and papers of the company and of the liquidators shall, as between the contributories of the company, be primâ facie evidence of the truth of all matters purporting to be therein recorded.

225. In all proceedings under this Part of this Act, all courts, judges, and persons judicially acting, and all officers, judicial or ministerial, of any court, or employed in enforcing the process of any court, shall take judicial notice of the signature of any officer of the High Court. . . . and also of the official seal or stamp of the several offices of the High Court. . . . appended to or impressed on any document made, issued, or signed under the provisions of this Part of this Act, or any official copy thereof.

236.—(1) All documents purporting to be orders or certificates made or issued by the Board of Trade for the purposes of this Act and to be sealed with the seal of the Board, or to be signed by a secretary or assistant secretary of the Board, or any person authorised in that behalf by the President of the Board, shall be received in evidence and deemed to be such orders or certificates without further proof unless the contrary is shown.

(2) A certificate signed by the President of the Board of Trade that any order made, certificate issued, or act done, is the order, certificate, or act of the Board, shall be conclusive evidence of the fact so certified.

Note.—It will be observed that certain matters are by the above sections made "evidence," "prima facie evidence," or "conclusive evidence," or they are "deemed" to be or to have been. It is not always easy to ascertain the precise meaning of several expressions used when there are only two positions to be provided for. See hereon, ante, p. 145.

S. 175 (5), (7). There appear to be two cases in which a person is compelled to answer criminating questions, the answers to which may afterwards be used in evidence against him, viz., in an examination under this section, and [to a limited extent] in a public examination of a bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914 (see ss. 15, 166, post, 500, 502). [A third case is supplied by the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1 (e), under which the accused, if tendered as a witness, may be asked any question as to the offence charged, notwithstanding that his answers may tend to criminate him (ante, p. 469).] See generally as to criminating questions, ante, p. 314.

S. 225. As to judicial notice generally, see ante, p. 13.

OATHS ACT, 1909.

9 EDW. 7, c. 39.

2.—(1) Any oath may be administered and taken in the form and manner following:—

The person taking the oath shall hold the New Testament, or, in the case of a Jew, the Old Testament, in his uplifted hand, and shall say or repeat after the officer administering the oath the words "I swear by Almighty God that . . .," followed by the words of the oath prescribed by law.

(2) The officer shall (unless the person about to take the oath voluntarily objects thereto, or is physically incapable of so taking the oath) administer the oath in the form and manner aforesaid without question :

Provided that, in the case of a person who is neither a Christian nor a Jew, the oath shall be administered in any manner which is now lawful.

3. In this Act the word "officer" shall mean and include any and every person duly authorised to administer oaths.

Note.—This Act should be read in connection with the Oaths Act, 1838, ante, p. 417, and the Oaths Act, 1888, ante, p. 459. It will be observed that the "New Testament" and "Old Testament" are mentioned in the above Act, not the "Gospels" and "Pentateuch," upon which Christians and Jews have hitherto been sworn. See ante, p. 272.

PERJURY ACT, 1911.

1 & 2 GEO. 5, c. 6.

1.—(6) The question whether a statement on which perjury is assigned was material is a question of law to be determined by the court of trial.

13. A person shall not be liable to be convicted of any offence against this Act, or of any offence declared by any other Act to be perjury or subornation of perjury, or to be punishable as perjury or subornation of perjury solely upon the evidence of one witness as to the falsity of any statement alleged to be false.

14. On a prosecution—

(a) for perjury alleged to have been committed on the trial of an indictment for felony or misdemeanour; or

(b) for procuring or suborning the commission of perjury on any such trial, the fact of the former trial shall be sufficiently proved by the production of a certificate containing the substance and effect (omitting the formal parts) of the indictment and trial purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court, or other person having the custody of the records of the court where the indictment was tried, or by the deputy of that clerk or other person, without proof of the signature or official character of the clerk or person appearing to have signed the certificate.

15.—(1) For the purposes of this Act the forms and ceremonies used in administering an oath are immaterial, if the court or person before whom the oath is taken has power to administer an oath for the purpose of verifying the statement in question, and if the oath has been administered in a form and with ceremonies which the person taking the oath has accepted without objection, or has declared to be binding on him.

(2) In this Act—

The expression "oath" in the case of persons for the time being allowed by law to affirm or declare instead of swearing, includes "affirmation" and "declaration," and the expression "swear" in the like case includes "affirm" and "declare" . . .

16.—(2) Nothing in this Act shall apply to a statement made without oath by a child under the provisions of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, and the Children Act, 1908.

Note.—S. 1 (6). As to the respective functions of judge and jury in deciding questions of law and fact, see ante, p. 6.

S. 13. As to corroboration generally, see ante, p. 146.

S. 14. As to the proof of convictions and judicial proceedings generally, see post, p. 530.

S. 15. As to the forms and ceremonies of oaths, see ante, pp. 271, 276. This section appears to reproduce, for the purpose of this Act, the rule laid down by the Oaths Act, 1838, ante, p. 417.

S. 16 (2). The only provision of the Act of 1904 on this matter appears to be s. 15, now repealed by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914. The only provision of the Act of 1908 on this matter appears to be s. 30, set out ante, p. 489, which provision has been extended to proceedings for other offences than those mentioned in the Act of 1908, by the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, s. 28 (2) (see post, p. 499).

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT, 1911.

1 & 2 GEO. 5, c. 28.

1.—(1) (Penalties for Spying.)

(2) On a prosecution under this section, it shall not be necessary to show that the accused person was guilty of any particular act tending to show a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State, and, notwithstanding that no such act is proved against him, he may be convicted if, from the circumstances of the case, or his conduct, or his known character as proved, it appears that his purpose was a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State; and if any sketch, plan, model, article, note, document, or information relating to or used in any prohibited place within the meaning of this Act, or anything in such a place, is made, obtained, or communicated by any person other than a person acting under lawful authority, it shall be deemed to have been made, obtained, or communicated for a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State unless the contrary is proved.

Note.—[The Official Secrets Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 75), in the First Schedule to the Act, makes the following amendments to the above section: "After the words 'in such a place,' there shall be inserted the words 'or any secret official code word or pass word.' And after the word 'obtained' in both places where it occurs, there shall be inserted the words 'collected, recorded, published.'"]

As to evidence of conduct and character of accused persons generally, see ante, p. 98. As to matters being "deemed" to be, as against accused persons, see ante, p. 145.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1912.

2 & 3 GEO. 5, C. 20.

7.—(6) (Dealing with offences under the Vagrancy Act, 1898, and the Immoral Traffic (Scotland) Act, 1902.) The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence under either of the said Acts may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged, but nothing in this provision shall affect a case where the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence may at common law be called as a witness without the consent of that person.

Note.—As to competency and compellability of husbands and wives as witnesses generally, see ante, p. 260.

CHILDREN (EMPLOYMENT ABROAD) ACT, 1913.

3 & 4 GEO. 5, c. 7.

3.—(2) Where proceedings are taken against any person under this Act in respect of any child or young person, and it is proved that the defendant caused or procured or allowed the child or young person to go out of the United Kingdom, and that the child or young person has, out of the United Kingdom, been singing, playing, performing or been exhibited, for profit, the defendant shall be presumed to have caused or procured or allowed such child or young person to go out of the United Kingdom for that purpose unless the contrary is proved.

(4) The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence under this Act may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged.

Note.—S. 3 (2). As to persons charged being “presumed” to have committed offences, the burden of proof being placed upon them, as regards certain matters, see ante, pp. 139, 145.

S. 3 (4). As to competency and compellability of husbands and wives as witnesses generally, see ante, p. 260.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE ADMINISTRATION ACT, 1914.

4 & 5 GEO. 5, c. 58.

28.—(1) The record or extract by which a conviction may be proved under section eighteen of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, may in the case of a summary conviction consist of a copy of the minute or memorandum of the conviction entered in the register required to be kept under section twenty-two of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court by whom the register is kept.

(2) The provisions of section thirty of the Children Act, 1908 (which enables the evidence of a child of tender years to be received though not given on oath), shall apply to proceedings against persons for offences not mentioned in that section, in like manner as they apply in respect of proceedings against persons for offences mentioned in that section.

(3) The wife or husband of a person charged with bigamy may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged.

(4) In any proceedings before a court of summary jurisdiction to enforce the payment of a sum of money adjudged by that or any other court of summary jurisdiction to be paid by one person to another person, then—

(a) if the person to whom the sum is ordered to be paid was an officer of a court of summary jurisdiction, the production of a certificate purporting to be signed by that officer that the sum has not been paid to him; and

(b) in any other case the production of a statutory declaration to a like effect purporting to be made by the person to whom the sum is ordered to be paid;

shall be evidence of the facts therein stated, unless the court requires such officer or other person to be called as a witness.

29. The provisions of s. 16 of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, s. 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1849, and s. 36 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, enabling a justice to issue a summons to any witness to attend to give evidence before a Court of Summary Jurisdiction shall be deemed to include the power to summon and require a witness to produce to such Court, books, plans, papers, documents, articles, goods and things likely to be material evidence on the hearing of any charge, information, or complaint, and the provisions of those sections relating to the neglect or refusal of a witness, without just excuse, to attend to give evidence, or to be sworn, or to give evidence, shall apply accordingly.

Note.—S. 28 (1). The sections of the Acts referred to are set out ante, pp. 446, 451. As to proof of convictions generally, see post, p. 531.

S. 28 (2). The section of the Act referred to is set out ante, p. 489. See note thereto.

S. 28 (3). As to competency and compellability of husbands and wives generally as witnesses, see ante, p. 260.

S. 23 (4). As to proof of judicial proceedings generally, see post, pp. 530—532.

S. 29. [This section, which was omitted from the last edition, gives to justices a much needed power to order production of material documents and articles.]

BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1914.

4 & 5 GEO. 5, C. 59.

Public Examination of Debtor.

15.—(1) Where the court makes a receiving order, it shall, save as in this Act provided, hold a public sitting, on a day to be appointed by the court, for the examination of the debtor, and the debtor shall attend thereat, and shall be examined as to his conduct, dealings, and property.

(7) The court may put such questions to the debtor as it may think expedient.

(8) The debtor shall be examined upon oath, and it shall be his duty to answer all such questions as the court may put or allow to be put to him. Such notes of the examination as the court thinks proper shall be taken down in writing, and shall be read over either to or by the debtor and signed by him, and may thereafter, save as in this Act provided, be used in evidence against him; they shall also be open to the inspection of any creditor at all reasonable times.

Procedure.

109.—(5) Subject to general rules, the court may in any matter take the whole or any part of the evidence either vivâ voce, or by interrogatories, or, out of the United Kingdom, by commission.

Evidence.

137.—(1) A copy of the London Gazette containing any notice inserted therein in pursuance of this Act, shall be evidence of the facts stated in the notice.

(2) The production of a copy of the London Gazette containing any notice of a receiving order, or of an order adjudging a debtor bankrupt shall be conclusive evidence in all legal proceedings of the order having been duly made, and of its date.

138.—(1) A minute of proceedings at a meeting of creditors under this Act, signed at the same or the next ensuing meeting, by a person describing himself as, or appearing to be, chairman of the meeting at which the minute is signed, shall be received in evidence without further proof.

(2) Until the contrary is proved, every meeting of creditors in respect of the proceedings whereof a minute has been so signed shall be deemed to have been duly convened and held, and all resolutions passed or proceedings had thereat to have been duly passed or had.

139. Any petition or copy of a petition in bankruptcy, any order or certificate or copy of an order or certificate made by any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, any instrument or copy of an instrument, affidavit, or document made or used in the course of any bankruptcy proceedings or other proceedings had under the Act, shall, if it appears to be sealed with the seal of any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, or purports to be signed by any judge thereof, or is certified as a true copy by any registrar thereof, be receivable in evidence in all legal proceedings whatever.

140. (Swearing of Affidavits.)

141. In the case of the death of the debtor or his wife, or of a witness whose evidence has been received by any court in any proceeding under this Act, the deposition of the person so deceased, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the court, or a copy thereof purporting to be so sealed, shall be admitted as evidence of the matters therein deposed to.

142. Every court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this Act shall have a seal describing the court in such manner as may be directed by order of the Lord Chancellor, and judicial notice shall be taken of the seal, and of the signature of the judge or registrar of any such court, in all legal proceedings.

143. A certificate of the Board of Trade that a person has been appointed trustee under this Act shall be conclusive evidence of his appointment.

144.—(1) All documents purporting to be orders or certificates made or issued by the Board of Trade, and to be sealed with the seal of the Board, or to be signed by a secretary or assistant secretary of the Board, or any person authorised in that behalf by the President of the Board, shall be received in evidence, and deemed to be such orders or certificates without further proof unless the contrary is shown.

(2) A certificate signed by the President of the Board of Trade that any order made, certificate issued, or act done, is the order, certificate, or act of the Board of Trade shall be conclusive evidence of the fact so certified.

Bankruptcy Offences.

166. A statement or admission made by any person in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy shall not be admissible as evidence against that person in any proceedings in respect of any of the misdemeanours referred to in section eighty-five of the Larceny Act, 1861 (which section relates to frauds by agents, bankers and factors).

Note.—S. 15 (7), (8). There appear to be two cases in which a person is compelled to answer criminating questions, the answers to which may afterwards be used in evidence against him, viz., in an examination under this section [as to which a limited protection is provided by s. 166], and in an examination of a promoter, director or other person under s. 175 of the Companies Act, 1908, ante, p. 493 [as to which there is no protection. A third instance arises under the Cr. Ev. Act, 1898, s. 1 (c), whereby the testimony of the accused as to the offence charged is made admissible against him notwithstanding that it may tend to criminate him (ante, p. 469).]

Ss. 137—144. The variety of expressions used is noticeable—"evidence," "conclusive evidence," "received in evidence," "receivable in evidence," "admitted as evidence," and "deemed" to be. See hereon, ante, p. 145. As to judicial notice, see ante, p. 13.

S. 166. This must be read in connection with s. 15, supra.

EVIDENCE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1915.

5 & 6 GEO. 5, c. 94.

5. The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, as amended by the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, shall apply to the Army Council as if the Army Council was mentioned in the first column of the Schedule to the first-mentioned Act, and as if two members of the Army Council, or the Secretary to the Army Council, or any person authorised by the Army Council to act on their behalf, were mentioned in the second column of that Schedule, and shall apply to the Secretary for Scotland as if the Secretary for Scotland were mentioned in the first column of the said Schedule and as if the Secretary for Scotland, or an Under Secretary or Assistant Under Secretary for Scotland were mentioned in the second column of that Schedule, and shall apply to the Local Government Board for Ireland as if the Local Government Board for Ireland were mentioned in the first column of the said Schedule, and as if a commissioner of the Local Government Board for Ireland or a secretary or assistant secretary of the said Board were mentioned in the second column of that Schedule.

[Note.—Secs. 1 to 4 of this Act were temporary provisions applying during the war.]

LARCENY ACT, 1916.

6 & 7 GEO. 5, c. 50.

43.—(1) Whenever any person is being proceeded against for receiving any property, knowing it to have been stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, for the purpose of proving guilty knowledge there may be given in evidence at any stage of the proceedings—

- (a) the fact that other property stolen within the period of twelve months preceding the date of the offence charged was found or had been in his possession;
- (b) the fact that within the five years preceding the date of the offence charged he was convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty.

This last mentioned fact may not be proved unless—

- (i) Seven days' notice in writing has been given to the offender that proof of such previous conviction is intended to be given;
- (ii) Evidence has been given that the property in respect of which the offender is being tried was found or had been in his possession.

(2) No person shall be liable to be convicted of any offence against sections six, seven, sub-section (1), twenty, twenty-one, and twenty-two of this Act upon any evidence whatever in respect of any act done by him, if at any time previously to his being charged with such offence he has first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity, in any action, suit, or proceeding which has been bonâ fide instituted by any person aggrieved.

(3) In any proceedings in respect of any offence against sections six, seven, sub-section (1), twenty, twenty-one, and twenty-two of this Act, a statement or admission made by any person in any compulsory examination or deposition before any court on the hearing of any matter in bankruptcy shall not be admissible in evidence against that person.

[Note.—Sub-s. (1) of this section repeals, but substantially re-enacts s. 19 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (ante, p. 447), except that the date from which the twelve months and five years respectively are to run is now declared to be "the date of the offence charged" (and not, as was formerly contended, the date of the commencement of the proceedings).

Sub-ss. (2) and (3). The effect of these sub-sections is dealt with ante, p. 437.]

MINISTRY OF PENSIONS ACT, 1916.

6 & 7 GEO. 5, c. 65.

6.—(5) The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, as amended by the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, shall apply to the Minister of Pensions as if that Minister were mentioned in the first column of the Schedule to the first-mentioned Act, and as if the Minister, or a secretary to the Ministry, or any person authorised by the Minister to act on his behalf was mentioned in the second column of that Schedule.

AIR FORCE (CONSTITUTION) ACT, 1917.

7 & 8 GEO. 5, c. 51.

10.—(5) The Documentary Evidence Act, 1868, as amended by the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, shall apply to the Air Council as if that Council were mentioned in the first column of the Schedule to the first-mentioned Act, and as if the President or a Secretary of the Council, or any person authorised by the President to act on behalf of the Council, was mentioned in the second column of that Schedule.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE ACT, 1920.

10 & 11 GEO. 5, c. 81.

15. Where for the purpose of disposing of any action or other matter which is being tried by a judge with a jury in any court in England or Wales it is necessary to ascertain the law of any other country which is applicable to the facts of the case, any question as to the effect of the evidence given with respect to that law shall, instead of being submitted to the jury, be decided by the judge alone.

TRIBUNALS OF INQUIRY (EVIDENCE) ACT, 1921.

11 GEO. 5, c. 7.

1.—(1) Where it has been resolved (whether before or after the commencement of this Act) by both Houses of Parliament that it is expedient that a tribunal be established for inquiring into a definite matter described in the Resolution as of urgent public importance, and in pursuance of the Resolution a tribunal is appointed for the purpose either by His Majesty or a Secretary of State, the instrument by which the tribunal is appointed or any instrument supplemental thereto may provide that this Act shall apply, and in such case the tribunal shall have all such powers, rights, and privileges as are vested in the High Court, or in Scotland the Court of Session, or a judge of either such court, on the occasion of an action in respect of the following matters:—

- (a) The enforcing the attendance of witnesses and examining them on oath, affirmation, or otherwise;
- (b) The compelling the production of documents;
- (c) Subject to rules of court, the issuing of a commission or request to examine witnesses abroad;

and a summons signed by one or more of the members of the tribunal may be substituted for and shall be equivalent to any formal process capable of being issued in any action for enforcing the attendance of witnesses and compelling the production of documents.

(2) If any person—

- (a) on being duly summoned as a witness before a tribunal makes default in attending; or
- (b) being in attendance as a witness refuses to take an oath legally required by the tribunal to be taken, or to produce any document in his power or control legally required by the tribunal to be produced by him, or to answer any question to which the tribunal may legally require an answer; or
- (c) does any other thing which would, if the tribunal had been a court of law having power to commit for contempt, have been contempt of that court;

the chairman of the tribunal may certify the offence of that person under his hand to the High Court, or in Scotland the Court of Session, and the court may thereupon inquire into the alleged offence and after hearing any witnesses who may be produced against or on behalf of the person charged with the offence, and after hearing any statement that may be offered in defence, punish or take steps for the punishment of that person in like manner as if he had been guilty of contempt of the court.

(3) A witness before any such tribunal shall be entitled to the same immunities and privileges as if he were a witness before the High Court or the Court of Session.

2. A tribunal to which this Act is so applied as aforesaid—

- (a) shall not refuse to allow the public or any portion of the public to be present at any of the proceedings of the tribunal unless in the opinion of the tribunal it is in the public interest expedient so to do for reasons connected with the subject matter of the inquiry or the nature of the evidence to be given; and
- (b) shall have power to authorise the representation before them of any person appearing to them to be interested to be by counsel or solicitor or otherwise, or to refuse to allow such representation.

ORDER XIX.

Pleading Generally.

Every allegation of fact in any pleading not being a party's defence, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be admitted in the pleading of the opposite party, shall be deemed to be admitted, except as against an infant, lunatic, or person of unsound mind not so found by a jury.

No party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side, unless the same has first been specifically denied by the other party, or a bill of particulars where the bill is only on the bill, and not for the consideration of a particular ground of defence.

ORDER XXX.

SUMMONS FOR DISCOVERY.

In the hearing of the summons, the court or a judge may direct that evidence of any particular fact, to be specified in the order, shall be given by statement on oath of information and belief, or by affidavit, or by deposition or otherwise in books, or by copies of documents, or otherwise as the court or judge may direct.

ORDER XXXI.

Discovery and Inspection.

The court or a judge may direct the plaintiff or defendant, by leave of the court or a judge, to deliver, or to produce, or to permit to be inspected, for the

PART III.

RULES OF THE SUPREME COURT, 1883, RELATING TO EVIDENCE.

ORDER XIX.

PLEADING GENERALLY.

13. Every allegation of fact in any pleading, not being a petition or summons, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the opposite party, shall be taken to be admitted, except as against an infant, lunatic, or person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition.

25. Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side, unless the same has first been specifically denied (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim).

ORDER XXX.

SUMMONS FOR DIRECTIONS.

7. On the hearing of the summons, the court, or a judge may order that evidence of any particular fact, to be specified in the order, shall be given by statement on oath of information and belief, or by production of documents or entries in books, or by copies of documents or entries or otherwise as the court or judge may direct.

ORDER XXXI.

DISCOVERY AND INSPECTION.

1. In any cause or matter the plaintiff or defendant by leave of the court or a judge may deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite parties, or any one or more of such parties, and such interrogatories when delivered shall have a note at the foot thereof, stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer: Provided that no party shall deliver more than one set of interrogatories to the same party without an order for that purpose: Provided also that interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the cause or matter shall be deemed irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross-examination of a witness.

2. A copy of the interrogatories proposed to be delivered shall be delivered with the summons or notice of application for leave to deliver them, at least two clear days before the hearing thereof (unless in any case the court or judge shall think fit to dispense with this requirement) and the particular interrogatories sought to be delivered shall be submitted to and considered by the court or judge. In deciding upon such application, the court or judge shall take into account any offer, which may be made by the party sought to be interrogated, to deliver particulars, or to make admissions, or to produce documents relating to any matter in question, and leave shall be given as to such only of the interrogatories submitted as shall be considered necessary either for disposing fairly of the cause or matter or for saving costs.

8. Interrogatories shall be answered by affidavit to be filed within ten days, or within such other time as a judge may allow.

19A.—(1) Where inspection of any business books is applied for, the court or a judge may, if they or he shall think fit, instead of ordering inspection of the original books, order a copy of any entries therein to be furnished and verified by the affidavit of some person who has examined the copy with the original entries, and such affidavit shall state whether or not there are in the original book any and what erasures, interlineations, or alterations. Provided that, notwithstanding that such copy has been supplied, the court or a judge may order inspection of the book from which the copy was made.

24. Any party may, at the trial of a cause, matter, or issue, use in evidence any one or more of the answers or any part of an answer of the opposite party to interrogatories without putting in the others or the whole of such answer: Provided always, that in such case the judge may look at the whole of the answers, and if he shall be of opinion that any others of them are so connected with those put in that the last-mentioned answers ought not to be used without them, he may direct them to be put in.

ORDER XXXII.

ADMISSIONS.

1. Any party to a cause or matter may give notice, by his pleading, or otherwise in writing, that he admits the truth of the whole or any part of the case of any other party.

2. Either party may call upon the other party to admit any document, saving all just exceptions; . . .

4. Any party may, by notice in writing, at any time not later than nine days before the day for which notice of trial has been given, call on any other party to admit, for the purposes of the cause, matter, or issue only, any specific fact or facts mentioned in such notice. . . . Provided that any admission made in pursuance of such notice is to be deemed to be made only for the purposes of the particular cause, matter, or issue, and not as an admission to be used against the party on any other occasion or in favour of any person other than the party giving the notice; provided also, that the court or a judge may at any time allow any party to amend or withdraw any admission so made on such terms as may be just.

7. An affidavit of the solicitor or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of any notice to admit documents or facts, shall be sufficient evidence of such admissions, if evidence thereof be required.

ORDER XXXIII.

ISSUES, INQUIRIES, AND ACCOUNTS.

3. The court or a judge may, either by the judgment or order directing an account to be taken or by any subsequent order, give special directions with regard to the mode in which the account is to be taken or vouched, and in particular may direct that in taking the account, the books of account in which the accounts in question have been kept shall be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained, with liberty to the parties interested to take such objections thereto as they may be advised.

ORDER XXXVI.

TRIAL.

VII. Proceedings at Trial.

31. If, when a trial is called on, the plaintiff appears, and the defendant does not appear, then the plaintiff may prove his claim, so far as the burden of proof lies upon him.

32. If, when a trial is called on, the defendant appears, and the plaintiff does not appear, the defendant, if he has no counter-claim, shall be entitled to judgment dismissing the action, but if he has a counter-claim, then he may prove such counter-claim so far as the burden of proof lies upon him.

36. Upon a trial with a jury, the addresses to the jury shall be regulated as follows: the party who begins, or his counsel, shall be allowed at the close of his case, if his opponent does not announce any intention to adduce evidence, to address the jury a second time for the purpose of summing up the evidence, and the opposite party, or his counsel, shall be allowed to open his case, and also to sum up the evidence, if any, and the right to reply shall be the same as heretofore.

37. In actions for libel or slander, in which the defendant does not by his defence assert the truth of the statement complained of, the defendant shall not be entitled on the trial to give evidence in chief, with a view to mitigation of damages, as to the circumstances under which the libel or slander was published, or as to the character of the plaintiff, without the leave of the judge, unless seven days at least before the trial he furnishes particulars to the plaintiff of the matters as to which he intends to give evidence.

38. The judge may in all cases disallow any questions put in cross-examination of any party or other witness which may appear to him to be vexatious, and not relevant to any matter proper to be inquired into in the cause or matter.

49. Subject to any order to be made by the court or judge ordering the same, evidence shall be taken at any trial before a referee, and the attendance of witnesses may be enforced by subpœna, and every such trial shall be conducted in the same manner, as nearly as circumstances will admit, as trials are conducted before a judge.

IX. Writ of Inquiry and Reference as to Damages.

56. The provisions of Rules . . . 36 and 37 of this Order, shall, with the necessary modifications, apply to an inquiry, pursuant to a writ of inquiry.

ORDER XXXVII.

I. EVIDENCE GENERALLY.

1. In the absence of any agreement in writing between the solicitors of all parties, and subject to these rules, the witnesses at the trial of any action or at any assessment of damages shall be examined vivâ voce and in open court, but the court or a judge may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing or trial, on such conditions as the court or judge may think reasonable, or that any witness whose attendance in court ought for some sufficient cause to be dispensed with be examined by interrogatories or otherwise before a commissioner or examiner; provided that, where it appears to the court or judge that the other party bonâ fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorising the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit.

3. An order to read evidence taken in another cause or matter shall not be necessary, but such evidence may, saving all just exceptions, be read on ex parte applications by leave of the court or a judge, to be obtained at the time of making any such application and in any other case upon the party desiring to use such evidence giving two days' previous notice to the other parties of his intention to read such evidence.

4. Office copies of all writs, records, pleadings, and documents filed in the High Court of Justice shall be admissible in evidence in all causes and matters and between all persons or parties, to the same extent as the original would be admissible.

II. EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

5. The court or a judge may, in any cause or matter where it shall appear necessary for the purposes of justice, make any order for the examination upon oath before the court or judge or any officer of the court, or any other person, and at any place, of any witness or person, and may empower any party to any such cause or matter to give such deposition in evidence therein on such terms, if any, as the court or a judge may direct.

6a. If in any case the court or a judge shall so order, there shall be issued a request to examine witnesses in lieu of a commission.

7. The court or a judge may in any cause or matter at any stage of the proceedings order the attendance of any person for the purpose of producing any writings or other documents named in the order which the court or judge may think fit to be produced: Provided that no person shall be compelled to produce under any such order any writing or other document which he could not be compelled to produce at the hearing or trial.

10. Where any witness or person is ordered to be examined before any officer of the court, or before any person appointed for the purpose, the person taking the examination shall be furnished by the party on whose application the order was made with a copy of the writ and pleadings, if any, or with a copy of the documents necessary to inform the person taking the examination of the questions at issue between the parties.

11. The examination shall take place in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents, and the witnesses shall be subject to cross-examination and re-examination.

12. The depositions taken before an officer of the court, or before any other person appointed to take the examination, shall be taken down in writing by or in the presence of the examiner, not ordinarily by question and answer, but so as to represent as nearly as may be the statement of the witness, and when completed shall be read over to the witness and signed by him in the presence of the parties, or such of them as may think fit to attend. If the witness shall refuse to sign the depositions, the examiner shall sign the same. The examiner may put down any particular question or answer if there should appear any special reason for doing so, and may put any question to the witness as to the meaning of any answer, or as to any matter arising in the course of the examination. Any questions which may be objected to shall be taken down by the examiner in the depositions, and he shall state his opinion thereon to the counsel, solicitors, or parties, and shall refer to such statement in the depositions, but he shall not have power to decide upon the materiality or relevancy of any question.

14. If any witness shall object to any question which may be put to him before an examiner, the question so put, and the objection of the witness thereto, shall be taken down by the examiner, and transmitted by him to the Central Office to be there filed, and the validity of the objection shall be decided by the court or a judge.

16. When the examination of any witness before any examiner shall have been concluded, the original depositions, authenticated by the signature of the examiner, shall be transmitted by him to the Central Office, and there filed.

18. Except where by this Order otherwise provided, or directed by the court or a judge, no deposition shall be given in evidence at the hearing or trial of the cause or matter without the consent of the party against whom the same may be offered, unless the court or judge is satisfied that the deponent is dead, or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, or unable from sickness or other infirmity to attend the hearing or trial, in any of which cases the depositions certified under the hand of the person taking the examination shall be admissible in evidence saving all just exceptions without proof of the signature to such certificate.

19. Any officer of the court, or other person directed to take the examination of any witness or person, may administer oaths.

20. Any party in any cause or matter may be subpœna ad testificandum or duces tecum require the attendance of any witness before an officer of the court, or other person appointed to take the examination for the purpose of using his evidence upon any proceeding in the cause or matter in like manner as such witness would be bound to attend and be examined at the hearing or trial; and any party or witness having made an affidavit to be used or which shall be used on any proceeding in the cause or matter shall be bound on being served with such subpœna to attend before such officer or person for cross-examination.

21. Evidence taken subsequently to the hearing or trial of any cause or matter shall be taken as nearly as may be in the same manner as evidence taken at or with a view to a trial.

22. The practice with reference to the examination, cross-examination, and re-examination of witnesses at a trial shall extend and be applicable to evidence taken in any cause or matter at any stage.

23. The practice of the court with respect to evidence at a trial, when applied to evidence to be taken before an officer of the court or other person in any cause or matter after the hearing or trial, shall be subject to any special directions which may be given in any case.

24. No affidavit or deposition filed or made before issue joined in any cause or matter shall without special leave of the court or a judge be received at the hearing or trial thereof, unless within one month after issue joined, or within such longer time as may be allowed by special leave of the court or a judge, notice in writing shall have been given by the party intending to use the same to the opposite party of his intention in that behalf.

25. All evidence taken at the hearing or trial of any cause or matter may be used in any subsequent proceedings in the same cause or matter.

IV. PERPETUATING TESTIMONY.

35. Any person who would under the circumstances alleged by him to exist become entitled, upon the happening of any future event, to any honour, title, dignity, or office, or to any estate or interest in any property, real or personal, the right or claim to which cannot by him be brought to trial before the happening of such event, may commence an action to perpetuate any testimony, which may be material for establishing such right or claim.

ORDER XXXVIII.

I. AFFIDAVITS AND DEPOSITIONS.

1. Upon any motion, petition, or summons evidence may be given by affidavit; but the court or a judge may, on the application of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the person making any such affidavit.

3. Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as to the witness is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory motions, on which statements as to his belief, with the grounds thereof, may be admitted. . . .

21. All affidavits which have been previously made and read in court upon any proceeding in a cause or matter may be used before the judge in chambers.

28. When the evidence is taken by affidavit, any party desiring to cross-examine a deponent who has made an affidavit filed on behalf of the opposite party may serve upon the party by whom such affidavit has been filed, a notice in writing, requiring the production of the deponent for cross-examination at the trial, such notice to be served at any time before the expiration of fourteen days next after the end of the time allowed for filing affidavits in reply, or within such time as in any case the court or a judge may specially appoint; and unless such deponent is produced accordingly, his affidavit shall not be used as evidence unless by the special leave of the court or a judge. . . .

ORDER XXXIX.

MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

6. A new trial shall not be granted on the ground of misdirection or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or because the verdict of the jury was not taken upon a question which the judge at the trial was not asked to leave to them, unless in the opinion of the court to which the application is made some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial; and if it appear to such court that such wrong or miscarriage affects part only of the matter in controversy, or some or one only of the parties, the court may give final judgment as to part thereof, or some or one only of the parties, and direct a new trial as to the other part only or as to the other party or parties.

ORDER L.

INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS.

3. It shall be lawful for the court or a judge, upon the application of any party to a cause or matter, and upon such terms as may be just, to make any order for the detention, preservation, or inspection of any property or thing, being the subject of such cause or matter, or as to which any question may arise therein, and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, to authorise any persons to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any party to such cause or matter, and for all or any of the purposes aforesaid to authorise any samples to be taken, or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence.

4. It shall be lawful for any judge, by whom any cause or matter may be heard or tried with or without a jury, or before whom any cause or matter may be brought by way of appeal, to inspect any property or thing concerning which any question may arise therein.

5. The provisions of rule 3 of this order shall apply to inspection by a jury, and in such case the court or a judge may make all such orders upon the sheriff or other person as may be necessary to procure the attendance of a special or common jury at such time and place, and in such manner as they or he may think fit.

ORDER LV.

CHAMBERS IN THE CHANCERY DIVISION.

IV.—Assistance of Experts.

19. The judge in chambers may, in such way as he thinks fit, obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, and other scientific persons the better to enable any matter at once to be determined, and he may act upon the certificate of any such person.

ORDER LVIII.

APPEALS TO THE COURT OF APPEAL.

4. The Court of Appeal shall have all the powers and duties as to amendment and otherwise of the High Court, together with full discretionary power to receive further evidence upon questions of fact, such evidence to be either by oral examination in court, by affidavit, or by deposition taken before an examiner or commissioner. Such further evidence may be given without special leave upon interlocutory applications, or in any case as to matters which have occurred after the date of the decision from which the appeal is brought. Upon appeals from a judgment after trial or hearing of any cause or matter upon the merits, such further evidence (save as to matters subsequent as aforesaid) shall be admitted on special grounds only, and not without special leave of the court. The Court of Appeal shall have power to draw inferences of fact and to give any judgment and make any order which ought to have been made, and to make such further or other order as the case may require. The powers aforesaid may be exercised by the said court, notwithstanding that the notice of appeal may be that part only of the decision may be reversed or varied, and such powers may also be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have appealed from or complained of the decision. . . .

11. When any question of fact is involved in an appeal, the evidence taken in the court below bearing on such question shall, subject to any special order, be brought before the Court of Appeal as follows:—

(a) As to any evidence taken by affidavit, by the production of printed copies of such of the affidavits as have been printed, and office copies of such of them as have not been printed;

(b) As to any evidence given orally, by the production of a copy of the judge's notes, or such other materials as the court may deem expedient.

13. If, upon the hearing of an appeal, a question arise as to the ruling or direction of the judge to a jury or assessors, the court shall have regard to verified notes or other evidence, and to such other materials as the court may deem expedient.

ORDER LIX.

DIVISIONAL COURTS.

7. On any motion by way of appeal from an inferior court, the court to which any such appeal may be brought shall have power to draw all inferences of fact which might have been drawn in the court below, and to give any judgment and make any order which ought to have been made. No such motion shall succeed on the ground merely of misdirection or improper reception or rejection of evidence, unless, in the opinion of the court, substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the court below.

8. On any motion by way of appeal from an inferior court, the court to which any such appeal may be brought shall have power, if the notes of the judge of such inferior court are not produced, to hear and determine such appeal upon any other evidence or statement of what occurred before such judge which the court may deem sufficient.

13. It shall be the duty of the Master of the Crown Office Department forthwith upon the entry of the appeal to apply on behalf of the High Court to the judge of the inferior court from which the appeal is brought for a copy of the notes of the evidence given, and for a statement of his judgment or finding on any question of law under appeal. Either party shall be entitled, upon payment of the proper fee, to obtain from the Crown Office Department an office copy of such notes and statement.

ORDER LXI.

CENTRAL OFFICE.

7. All copies, certificates, and other documents appearing to be sealed with a seal of the Central Office shall be presumed to be office copies or certificates or other documents issued from the Central Office, and if duly stamped may be received in evidence, and no signature or other formality, except the sealing with a seal of the Central Office, shall be required for the authentication of any such copy, certificate, or other document.

APPENDIX
OF

(The Appendixes to the)

WATTS AND GIBBS

APPENDICES.

I. TABLE OF ADMISSIBILITY.

II. MODES OF PROOF OF PARTICULAR MATTERS.

Admission of evidence of facts to which the law is applicable
 To prove death of testator or intestate
 To prove date of birth
 To prove date of death
 To prove date of marriage
 To prove date of divorce
 To prove date of separation
 To prove date of cohabitation
 To prove date of desertion
 To prove date of adultery
 To prove date of bigamy
 To prove date of conspiracy
 To prove date of fraud
 To prove date of forgery
 To prove date of perjury
 To prove date of libel
 To prove date of slander
 To prove date of trespass
 To prove date of nuisance
 To prove date of breach of contract
 To prove date of breach of trust
 To prove date of breach of duty
 To prove date of breach of promise
 To prove date of breach of covenant
 To prove date of breach of warranty
 To prove date of breach of condition
 To prove date of breach of agreement
 To prove date of breach of understanding
 To prove date of breach of confidence
 To prove date of breach of secrecy
 To prove date of breach of privacy
 To prove date of breach of public decency
 To prove date of breach of public order
 To prove date of breach of public safety
 To prove date of breach of public health
 To prove date of breach of public morals
 To prove date of breach of public policy
 To prove date of breach of public interest
 To prove date of breach of public convenience
 To prove date of breach of public utility
 To prove date of breach of public right
 To prove date of breach of public duty
 To prove date of breach of public obligation
 To prove date of breach of public responsibility
 To prove date of breach of public liability
 To prove date of breach of public accountability
 To prove date of breach of public transparency
 To prove date of breach of public honesty
 To prove date of breach of public integrity
 To prove date of breach of public fidelity
 To prove date of breach of public loyalty
 To prove date of breach of public patriotism
 To prove date of breach of public religion
 To prove date of breach of public morality
 To prove date of breach of public justice
 To prove date of breach of public equity
 To prove date of breach of public conscience
 To prove date of breach of public honor
 To prove date of breach of public respect
 To prove date of breach of public esteem
 To prove date of breach of public reputation
 To prove date of breach of public credit
 To prove date of breach of public confidence
 To prove date of breach of public trust
 To prove date of breach of public affection
 To prove date of breach of public friendship
 To prove date of breach of public love
 To prove date of breach of public charity
 To prove date of breach of public generosity
 To prove date of breach of public kindness
 To prove date of breach of public compassion
 To prove date of breach of public mercy
 To prove date of breach of public forgiveness
 To prove date of breach of public patience
 To prove date of breach of public forbearance
 To prove date of breach of public self-control
 To prove date of breach of public self-restraint
 To prove date of breach of public self-discipline
 To prove date of breach of public self-respect
 To prove date of breach of public self-esteem
 To prove date of breach of public self-love
 To prove date of breach of public self-interest
 To prove date of breach of public self-preservation
 To prove date of breach of public self-defense
 To prove date of breach of public self-protection
 To prove date of breach of public self-sufficiency
 To prove date of breach of public self-reliance
 To prove date of breach of public self-dependence
 To prove date of breach of public self-assertion
 To prove date of breach of public self-assertiveness
 To prove date of breach of public self-assertion
 To prove date of breach of public self-assertiveness
 To prove date of breach of public self-assertion
 To prove date of breach of public self-assertiveness

APPENDIX

TABLE OF

(The figures in brackets refer

MATTERS ADMISSIBLE.	FOR PURPOSES SPECIFIED.
Absence for seven years ...	To raise presumption of death of absent person.
Do.	To prove death of cestui que vie
Do.	To rebut charge of bigamy
Admission	To prove facts admitted
Books, generally	As admission
Do.	As declaration against interest
Books, log	As declaration in course of duty
Do.	As evidence of matter stated in pursuance of Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.
Books, tradesmen's	As declaration in course of duty
Do.	As evidence of goods delivered or work done, under Shop Book Debts Act, 1609.
Books, public	To prove statements therein
Books, wages	To prove wages paid
Character of plaintiff ...	To prove or disprove fact in issue
Do.	To regulate damages
Do.	Do.
Character of person seduced	Do.
Character of prisoner ...	To support or rebut charge
Do.	To prove intent to commit felony

NUMBER I.

ADMISSIBILITY.

(to the pages of this book.)

IN CASES SPECIFIED.	UNDER CONDITIONS SPECIFIED.
Generally	If witness likely to have heard from absent person (28).
Recovery of land	No conditions (31).
Bigamy	Do. (31).
Generally	Do. (155).
Do.	Do. (156).
Do.	Do. (196).
Do.	See "Declarations in course of duty" (193).
Do.	If made in official log in accordance with Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (438).
Do.	See "Declarations in course of duty" (191).
Do.	If made within one year, unless action between tradesman and tradesman (384).
In action by shopkeeper ...	No conditions (234).
Generally	Do. (449, 464).
Proceedings under Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, or Children Act, 1908	Do. (94, 106).
Where plaintiff's character in issue, e.g., defamation.	No conditions, except 7 days' notice in defamation (94, 108).
Where character material to damages, e.g., breach of promise, defamation where truth not pleaded.	No conditions (94, 109).
Damages for adultery ...	Do. (94, 108).
Seduction	If prisoner introduces the evidence (94, 109).
Criminal	No conditions (94, 420).
Vagrancy

MATTERS ADMISSIBLE.	FOR PURPOSES SPECIFIED.
Character of prisoner ...	To prove leading persistently dishonest or criminal life.
Do.	To prove purpose prejudicial to State... ..
Character of prosecutrix ...	To rebut charge
Character of wife	To regulate damages
Character of witness	To discredit witness
Circumstances of person ...	To prove or disprove act
Cohabitation	To prove marriage
Complaints	To corroborate prosecutrix
Conduct	To prove act alleged
Do.	Do.
Do.	To prove state of mind
Do.	As admission
Do.	As estoppel
Do.	As declaration
Confession	To prove crime
Conviction	As declaration of public or general right ...
Conviction of plaintiff ...	To prove commission of crime
Conviction of prisoner:—
(a) Of any crime	To prove plea of autrefois convict
Do.	To prove essential part of charge
Do.	To adjust sentence
Do.	To rebut evidence of prisoner's good character.
Do.	Do.
(b) Of felony	Do.
(c) Of coinage offence ...	Do.
(d) Of fraud or dishonesty	To show guilty knowledge
Conviction of witness ...	To discredit witness
Course of business or duty...	To prove act done in private office
Do.	To raise presumption of act done in public office.
Custom	To attach obligations to contracting parties, explain terms, etc.
Declaration as to cause of death.	To prove circumstances of declarant's death.
Declaration in course of duty	To prove facts stated strictly in accordance with duty.
Declaration against pecuniary interest.	To prove any facts stated in declaration ...

IN CASES SPECIFIED.	UNDER CONDITIONS SPECIFIED.
Habitual criminality ...	No conditions (95, 457).
Spying ...	Do. (95, 469).
Rape and assaults on females	Do. (94, 112).
Damages for adultery ...	Do. (94, 109).
Generally ...	If such witness called by opponent (288).
Do. ...	No conditions (61).
Do. ...	Do. (90).
Rape and assaults on females	After prosecutrix's evidence of facts (76).
Generally ...	If part of same transaction (63).
Do. ...	If connected with act alleged (58, 98).
Do. ...	If similar, or part of system (99).
Do. ...	If subsequent to act alleged (58, 160).
Do. ...	If intended or likely to induce person to act (49).
Pedigree cases ...	On proof of relationship and death of declarant (154, 211).
Criminal ...	On proof that it was free and voluntary (181).
Where public or general right in question ...	On proof of competency of Court (215, 219).
Civil ...	If plaintiff claims right resulting from such crime (95, 113).
Criminal ...	On proof of identity of charges (96).
Do. ...	No conditions (95, 456).
Do. ...	After verdict of guilty (96).
Offences under Larceny Act, 1861.	If prisoner gives evidence of good character (96, 410).
Offences under Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871.	Do. (96, 420).
Non-capital felonies ...	Do. (96, 390).
Coinage offences ...	Do. (96, 411).
Receiving stolen goods ...	After proof of receiving, and such conviction within 5 years (96, 421).
Generally ...	If witness denies conviction (282, 413).
Do. ...	No conditions (83).
Do. ...	Do. (31).
Do. ...	If custom general as regards subject-matter (351, 354).
Homicide of declarant ...	On proof of (a) declarant's expectation of death at time, (b) declarant's death (220).
Generally ...	On proof of (a) declarant's duty to third person to do act and state fact as appears, (b) absence of any interest to misrepresent, (c) declarant's death (191).
Do. ...	On proof of (a) declarant's apparently conflicting pecuniary interest, (b) declarant's death (196).

MATTERS ADMISSIBLE.	FOR PURPOSES SPECIFIED.
Declaration against proprietary interest.	To prove facts stated against such interest.
Declaration as to pedigree.	To prove relationship, or any fact on which it depends.
Declaration as to public or general right.	To prove actual right itself
Declaration as to will ...	To prove validity or contents of will ...
Document, copy of	To prove contents or terms of original ...
Document, parol evidence of	Do.
Document, original of ...	To prove contents or terms
Judgments	To raise estoppel of parties thereto or their privies.
Do.	As evidence against parties thereto or their privies.
Long use or enjoyment ...	To prove lawful origin
Maps and plans, private ...	As admission
Do.	As declaration of public or general right ...
Maps and plans, public ...	To prove matters of public or general interest.
Motive	To prove act alleged
Opinion	To explain matters of science or art
Do.	To prove matters which cannot be sworn to positively.
Opportunity	To prove act alleged
Physical objects	To show their nature, qualities, etc. ...
Possession of property ...	To prove ownership
Do.	To prove larceny by, or guilty knowledge of, possessor.

IN CASES SPECIFIED.	UNDER CONDITIONS SPECIFIED.
Where question as to interest in land.	On proof of (a) declarant's possession of land, (b) declarant's death (200).
Pedigree cases	On proof of (a) declarant's relationship to family, (b) declaration before dispute arose, (c) declarant's death (202).
Where public or general right in question.	On proof of (a) declarant's competency to make declaration, (b) declarant's death (212).
Where validity or contents of will in issue.	On proof of (a) declarant's identity with testator, (b) declarant's death (225).
Generally	On proof of (a) notice to opponent to produce original, or subpœna to stranger to produce original, and lawful refusal to produce, or loss or destruction of original, or physical or legal impossibility to produce original, (b) correctness of copy, (c) proper execution (305, 314).
Do.	Do. do. do.
Do.	On proof of (a) proper execution, or (b) production from proper custody if 30 years old (326, 332).
Do.	If pleaded as estoppel (40).
Do.	No conditions (44).
Do.	Do. (32).
Do.	If prepared by party against whom put in evidence, or his privies (156).
Where public or general right in question.	On proof of maker's competency as declarant (215).
Generally	If really a public document (237).
Do.	No conditions (58).
Do.	On proof of competency of witness as expert (115, 118).
Do.	No conditions (116, 121).
Generally	No conditions (61).
Do.	On proof of identity (365).
Do.	No conditions (84).
Larceny or receiving stolen goods.	On proof that the goods were recently stolen (87).

MATTERS ADMISSIBLE.	FOR PURPOSES SPECIFIED.
Possession of property ...	To prove guilty knowledge of larceny of other goods.
Prejudice of witness ...	To discredit witness
Preparation	To prove act alleged
Proclamations, etc.	To prove statements therein
Public documents generally	Do.
Reputation	To prove marriage
Do.	As declaration in pedigree
Do.	As declaration of public or general right ...
Statements of party... ..	To prove act alleged
Do.	As admission
Statements of prosecutrix...	To corroborate prosecutrix
Statements of witness ...	To discredit witness
Statutes, public	To prove statements therein
Statutes, private	Do.
Do.	As declaration of public or general right ...
Things	To show their nature, qualities, etc. ...
Usages	To attach obligations to contracting parties, explain terms, etc.

IN CASES SPECIFIED.	UNDER CONDITIONS SPECIFIED.
Receiving stolen goods ...	On proof that the goods were stolen within previous 12 months (94, 447, 504).
Generally	If witness denies it on cross-examination (295, 301).
Do.	No conditions (61).
Do.	Do. (251).
Do.	Do. (247).
Do.	Do. (95).
Pedigree cases	On proof of reputation in family before dispute arose (220).
Where public or general right in question.	On proof of reputation in neighbourhood before dispute arose (221).
Generally	If part of same transaction (67).
Do.	If subsequent to act alleged (61, 166).
Rape and assaults on females	After prosecutrix's evidence of facts (80).
Generally	If witness does not admit making statement, and his attention is drawn to the circumstances; and, in case of party's own witness, leave of judge is obtained (296, 299).
Do.	No conditions (251).
Do.	If against parties thereto, or their privies (253).
Where public or general right in question.	No conditions (224).
Generally	On proof of identity (390).
Do.	If usage general as regards subject-matter (374, 376-7).

APPENDIX NUMBER II.

MODES OF PROOF OF PARTICULAR MATTERS.

(The figures in brackets refer to the pages of this book.)

1. Acquittal.—Copy of record, purporting to be certified by clerk or officer having custody of records (426).

2. Administration, Letters of.—Original, or exemplification or copy, purporting to be sealed with seal of Probate Court (Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 22).

3. Age of Person.—1. Evidence of birth (see below, 8). 2. Inspection (390, 475, 490).

4. Arrangement, Deed of.—Copy or extract, purporting to be office copy or extract (Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914, s. 25).

5. Bankers' Books.—Copy of entry, proved to be correct examined copy of entry made in ordinary course of business in ordinary book of bank under its control (450).

6. Bankruptcy Matters.—1. Copy of London Gazette—as to receiving order, adjudication, or anything stated in any notice inserted therein, e.g., annulment, discharge, composition, release or removal of trustee (500). 2. Certificate of Board of Trade—as to appointment of trustee or facts certified thereby (501). 3. Minute signed by apparent chairman of meeting—as to proceedings thereat (501). 4. Deposition, or copy thereof, purporting to be sealed with seal of Court—as to matters deposed to (501). 5. Original or copy, appearing to be sealed with seal of Court or to be signed by judge or certified by registrar—as to petitions, orders, certificates, affidavits or other documents (501).

7. Bill of Sale.—Copy of bill of sale and affidavit, purporting to be office copy thereof (Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 16).

8. Birth.—1. Evidence of person present at event (205). 2. Declaration by deceased person (205, 211). 3. Certificate under the Births and Deaths Registration Acts, 1836 and 1874, or other statute. 4. Entry in official log book of birth at sea (465).

9. Bye-law.—Mode specified by particular statute, if any, i.e., generally by copy sealed with common seal of corporation; otherwise, apparently, by verified original, or examined or certified copy (420, 426).

10. Colonial Act of State.—Copy, purporting to be sealed with seal of colony (425).

11. Colonial Judicial Proceeding.—Copy, purporting to be sealed with seal of Colonial Court, or signed by judge of such Court (425).

12. Colonial Law.—1. Evidence of expert (124). 2. Case stated and remitted by Court (433).

13. Colonial Statute.—1. Copy, with certificate of clerk or proper officer of legislative body that it is a true copy, attached thereto (Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865). 2. Copy, purporting to be printed by Government printer of colony (479).

14. Company Matters.—1. Certificate of registrar—as to incorporation or right to commence business (492). 2. Certificate under common seal—as to title to shares or stock (492). 3. Certificate of President of Board of Trade—as to orders, etc., of Board of Trade (494). 4. Order of Court—as to money due from contributory (493). 5. Register of members—as to matters authorised to be inserted therein (492). 6. Minutes, signed by apparent chairman of meeting—as to proceedings thereat (492). 7. Copy of report of inspectors, authenticated by seal of company—as to opinion of inspectors (492). 8. Books and papers of company—as to matters recorded, between contributories in winding-up (493).

15. Conviction.—1. Copy of record, or certificate purporting to be certified, or signed, by clerk or officer having custody of records—as to indictable offences (426, 440, 446). 2. Copy of conviction, purporting to be signed by justice of peace, clerk or proper officer; or extract from register of Court, certified by clerk; or copy of minute or memorandum in register, purporting to be signed by clerk—as to summary convictions (446, 451, 498).

16. Corporation Books.—Mode specified by particular statute, if any, i.e., generally by copy sealed with common seal of corporation; otherwise, apparently, by verified original, or examined or certified copy of entry of public nature, or verified original of entry of private nature (420, 426).

17. County Court Proceedings.—Entry in Court book, or copy bearing seal of Court and certified by registrar; or process purporting to be sealed with seal of Court (458).

18. Custom.—1. Evidence of its actual existence, by witnesses acquainted with subject-matter (374). 2. Evidence of particular instances of its exercise (221). 3. Evidence of similar customs in analogous trades, connected localities, etc. (374). 4. Declaration by deceased person (221, 374).

19. Death.—1. Evidence of person who saw occurrence or body (36). 2. Declaration by deceased person (211). 3. Evidence of absence for seven years (28-9). 4. Certificate under the Births and Deaths Registration Acts, 1836 and 1874, or other statute. 5. Entry in official log book of death at sea (465).

20. Foreign Act of State.—Copy, purporting to be sealed with seal of foreign State (425).

21. Foreign Judicial Proceeding.—Copy, purporting to be sealed with seal of foreign Court, or signed by judge of such Court (425).

22. Foreign Law.—1. Evidence of expert (124). 2. Case stated and remitted by Court (434).

23. Government Orders, etc.—Copy, purporting to be printed by Government printers, etc., or certified by specified officials; or copy of Gazette (420, 443, 453, 479).

24. Handwriting.—1. Evidence of witness who saw the act of writing or signing (347). 2. Opinion evidence of witness acquainted with the handwriting (348). 3. Comparison with other handwriting (350).

25. High Court Proceedings.—Office copy, appearing to be sealed with seal of Central Office (513, 519).

26. Intestacy.—1. Declaration by deceased person (212). 2. Letters of administration (see above, 2).

27. Judgment.—See above, 11 (Colonial), 17 (County Court), 21 (Foreign), and 25 (High Court).

28. Judicial Proceedings.—(See above, 1, 6, 11, 15, 17, 21, 25, and below, 39).

29. Legitimacy.—1. Proof of birth during marriage of mother (27). 2. Declaration by deceased person (211).

30. Marriage.—1. Evidence of person present at ceremony (96). 2. Declaration by deceased person (211). 3. Cohabitation and reputation (95). 4. Certificate under the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836, or other statute. 5. Entry in official log book of marriage at sea (465).

31. Naturalization.—Original certificate or copy, certified by Secretary of State or person authorised by him (British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, s. 21).

32. Ownership.—1. Production and proof of documents of title (89). 2. Possession or acts of ownership of the actual property (89). 3. Possession or acts of ownership of connected property (91). 4. Declaration by deceased person (211, 221).

33. Partnership, Limited.—Certificate of registration, or copy or extract, certified by registrar or assistant registrar (482).

34. Relationship.—1. Proof of facts under heads 8, 19 and 30, above. 2. Declaration by deceased person (211).

35. Shipping, Merchant.—1. Original register book, certificate of registry or endorsement thereon, declaration, official log book or document of Board of Trade, properly signed or sealed and produced from proper custody—as to matters stated therein by any officer in pursuance of his duties (464). 2. Copy of or extract from admissible documents, proved to be examined or purporting to be signed and certified as true copy or extract by officer with custody of original (465). 3. Deposition, signed by judge, magistrate or consular officer, if witness cannot be found in United Kingdom (466).

36. Signature.—See above, 24.

37. Statute, Private.—Copy, purporting to be printed by King's printers, or under authority of Stationery Office (420), unless passed after 1850, when no proof is required (453).

38. Title.—See above, 32.

39. Trial.—On prosecution for perjury—certificate of substance and effect of former trial, purporting to be signed by clerk or person having custody of records, (495).

40. Usage.—See above, 18.

41. Will.—1. Of personal estate—probate, letters of administration with will annexed, exemplification, or copy, purporting to be sealed with seal of Probate Court (Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 22). 2. Of real estate—if testator died after 1897, same as of personal estate; if before 1898, production of will, and proof by attesting witness if living (353), unless will thirty years old, and produced from proper custody (353-4).

52. Attesting, Limited. - Evidence of registration or copy of extract recorded by registrar or registrar (1882).

53. Testimonials. - Part of letters under heads 19 and 30 and 31. - Production by deceased person (27).

54. Shipping Merchant. - Original register book, certificate of registry, and endorsement thereon, production official for book or document of Board of Trade (1884). - Copy of extract from from previous custody, as to matters stated therein by any other in possession of his book (1884). - Copy of extract from abstracts documents, proved to be genuine or purporting to be signed and certified as true copy or extract by other will-makers of original (1885). - A location used by judge (1885) in conclusion of case, if witness cannot be found in United Kingdom (1885).

55. Signatures. - See above 31.

56. Statute, Private. - The Statute to be cited by King patrons or sole subjects, 7 Statute (1885) under head after 1830 when no proof is required (1885).

57. Title. - In possession of papers, evidence of substance and effect of former title purporting to be signed by testator, when having custody of records (1885).

58. Usage. - See above 18.

59. Will. - A. Of personal estate, - copies, letters of administration tion able will annexed, examination of copy, purporting to be sealed with seal of Probate Court (1885). - A. 1885, 1887, 1888, B. Of real estate. - If testator died after 1837, same as of personal estate; if before 1838, production of will and proof by attesting witness if living (1885). - Copies will, thirty years old, and produced from proper custody (1885-7).

60. Will, - See above 18.

61. Will, - See above 18.

62. Will, - See above 18.

63. Will, - See above 18.

64. Will, - See above 18.

65. Will, - See above 18.

66. Will, - See above 18.

67. Will, - See above 18.

INDEX.

(Reference should also be made to Appendices I. and II.)

- ABSENCE FOR SEVEN YEARS,
 presumption of death, 29
 in bigamy cases, 29
 of cestui que vie, 30
- ABSENCE OF PARTY,
 acts and statements in, 59
- ACCOMPLICES,
 corroboration of, 149
- ACCOUNTS,
 special directions as to evidence, 511
- ACQUITTAL,
 how proved, 426, 530
- ACTS DONE,
 in the same transaction, 66, 79
 in other transactions, 98, 109
 in absence of party, 59
 by conspirators, etc., 79 documents, explanatory of, 75 as evidence of ownership, 89, 91 circumstantial evidence of, 61
- ACTS OF PARLIAMENT,
 judicial notice of, 16
 statements in, 251-253
- ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE,
 generally a matter for jury, 9
- ADDUCTION OF EVIDENCE,
 before trial, 396
 at trial, 399
 on appeal, 401
 See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvii, xviii

- ADEMPTION,
presumption of, 25
- ADMINISTRATION,
how proved, 530
- ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE, question for judge, 10
table of, 522-529
- ADMISSIONS, FORMAL OR EXPRESS,
generally, 38, 509-511
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vi.
- ADMISSIONS, INFORMAL OR CASUAL,
generally, 161-187
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, x.
- ADMITTED FACTS,
no proof required, 38
- ADULTERY, evidence in cases of, 259, 260, 427, 431, 432, 445 question showing, 303, 431, 445
- ADVERSE WITNESS,
discredit of, 299, 439
inconsistent statements of, 299, 439
- AFFIDAVIT, evidence by, 255, 396, 513, 516, 518
- AFFILIATION,
corroboration required, 147, 419, 448
- AFFIRMATION,
instead of oath, 271, 273, 459
- AGE,
how proved, 390, 475, 490, 530
- AGENTS, admissions by, 181-185
estoppel of, 54
- AIR FORCE ACT, 1917
proof of proceedings under, 505
- ALTERATIONS IN DOCUMENTS,
presumption as to, 357
parol evidence as to, 372
- AMBIGUITIES IN DOCUMENTS, evidence as to, 359, 377, 385

ANCIENT DOCUMENTS,

- what are, 353
- when they require no proof, 353-4
- statements in, when evidence, 161, 247

APPEALS,

- how evidence adduced on, 401, 479, 517

ARBITRATION,

- subpœnas* issued under, 460

ARRANGEMENT, DEED OF,

- how proved, 530

ATTESTATION OF DOCUMENT,

- when required, 352
- how proved, 353, 440, 466

ATTESTING WITNESSES,

- when they must be called, 353, 440, 466

BAILEE,

- estoppel of, 54

BANKERS' BOOKS,

- copies admissible, 341, 450, 530
- production may be ordered, 450

BANKRUPT,

- compelled to answer all questions, 314
- answers are evidence against him, 500
- except in certain cases, 502

BANKRUPTCY MATTERS,

- how proved, 500, 502, 530

BASTARDY,

- corroboration required, 147, 419, 448

BEGIN, RIGHT TO,

- explanation of, 129
- how settled, 132, 139, 140

BEHIND THE BACK OF PARTY,

- acts and statements, 59

BELIEF,

- when admissible, 255, 509, 516

BEST EVIDENCE RULE,

- meaning of, 2
- its scope, 65, 154, 326

- BIAS OF WITNESSES,
evidence of, 296-301
- BIBLE,
entries in, as evidence, 212, 221
- BIGAMY,
marriages require strict proof, 96 effect of seven years' absence, 29, 31 evidence of wife or husband, admissible on charges of, 499
- BILLS OF EXCHANGE,
discrepancy as to amount, 378, 453
estoppel as to, 41, 454
presumptions as to, 25, 453, 454
- BILLS OF SALE,
attestation requisite, 353
how proved, 530
- BIRTH,
how proved, 205, 211, 465, 530
- BLASPHEMY,
corroboration required, 146
- BODILY FEELINGS,
statements as to, 72
- BOOKS, ENTRIES IN,
as admissions, 162
as declarations in course of duty, 200-205
as declarations against interest, 205-210 in business books, 510
in company books, 492-494
in corporation books, 420
in log books, 202, 465
in public books, 247
in tradesmen's books, 162, 200, 409-411, 523
in wages books, 476, 490
special order may be made as to, 509
- BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE,
corroboration required, 147, 445
evidence of character, 113 parties as witnesses, 259, 424, 445
- BURDEN OF PROOF,
generally, 129-140
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, viii, ix

- BUSINESS BOOKS,
 entries in, 510
See TRADESMEN'S BOOKS and WAGES BOOKS.
- BUSINESS, COURSE OF,
 relevancy of, 88
 presumption from, 31
 declarations in, 200
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, x
- BYE-LAWS,
 how proved, 420, 426, 531
- CALLING FOR DOCUMENT,
 effect of, 332
- CERTIFIED COPIES,
 when allowed and used, 344, 426
- CESTUI QUE VIE,
 seven years' absence of, 31
- CHARACTER,
 generally, 99, 109-110, 112
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, viii
 of plaintiff, 99, 110-113 of person seduced, 99, 113
 of prisoner, 99-101, 114, 446, 483, 497
 of prosecutrix, 99, 118
 of wife, 99, 114
 of witness, 282-4, 285, 302
 distinguished from conduct and convictions, 99
- CHATELS,
 documents treated as, 329
 production of, 390-5
- CHILDREN,
 competency of, as witnesses, 237-238, 264
 unsworn evidence of, 271, 457, 489, 499
 corroboration required, 147, 457, 489, 499
 depositions of, 398, 488-9
 presumptions as to offences against, 25, 476-7, 487-8, 490 meaning of word "children" in wills, &c., 387 dying declarations by, 237-238
- CIRCUMSTANCES OF PARTIES,
 when relevant, 64, 114, 512

- CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE,
 definition of, 2, 61
 generally, 58-65
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vii, viii
- CIVIL AND CRIMINAL CASES, differences as to evidence in, 142
- COGENCY OF EVIDENCE,
 not generally dealt with by law, 141 matters affecting, 144
- COHABITATION,
 evidence of marriage, 95
 discredit of witness, 301
- COINAGE OFFENCES,
 previous convictions, 101, 437
- COLLATERAL AGREEMENTS,
 parol evidence of, 359, 365-70
- COLONIAL ACTS OF STATE,
 how proved, 425, 531
- COLONIAL JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS,
 how proved, 425, 531
- COLONIAL LAW,
 not judicially noticed, 16, 18
 proved by experts, 125, 531
 or by case stated, 433, 531
- COLONIAL STATUTES,
 how proved, 479, 531
- COMMISSION,
 taking evidence on, 396, 418, 431
- COMMON KNOWLEDGE, matters of, judicially noticed, 21
- COMMORIENTES,
 no presumption as to, 35
- COMMUNICATIONS PRIVILEGED,
 generally, 312-325
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiv, xv
- COMPANY MATTERS,
 how proved, 492-94, 531

- COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING,
when allowed, 347, 440
- COMPELLABILITY OF WITNESSES,
generally, 258-260, 268
distinguished from competency, 258, 268
- COMPETENCY OF DECEASED DECLARANTS; on matters of public and general rights, 221, 228, of pedigree, 211
on charges of homicide, 232
- COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES,
generally, 256-258
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii
distinguished from compellability, 256, 268 of expert witnesses, 121-127
- COMPLAINTS,
generally, 80-87
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vii
- CONDITION OF THINGS,
presumption of continuance, 28
- CONDUCT,
as circumstantial evidence, 61, 65
admissions by, 162, 163-180
declarations by, 162, 220
estoppel by, 40, 50
cross-examination as to, 283
- CONDUCT ON OTHER OCCASIONS,
generally, 98, 102-109, 283
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, viii distinguished from character and convictions, 98
- CONFESSIONS,
generally, 188-198
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, x
- CONSPIRATORS,
acts and statements of, 79
- CONSTITUTIONAL MATTERS,
judicial notice of, 14, 19
- CONSTRUCTION,
of documents, 11, 359-360, 377-389
parol evidence in aid of, 377-389
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvii
of verbal contracts, 9

- CONTENTS OF WILLS, DECLARATIONS AS TO,
generally, 238-242
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii
- CONTINUANCE,
presumption of, 28, 37
- CONTRACT, VERBAL,
terms of, a matter for jury, 9
- CONTRADICTION OF WITNESSES,
generally, 292-302
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiv
- CONVICTIONS, PREVIOUS,
of plaintiff, evidence in civil case, 98, 119
of prisoner, 98, 100, 416, 435-438, 446, 483
of witness, 302, 439
how proved, 426, 439-440, 446, 451, 493, 531
distinguished from conduct and character, 98
- COPIES OF DOCUMENTS, certified, 344, 426
examined, 344, 426
office, 344, 426
printers', 344
bankers' books, 342, 450
special order as to proof by, 509
- CORONER,
depositions taken before, 398, 458
- CORPORATION BOOKS,
how proved, 420, 426, 531
- CORROBORATION,
generally, 146-153, 170-1
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, ix
- COUNSEL,
admissions by, 38-9
- COUNTERPARTS,
of documents, 329
- COUNTY COURT PROCEEDINGS,
how proved, 458, 531
- COURSE OF BUSINESS OR DUTY, public, presumption from, 31
private, relevancy of, 88
declarations in, 200-205
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, x

- COURSE OF EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES,
generally, 278-291
- COURSE OF NATURE,
judicial notice of, 21
- COURT OF APPEAL,
how evidence brought before, 401, 517
- CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES,
generally a question for jury, 6 matters to be considered, 144 guarantee of, 160
cross-examination as to, 283
- CRIMINAL AND CIVIL CASES, differences as to evidence, 142
- CRIMINAL APPEALS,
provisions as to evidence, 479-482
- CRIMINATING QUESTIONS, privilege as to, 303, 312-314, 414
- CROSS-EXAMINATION,
generally, 282-288
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiii
- CUSTODY, PROPER,
of ancient documents, 354
of public documents, 426
of shipping documents, 467
- CUSTOMS,
judicial notice of, 16
proof of, 374, 376-7, 531
- DAMAGES,
character as affecting, 99, 111, 512 burden of proof, as to, 139
- DATE OF DOCUMENT,
presumption, as to, 353
undated document, 372
- DEATH,
on charges of homicide, dying declarations as to cause of,
admissible, 232-238
such declarations generally inadmissible in other cases, 157
presumption of, 28-32
how proved, 28-32, 35-6, 211-212, 465, 532

DECEASED PERSONS,

- claims against estates of, 148, 151
- declarations by, 160-161, 199-243

DECLARATIONS BY DECEASED PERSONS,

- generally, 199-243
- in extremis*, when admissible, 157
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, x-xii

DEEDS,

- alterations in, 357
- attestation of, 351-353, 440, 466
- date of, 352
- estoppel by, 49
- execution of, 350
- party's privilege as to withholding his documents of title, 332-334

DEFAMATION,

- evidence of character, in actions for, 99, 111, 114, 512
- evidence of circumstances of libel, 114, 512

DEFINITIONS AND EXPLANATIONS OF TERMS,

- admission, 38, 161-2
- adverse witness, 299
- affirmative averment, 130-131
- affirmative in substance, 130-131
- ancient document, 353
- ante litem motam*, 211, 221
- bank, 450
- bankers, 450
- bankers' books, 451
- best evidence, 2
- burden of proof, 129
- certified copy, 344, 426
- character, 109
- circumstantial evidence, 2, 61
- commorientes, 36
- conclusive evidence, 3
- confession, 188
- confession and avoidance, 130
- copies, kinds of, 344
- corroboration, 146
- corroborative evidence, 146
- counterpart, 329
- declaration, 160, 199
- depositions, 397
- derivative evidence, 3
- direct evidence, 2, 63, 154
- distribution of issues, 130

DEFINITIONS AND EXPLANATIONS OF TERMS—continued.

- document, 391
 documentary evidence, 3
 duplicate original, 328
 estoppel, 40
 evidence, 1
 examined copy, 344, 426
 expert witness, 121
 extrinsic evidence, 3
 facts in issue, 58
 free and voluntary confession, 188
 general right, 224
 Government printers' copy, 344 guarantee of credibility, 160
 hearsay evidence, 3, 154
 hostile witness, 299, 439
 indirect evidence, 3, 63
 judicial evidence, 2 leading questions, 279
 narrative, 68
 negative averment, 131
 notice to produce, 335-6
 office copy, 344
 oral evidence, 3, 256
 original evidence, 3 parole evidence, 3, 256
 pecuniary interest, 205
 pedigree case, 211
 person in authority, 197
 pre-appointed evidence, 4
 prejudice, without, 54 presumption, 22
 presumptive evidence, 4
prima facie evidence, 4 primary evidence, 4 printers' copy, 344
 privies, 45
 proper custody, 354
 proprietary interest, 209 public document, 247 public right, 224
 real evidence, 4, 390
 recent possession, 92-94
 relevancy, 58
 relevant facts, 58
res gestæ, 66
 right to begin, 129
 secondary evidence, 4, 335

DEFINITIONS AND EXPLANATIONS OF TERMS—continued.

- second-hand evidence, 4
- subpœna*, 326
- threat or promise, 190
- transaction, 66
- traverse, 128
- voir dire*, 258
- voluntary confession, 188
- without prejudice, 54
- writing includes printing, etc., 460

DEPOSITIONS,

- generally, 396-399
- in civil cases, 396
- under Indictable Offences Act, 1848...398, 421
- under Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867...397, 441
- under Coroners Act, 1887...398, 458
- under Children Act, 1908...398, 488-489

DERIVATIVE EVIDENCE,

- meaning of, 3

DESTRUCTION OF DOCUMENT,

- secondary evidence admitted, 339

DICTIONARY,

- to refresh memory of judge, 14
- meaning of words, 387-389

DILIGENCE,

- generally a matter for jury, 9

DIRECT EVIDENCE,

- as opposed to circumstantial, 3, 58, 63
- as opposed to hearsay, 3, 63, 155

DISCREDIT OF WITNESSES,

- evidence to, 295-302, 439
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiv

DIVISIONAL COURT,

- how evidence brought before, 401, 518

DIVORCE,

- strict proof of marriage required, 96
- corroboration required, 153
- order for examination of petitioner, 433-4
- evidence as to cruelty or desertion, 434

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE,

- generally, 3, 326-389
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xv-xvii

DOCUMENTS,

- what are, 326, 333-334, 391
- alterations in, 356, 372
- ancient, 353
- attestation of, 352, 440, 466
- construction of, 11, 357, 389
- copies of, 344, 426
- counterparts of, 329
- date of, 353
- destruction of, 339
- duplicate originals, 328
- handwriting of, 347-350
- interpretation of, 11, 357, 377-389
- loss of, 339
- notice to produce, 335-6
- parol evidence respecting, 357-389
- primary evidence of, 326-334
- privilege of, 303-325
- production of, 326-334
- proof of, 326-358, 425-426
- public, 247-254, 341-344, 426
- refreshing memory, 279-282
- refusal to produce, 332, 335, 338
- res gestæ*, as, 75
- secondary evidence of, 335-346
- signature of, 347, 440
- stamping, 143, 347, 462
- subpœna* to produce, 336
- transaction, as parts of, 75
- verbal evidence respecting, 357-389

DRAFTS OF DOCUMENTS,

- when admissible, 353

DUE DILIGENCE,

- generally a matter for jury, 9

DUPLICATE ORIGINALS,

- when admissible, 328

DUTY, COURSE OF,

- presumption from, 32
- relevancy of, 88
- declarations in, 200-205
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, x

DYING DECLARATIONS,

- admissible on charges of homicide, 232-238
- generally inadmissible in other cases, 157
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xi

ENTRIES IN BOOKS,

See BOOKS.

ESTOPPEL,

generally, 40-54

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vi

EVIDENCE,

definitions of, 1-5

varieties of, 2

circumstantial, 2, 61-65

direct, 2, 58, 63, 154-159 documentary, 3, 326-389

hearsay, 3, 160-254

indirect, 3, 63

oral, 3, 255

parol, 3, 255

primary, 4, 326-334

real, 4, 390-395

secondary, 5, 326, 335-346

in former proceedings, 243-245

misreception of, 143, 516-518

weight of, 63, 144-148, 390-394

adduction, 396

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES,

generally, 278-291

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiii, xiv

EXAMINATION-IN-CHIEF,

generally, 278-282

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiii

EXAMINED COPIES,

when allowed and used, 344, 426-7

EXCEPTIONS, EXEMPTIONS, Etc., burden of proof of, 139, 424, 446, 452, 467

EXISTENCE OF THINGS,

presumption of continuance, 28

EXPERT WITNESSES,

opinion evidence of, 121-127

EXPERTS,

assistance of, 517

EXPRESS MALICE,

generally a matter for jury, 9

- EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE,
meaning of, 3
applied to documents, 358-389
- FACTS,
jury decides, 8
unless admissibility depends on, 10 relevant, what are, 58
- FACTS IN ISSUE,
what are, 58
- FAMILY, meaning of word, 388
tradition as evidence of membership of, 221
- FOREIGN ACTS OF STATE,
how proved, 425, 532
- FOREIGN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS,
how proved, 425, 532
- FOREIGN JURISDICTION,
how questions of are decided, 461
- FOREIGN LAW,
not judicially noticed, 16
proved by experts, 18, 121, 124-126, 532
or by case stated, 435, 532 decided by judge, not jury, 505
- FOREIGN STATES,
judicial notice of, 19
- FORFEITURE,
privilege as to questions showing, 312, 314-315
- FORMER PROCEEDINGS, evidence given in, 242-247, 513
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii
- FRAUD,
parol evidence of, 359, 363
- FRAUDS, STATUTE OF,
writing required by, 148, 411
- FRAUDS, STATUTE OF, AMENDMENT ACT,
writing required by, 415

- FUNCTIONS OF JUDGE AND JURY,
generally, 6-12
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, v
- GENERAL RIGHTS,
declarations as to, 221-231
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xi
- GIRLS, OFFENCES AGAINST,
corroboration required, 457
unsworn evidence of children, 264, 457, 489, 498
- GOOD FAITH,
generally a matter for jury, 9
- GOODS, SALE OF,
writing sometimes required, 148, 463
- GOVERNMENT MATTERS,
judicial notice of, 19
how proved, 420, 443-444, 453, 477-478, 532
- GUARANTEE OF CREDIBILITY, of witnesses, 160
of public documents, 247
- GUILTY KNOWLEDGE, EVIDENCE OF,
conduct on other occasions, 98, 100-101
conduct, subsequent, 61
convictions, previous, 100-101, 446
possession of property, 87-94, 446
- HABITUAL CRIMINALS,
provisions as to trial of alleged, 483-486
- HANDWRITING,
proof of, 347-350, 532
- HEALTH,
statements as to, 72-75
- HEARSAY EVIDENCE,
definition of, 3, 154
generally, 160-254
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, ix-xii
- HIGH COURT PROCEEDINGS,
how proved, 513, 519, 532
- HIGHWAY,
dedication, presumption of, 35

- HOSTILE WITNESS,
 discredit of, 299, 439
 inconsistent statements of, 299, 439
- HUSBANDS AND WIVES,
 evidence of, 260-265, 268-270
 privileged communications, 303, 427, 468-470
- IDENTIFICATION, opinion evidence, 121, 127
 of subject-matter of document, 377
- ILLEGALITY,
 parol evidence of, 359, 363
- INCOMPETENCY OF WITNESSES,
 generally, 256-258
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii
 when objection to be raised, 256, 399, 405
- INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS,
 proof of, 296-299, 439
- INCRIMINATING QUESTIONS,
 privilege as to, 303, 312-314, 414
- INDIRECT EVIDENCE,
 meaning of, 3
- INFANTS,
 competency as witnesses, 237-238, 264
 unsworn evidence of, 271, 457, 489, 499
- INNOCENCE,
 presumption of, 26, 37
- INQUIRY, TRIBUNALS OF,
 proceedings and evidence under Tribunals of Inquiry Act, 1921
 ...505-7
- INSANE PERSONS,
 competency as witnesses, 265
- INSPECTION,
 of things, premises, etc., 390-395
 of documents, 509-510
 at the trial, 390
 out of court, 414, 517
- INTENTION,
 conduct admissible to prove, 98, 104-108
 generally a matter for jury, 8

- INTEREST, DECLARATIONS AGAINST,
generally, 205-211
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, x, xi
- INTERPRETATION,
of documents, 11, 357, 377-389
of verbal contracts, 9
- INTERROGATORIES,
generally, 397, 509-510
admissions in answers to, 38
- INTESTACY,
how proved, 214, 532
- JOINT OFFENDERS, Etc.,
acts and statements of, 79
- JUDGE,
functions of, 6-12
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, v
calling witnesses, 400
- JUDGMENT, as evidence, 45
as estoppel, 41-45
when pleaded as such, 46
how proved, 425, 458-459, 513, 519, 532
- JUDICIAL NOTICE,
generally, 13-22
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vi
- JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS,
how proved, 425-426, 439-440, 446, 458, 495, 498, 500, 513, 519, 532
- JURY,
functions of, 6-12
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, v
view of place by, 414
- KNOWLEDGE, ACTUAL,
generally a matter for jury, 8
- LAND,
proof of ownership, 89-92
estoppel of tenant, 53 evidence as to meaning of term, 388

LARCENY,

- recent possession, 92-94
- previous convictions, 100, 436, 446, 503

LAW,

- judge decides questions of, 8
- judicial notice of, 13-18
- foreign, proof of, 18, 121, 532
- Colonial, proof of, 125, 433, 531

LAWFUL ORIGIN,

- presumption of, 33

LEADING QUESTIONS,

- in examination-in-chief, 278
- in cross-examination, 282
- in re-examination, 289

LEGAL ADVISERS,

- communications privileged, 315-332

LEGAL ORIGIN,

- presumption of, 33

LEGITIMACY,

- presumption of, 27
- evidenced by declarations, 214, 220

LETTERS,

- omission to reply to, 164-166
- proof of posting, 88

LETTERS OF REQUEST,

- taking evidence by, 397, 513

LIBEL,

- evidence of character, 99, 111, 114, 512
- evidence of circumstances, 114, 512

LICENSEE,

- estoppel of, 54

LIFE,

- presumption of continuance, 28, 37
- presumption of death, 30-32

LOG BOOK,

- entries in, 202, 464

LOST DOCUMENT,

- secondary evidence admitted, 339
- presumption of lost grant, 34-35

- MALICE, EXPRESS,
generally a matter for jury, 9
- MAPS,
when admissible, 162, 224, 250
- MARINE INSURANCE,
written policy required as evidence, 477 receipt for premium, when conclusive, 478 materiality a question of fact, 477 reasonableness a question of fact, 478
- MARRIAGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.
communications during, privileged, 303, 427, 468-470
proof of, 96-67, 212, 465, 532
breach of promise of, 113, 147, 257, 424, 445
- MEANING OF TERMS, evidence as to special, 11, 359, 375, 385-389
- MEMORANDUM,
refreshing memory, 279-282
under Statute of Frauds, 411
under Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 415
under Sale of Goods Act, 463
under Marine Insurance Act, 477 distinguished from transaction, 362
- MEMORY, REFRESHING,
generally, 279-282
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiii
- MERCHANT SHIPPING,
See SHIPPING.
- MISRECEPTION OF EVIDENCE,
effect of, 143, 479-480, 516
- MISTAKE,
in calling witness, 284-285
in documents, parol evidence of, 359, 363
- MODE OF PROOF,
generally, 255-395, 530-533
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii-xvii
- MOTIVE,
as circumstantial evidence of act, 61, 63
- MOTOR CARS,
speed of, corroboration required, 147, 475

NARRATIVE,

- statements after the transaction, 68-70
- inadmissibility of, 68
- admissible as complaints, 80-87
- and as admissions, 161-162
- and as dying declarations, 232

NATURALIZATION,

- how proved, 532

NATURE, COURSE OF,

- judicial notice of, 21

NEGLIGENCE,

- generally a matter for jury, 9

NEW TRIAL,

- on account of wrong evidence, 516

NICKNAMES,

- parol evidence to explain, 386

NOTICE TO ADMIT,

- admissions on, 38, 511

NOTICE TO PRODUCE,

- nature and object of, 335
- distinguished from subpœna, 336

NUMBER OF WITNESSES,

- when two required, 146, 409, 412-413, 417

OATH,

- nature and form of, 271-277, 417, 459, 494, 496
- must be taken in court, 157-158
- who may administer, 426, 515
- affirmation in lieu of, 271-273
- evidence of children without, 271, 457, 489, 498

OFFICES, PUBLIC,

- judicial notice as to, 20
- presumption of regularity in, 32

OFFICIAL SECRETS,

- protected from disclosure, 303-307
- Official Secrets Act, 1911...496

ONUS OF PROOF,

- generally, 129-140
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, viii, ix

OPINION,

generally, 120-128

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, viii

OPPORTUNITY,

as circumstantial evidence of act, 63

ORAL EVIDENCE,

generally, 256-302

respecting documents, 358-389 to introduce or explain "real" evidence, 391

See PAROL EVIDENCE.

ORIGINAL EVIDENCE,

meaning of, 3

OWNERSHIP,

proof of, 89-92, 532

PARLIAMENT,

Acts of, judicially noticed, 16 law of, judicially noticed, 15

officials of, judicially noticed, 20

PAROL EVIDENCE,

as to documents, 358-389

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii-xv

PAROL EVIDENCE RESPECTING DOCUMENTS,

generally, 358-389

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvi, xvii

PARTNERSHIP,

sharing profits, evidence of, 461

estoppel by holding out as partner, 462

admissions by partners, 162, 462

limited partnership, how proved, 462, 482, 532

PAUPERS, REMOVAL OF,

corroboration required on applications for, 147, 449

PEDIGREE, DECLARATIONS AS TO,

generally, 211-221

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xi

PERFORMANCE OF COVENANTS,

presumption of, 25

PERJURY,

corroboration required on charges of, 147, 495

proof of former trial, 495

- PERPETUATION OF TESTIMONY,
in civil cases, 397, 515
in indictable offences, 398, 442
- PERSON'S AGE,
how proved, 390, 475, 490, 530
- PERSONATION AT ELECTIONS,
corroboration required, 147, 417
- PHYSICAL OBJECTS,
production of, 390-395
- PLANS,
when admissible, 162, 224, 250
- PLEADINGS,
admissions on, 38, 511
facts in issue determined by, 58 burden of proof determined by, 129-140
- POSSESSION OF PROPERTY,
evidence of ownership, 89
and of larceny or receiving, 92 and of knowledge of larceny, 92-94, 447, 503
- PRACTICE OF COURTS,
judicial notice of, 14
- PRE-APPOINTED EVIDENCE,
meaning of, 4
generally, 144
- PREDECESSORS IN TITLE,
admissions by, 186
declarations against interest by, 210 evidence given by or against, 246 judgments concerning, 41
- PREJUDICE, statements made without, 54-57
or bias, of witness, against opponent may be proved, 296, 301
- PREPARATION,
as circumstantial evidence of act, 63
- PRESUMPTIONS,
generally, 22-37
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vi
of ademption, 25
as to alterations, 357

PRESUMPTIONS—continued.

- of continuance, 28
- as to date of document, 353
- of death, 29-32
- of dedication of highway, 35
- as to execution of ancient documents, 353
- of innocence, 26
- of lawful origin, 33
- of legitimacy, 27
- of marriage, 24
- from non-production of property, 394
- of ownership, 89-92
- of performance, 25
- from recent possession, 92-94
- of regularity, 32
- of satisfaction, 25
- of trust, 25
- equitable presumptions, 25
- statutory presumptions, 25

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE, meaning of, 4PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS,
See CONVICTIONS.PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE, meaning of, 4PRIMARY EVIDENCE,
meaning of, 4
of documents, 326-334
admissions are, 187PRISONER, admissions of, 167-180, 422
character of, 100-101, 114, 446, 483, 497
confessions of, 188-198, 422 cross-examination of, 282, 469 depositions on behalf of, 399, 441
evidence of, 257, 468-475
unsworn statement of, 398, 422, 467PRIVATE STATUTES, See STATUTES.PRIVIES, kinds of, 45
judgments as affecting, 41-45

PRIVIES—continued.

- former evidence as affecting, 246
- declarations as affecting, 210
- admissions as affecting, 162, 186

PRIVILEGE OF WITNESSES,

- generally, 303, 312-324
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiv, xv

PRIVILEGED DOCUMENTS,

- generally, 312-324
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiv, xv

PRODUCTION,

- of chattels or physical objects, 333, 390-395
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvii
- of documents, 326-334
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xv, xvi

PROMISSORY NOTES,

- rules as to bills apply, 454
- See BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

PROOF.

- when none required, 13-38
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vi
- when none allowed, 38-59
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vi-vii
- of what matters allowed, 58-128
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vii, viii
- burden of, 129-140
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, viii, ix
- quantum of, 141-153
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, ix
- nature of evidence required for, 154-254
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, ix-xii
- mode of, 255-395
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii-xvii
- adduction of, 396-407
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvii-xviii
- special order as to particular facts, 255, 509
- by statement of information or belief, 255, 509, 517
- by copies, entries or otherwise, 255, 509
- by affidavit, 255, 512, 516-518

PROPER CUSTODY,

- of ancient documents, 354
- of public documents, 426
- of shipping documents, 467

- PUBLIC BOOKS,
entries in, 247
- PUBLIC DOCUMENTS,
special rules respecting, 250
proof of, 341-343
statements in, 247-254
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii
- PUBLIC OFFICES,
judicial notice as to, 20
presumption of regularity in, 32
- PUBLIC POLICY,
matters protected from disclosure by, 303-307
Official Secrets Act, 1911...496
- PUBLIC RIGHTS,
declarations as to, 221-231
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xi
- QUANTUM OF EVIDENCE,
generally, 141-152
sufficiency of, question for judge, 8
- RAPE, AND SIMILAR CHARGES,
complaints, 80-87
similar conduct, 102-108
character of prosecutrix, 99, 118 contradiction of prosecutrix, 301
- REAL EVIDENCE,
meaning of, 4
generally, 390-395
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvii
- REAL INTENTION,
generally a matter for jury, 9
- REASONABLE SKILL,
generally a matter for jury, 9, 478
- REASONABLE TIME,
generally a matter for jury, 9, 478
- RECEIPT,
generally is merely evidence, 50
no estoppel by, 50
sometimes conclusive in marine insurance, 478

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS,

- recent possession, 92
- possession of other stolen property, 92-94, 447
- previous conviction for dishonesty, 447

RECENT POSSESSION,

- evidence of larceny or receiving, 92

RECITALS,

- estoppel by, 49
- in public documents, 253
- in private statutes, 254

RECOGNIZANCES,

- taken before justices, 400, 423, 441

RE-EXAMINATION,

- generally, 289-291
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiv

REFEREE,

- evidence on trial by, 512

REFRESHING MEMORY,

- generally, 279-282
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xiii

REGULARITY,

- presumption of, 31

RELATIONSHIP,

- how proved, 533
- declarations as to, 211-221
- as affecting credibility, 296, 301

RELEVANCY,

- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vii, viii

RELEVANT FACTS,

- what are, 58

REPLY,

- right of, 439, 440, 469, 474

REPUTATION,

- as evidence of character, 109, 114
- of marriage, 95
- of relationship, 219-220
- of public rights, 221-231
- to discredit witnesses, 296, 302

- REQUEST, LETTERS OF,
taking evidence by, 397, 513
- RES GESTÆ*,
generally, 66-79
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vii
- RIGHT TO BEGIN,
generally, 129, 139-140
- SALE OF GOODS,
writing sometimes required, 148, 463
- SATISFACTION,
presumption of, 25
- SEALING OF DEED,
presumption as to, 351
- SECONDARY EVIDENCE,
meaning of, 5
generally, 5, 335-346
See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xv, xvi
- SECONDHAND EVIDENCE,
meaning of, 5
- SECRETARY OF STATE,
matters settled by, 19, 20, 303, 461
- SHIPPING MATTERS, documents admissible as evidence, 465-467, 533
official log book, 465 burden of proof as to offences, 139, 466, 467
depositions, 466
proof of attested documents, 466 proof of agreements, 465
- SHOP BOOKS,
evidence of entries in, 162, 200, 409-411, 523
- SIGNATURE,
proof of, 346-352, 440, 533
- SILENCE,
admission by, 162
- SIMILAR ACTS OR CONDUCT,
when admissible, 98, 102-109
- SKILL, REASONABLE,
generally a matter for jury, 9

SLANDER,

- evidence of character, 99, 111, 114, 512
- evidence of circumstances of, 114, 512

SOLICITOR,

- admissions by, 38
- privileged communications by, or to, 303, 315-324

STAMPING OF DOCUMENTS,

- necessity for, 143, 347, 462-463

STATE DOCUMENTS AND COMMUNICATIONS,

- protected from disclosure, 304-308

STATE OF HEALTH,

- statement as to, 72-75

STATE OF MIND,

- conduct as evidence of, 98, 104-105

STATEMENT OF PRISONER,

- made before justices, 398, 422, 427
- made at the trial, 398, 427

STATEMENTS,

- accompanying acts, 67-79
- parts of same transaction, 67-79
- after transaction, 80
- in presence of party, 163, 167-180
- in absence of party, 59-60
- made without prejudice, 54-57
- as to state of health, 72-75
- inconsistent with evidence, 296-299, 439
- by deceased persons, 160-161, 199-243
- in private statutes, 253
- in public statutes, 251
- in other public documents, 247
- unsworn, of prisoner, 398, 422, 467

STATUTES, PRIVATE,

- judicial notice of, 16, 254
- statements in, 253
- proof of, 460, 533

STATUTES, PUBLIC,

- judicial notice of, 16, 254
- statements in, 251

SUBPŒNA,

- to give evidence or produce documents, 399, 512
- distinguished from notice to produce, 336
- if witness out of jurisdiction, 400, 428
- refusal to obey, 337-339
- setting aside as improper, 400

SUBSEQUENT CONDUCT,

- as circumstantial evidence of act, 61
- as evidence of intention, etc., 98, 103-109

SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE,

- generally a matter for judge, 8
- term used by statute, 145

SUMMING UP,

- right of, 439, 440

SUMMONS FOR DIRECTIONS,

- order as to evidence of particular fact, 255, 509

SYMBOLS,

- parol evidence as to meaning, 386-387

SYMPTOMS,

- statements as to, 72-75

SYSTEM,

- acts showing, 105-108

TENANTS,

- estoppel of, 53

TESTATORS, DECLARATIONS BY,

- generally, 238-243

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii

THINGS,

- production of, 390-395

TIME, REASONABLE,

- generally a question for jury, 9

TITLE DEEDS,

- privilege as to, 322-324

TOMBSTONE,

- proof of inscription on, 342-343

TRADESMEN'S BOOKS,

entries in, 162, 200

See BUSINESS BOOKS and WAGES BOOKS.

TRANSACTION,

definition of, 66

parts of the same, 67-79

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vii

statements made after, 68, 80-87, 161, 232-238

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, vii

in writing, parol evidence as to, 358-389

See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvi, xvii

similar, 98, 100-109

TREASON,

corroboration required, 146, 412, 413

TRIAL,

proceedings at, 511-515

TRUST,

writing sometimes required for, 411

presumption of, 25

UNSWORN STATEMENTS OR EVIDENCE, of children and girls, 271, 457, 489, 498

of prisoners, 398, 422, 467

USAGES,

proof of, 374, 376-377, 533

VEXATIOUS QUESTIONS,

judge may disallow, 512

VIEW OF PLACE,

jurors allowed to have, 414

VOIR DIRE,

meaning of, 258, 405

WAGES BOOKS,

entries in, 476, 490

See BUSINESS BOOKS and TRADESMEN'S BOOKS.

WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE,

not generally dealt with by the law, 144, 147

direct and circumstantial compared, 3, 58, 63

real evidence, 4, 390-395

confessions, 188-198

WIFE,

- evidence as to meaning of term, 388
- evidence of, 260-265, 268-270
- privileged communications of, 303, 427, 468-470

WILLS,

- declarations by testators as to their, 238-243
- See TABLE OF CONTENTS, xii
- alterations in, 357
- attestation of, 353
- how proved, 533

WITHOUT PREJUDICE,

- statements so made, 54-57

WITNESSES,

- adverse, 299, 439
- affirmation of, 271, 273, 459
- at arbitration, 460
- attendance of, 399-400
- bias of, 296-301
- character of, 282-284, 285, 302
- compellability of, 256-261, 268
- competency of, 256-268, 399
- conduct of, 283
- contradiction of, 292-300
- convictions of, 296, 439
- discredit of, 295-302, 439
- examination of, 278-291
- hostile, 299, 439
- husbands and wives as, 260-265, 268-270
- inconsistent statements of, 296-300, 439
- judge's right to call, 400
- number of, required, 146, 409, 412, 413, 417
- oath of, 157-8, 271-77, 417, 426, 459, 494, 515
- previous inconsistent statements of, 296, 300, 439
- privilege of, 303, 312-324
- recognizances of, 400, 423, 441
- refreshing memory of, 279-282
- subpœnas* for, 399-400, 428, 512
- swearing of, 271
- unsworn evidence of, 271, 457, 489, 498

WIVES AND HUSBANDS,

- evidence of, 260-265, 268-270
- privileged communications, 303, 427, 468-470

WORDS, MEANINGS OF. See DEFINITIONS, ETC.

WRITING. See DOCUMENTS.

- includes printing, etc., 460-461
- not synonymous with document, 333-334, 391
- may be mere note or memorandum of a contract, 362
- or may be the actual transaction, 361
- parol evidence as to, 358-389

WRITTEN EVIDENCE,

- sometimes required, 148
- under Statute of Frauds, 148, 411-412
- under Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 148, 415
- under Sale of Goods Act, 148, 463
- under Marine Insurance Act, 148, 477

WRITTEN TRANSACTIONS,

- distinguished from memorandum, 362
- parol evidence as to, 358-389
- See* TABLE OF CONTENTS, xvi, xvii

THE END.

WITNESS TO DEED

I, the undersigned, do hereby certify that the within and foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original as the same appears in the records of the County of ... State of ...

WITNESS MY HAND

at the County of ... State of ... this ... day of ... 19...

WITNESS MY HAND

at the County of ... State of ... this ... day of ... 19...

BOOKS FOR LAW STUDENTS.

SUBJECT INDEX.	PAGE
Administration of Assets - - - - -	4
Admiralty - - - - -	4
Agency - - - - -	4
Arbitration - - - - -	5
Banking - - - - -	5
Bankruptcy - - - - -	5
Bills of Exchange - - - - -	5, 6
Carriers - - - - -	6
Common Law - - - - -	7, 8, 9
Companies - - - - -	10
Conflict of Laws - - - - -	10
Constitutional Law - - - - -	11, 12
Contracts - - - - -	12, 13
Conveyancing - - - - -	13, 14
Criminal Law - - - - -	14, 15
Dictionary - - - - -	15
Equity - - - - -	16, 17
Evidence - - - - -	17, 18, 19
Examination Guides - - - - -	19, 20
Executors - - - - -	20
Income Tax - - - - -	20
Insurance Law - - - - -	21
International Law - - - - -	21, 22
Jurisprudence - - - - -	22
Latin - - - - -	22
Leading Cases - - - - -	22
Legal History - - - - -	22
Legal Maxims - - - - -	23
Local Government - - - - -	23, 24
Master and Servant - - - - -	24
Mercantile Law - - - - -	24
Mortgages - - - - -	24
Partnership - - - - -	25
Personal Property - - - - -	25, 26
Private International Law - - - - -	26
Procedure - - - - -	26, 27
Real Property - - - - -	27, 28
Receivers - - - - -	28
Roman Law - - - - -	28, 29, 30
Sale of Goods - - - - -	30
Statutes - - - - -	31
Torts - - - - -	31, 32
Trustees - - - - -	32

Suggested Course of Reading for the Bar Examinations.

ROMAN LAW.

HUNTER'S Introduction or KELKE'S Primer. SANDARS' Justinian. For final revision, GARSIA'S Roman Law in a Nutshell.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

CHALMERS & ASQUITH. MINTY. THOMAS'S Leading Cases. POTTER'S Legal History. For final revision, GARSIA'S Constitutional Law and Legal History in a Nutshell.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE.

ODGERS' Common Law, and WILSHERE'S Leading Cases. For final revision, GARSIA'S Criminal Law in a Nutshell.

REAL PROPERTY.

WILLIAMS (with WILSHERE'S Analysis), or GOODEVE. For revision, GARSIA'S Real Property and Conveyancing in a Nutshell.

CONVEYANCING.

DEANE & SPURLING'S Introduction, and CLARK'S Students' Precedents.

COMMON LAW.

ODGERS' Common Law, or INDERMAUR'S Common Law; or SALMOND or CARTER on Contracts, and FRASER or SALMOND on Torts. COCKLE'S Leading Cases. For final revision WILSHERE'S Outline of Contracts and Torts.

EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE.

ODGERS' Common Law, or PHIPSON'S Manual of Evidence, and COCKLE'S Cases on Evidence. For final revision, WILSHERE'S Procedure and Evidence, or GARSIA'S Procedure in a Nutshell.

EQUITY.

SNELL. GARSIA'S Equity in a Nutshell.

FINAL REVISION.

BROOKS'S All You Want for the Bar Final.

COMPANY LAW.

SMITH'S Summary.

SPECIAL SUBJECTS.

Administration of Assets, GARSIA. Bills of Exchange, JACOBS or WILLIS. Carriers, WILLIAMS. Carriage by Sea, GARSIA. Master and Servant, SMITH. Mortgages, STRAHAN. Partnership, STRAHAN. Sale of Goods, WILLIS.

Suggested Course of Reading for the Solicitors' Final Examination.

For detailed Courses see STEELE'S Self-Preparation for the Final Examination.

COMMON LAW.

INDERMAUR's Principles of the Common Law.
SALMOND or ANSON on Contracts.
RINGWOOD or SALMOND on Torts.
SMITH's Leading Cases, with INDERMAUR's Epitome, or COCKLE & HIBBERT's Leading Cases.

EQUITY.

SNELL's Principles of Equity.
BLYTH's Analysis of SNELL, or GARCIA's Equity in a Nutshell.
WHITE & TUDOR's Leading Cases, with INDERMAUR's Epitome.
STRAHAN on Partnership.
UNDERHILL on Trusts.

REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY AND CONVEYANCING.

WILLIAMS or GOODEVE on Real Property.
WILLIAMS or GOODEVE on Personal Property.
WILSHERE's Analysis of WILLIAMS.
ELPHINSTONE's or DEANE's Introduction to Conveyancing.
INDERMAUR's Epitome of Conveyancing Cases.
GARCIA's Real Property in a Nutshell.

PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

GIBSON's Practice.

BANKRUPTCY.

RINGWOOD's Principles of Bankruptcy.
GARCIA's Bankruptcy Law in a Nutshell.

CRIMINAL LAW.

HARRIS's Principles of Criminal Law.
WILSHERE's Leading Cases.
GARCIA's Criminal Law in a Nutshell.

PROBATE AND DIVORCE.

GIBSON's Probate and Divorce.

PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

DICEY's Digest.

COMPANIES.

SMITH's Summary.

NOTICE.—In consequence of fluctuation in cost of printing and materials, prices are subject to alteration without notice.

ADMINISTRATION OF ASSETS.

GARSIA'S Administration of Assets in a Nutshell.
39 pages. Price 3s. 6d. net. 1927

This has been written specially for the Bar Final Examinations. It embodies the changes made by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925.

ADMIRALTY.

SMITH'S Law and Practice in Admiralty. For the use of Students. By EUSTACE SMITH, of the Inner Temple. Fourth Edition. 232 pages. Price 10s. net. 1892

AGENCY.

BOWSTEAD'S Digest of the Law of Agency. By W. BOWSTEAD, Barrister-at-Law. Seventh Edition. 485 pages. Price £1 7s. 6d. net. 1924

"The Digest will be a useful addition to any law library, and will be especially serviceable to practitioners who have to advise mercantile clients or to conduct their litigation, as well as to students, such as candidates for the Bar Final Examination and for the Consular Service, who have occasion to make the law of agency a subject of special study."—Law Quarterly Review.

WILSHERE'S Outline of the Law of Agency. By A. M. WILSHERE, Barrister-at-Law. 103 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1925

"Should prove a valuable aid to students."—Law Times.

ARBITRATION.

SLATER'S Law of Arbitration and Awards. With Appendix containing the Statutes relating to Arbitration, and a collection of Forms and Index. Fifth Edition. By JOSHUA SLATER, Barrister-at-Law. 215 pages. Price 5s. net. 1913

BANKRUPTCY.

MANSON'S Short View of Bankruptcy Law. By EDWARD MANSON, Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. 351 pages. Price 8s. 6d. net. 1920

RINGWOOD on Bankruptcy, Deeds of Arrangement and Bills of Sale. With an Appendix containing the Acts, Rules, etc. Fifteenth Edition. Rearranged and in part re-written by G. L. HAGGEN, Lecturer in Law in Leeds University, and edited by A. ROPER. Text 334 pages, Appendix 310 pages. Price £1 2s. 6d. net. 1927

Mr. Hagen has re-written this edition with a special view to the needs of students. Of special interest are the marginal notes which are in narrative form and are of great value for final revision before the examination; they give the main principles of the law in a nutshell.

GARSIA'S Bankruptcy Law in a Nutshell. Including Deeds of Arrangement and Bills of Sale. 62 pages. Price 3s. 6d. net. 1928

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

JACOBS on Bills of Exchange, Cheques, Promissory Notes, and Negotiable Instruments Generally, including a digest of cases and a large number of representative forms, and a note on I O U's and Bills of Lading. By BERTRAM JACOBS, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. 245 pages. Price 10s. 6d. net. 1924

Bills of Exchange—continued.

OPINIONS OF TUTORS.

"It appears to me to be a most excellent piece of work."

"After perusing portions of it I have come to the conclusion that it is a learned and exhaustive treatise on the subject, and I shall certainly bring it to the notice of my pupils."

WILLIS'S Law of Negotiable Securities. Contained in a Course of Six Lectures delivered by WILLIAM WILLIS, Esq., K.C., at the request of the Council of Legal Education. Fourth Edition, by A. W. BAKER WELFORD, Barrister-at-Law. 190 pages. Price 10s. net. 1923

"No one can fail to benefit by a careful perusal of this volume."
—Irish Law Times.

"We heartily commend them, not only to the student, but to everybody—lawyer and commercial man alike."—The Accountant.

"Mr. Willis is an authority second to none on the subject, and in these lectures he summarized for the benefit not only of his confrères but of the lay public the knowledge he has gained through close study and lengthy experience."

CARRIERS.

WILLIAMS' Epitome of Railway Law. Part I. The Carriage of Goods. Part II. The Carriage of Passengers. By E. E. G. WILLIAMS, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. 231 pages. Price 10s. net. 1921
A useful book for the Bar and Railway Examinations.

"Admirably arranged, and clearly written with an economy of language which goes to the heart of a busy man."—Sittings Review.

GARSIA'S Law relating to the Carriage of Goods by Sea in a Nutshell. As amended by the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924. Second Edition. By MARSTON GARSIA, Barrister-at-Law. 36 pages. Price 3s. net. 1925

Written with special reference to Bar Examinations.

COMMON LAW.

(See also Broom's Legal Maxims, p. 23, post).

ODGERS on the Common Law of England: Third Edition. By ROLAND BURROWS, LL.D., Reader in the Inns of Court. 2 vols. 1,521 pages. Price £2 10s. net.

1927

Odgers on the Common Law deals with Contracts, Torts, Criminal Law and Procedure, Civil Procedure, the Courts, and the Law of Persons.

The Student who masters it can pass the following Bar Examinations:—

- (1) Criminal Law and Procedure.
- (2) Common Law.
- (3) General Paper—Part I.

And (with Cockle's Cases and Statutes on Evidence)

- (4) Law of Evidence and Civil Procedure.
- (5) General Paper—Part III.

SOME OPINIONS OF PROFESSORS AND TUTORS.

1. The Bar.—"I have most carefully examined the work, and shall most certainly recommend it to all students reading with me for the Bar Examinations."

"It appears to me to be an invaluable book to a student who desires to do well in his examinations. The sections dealing with Criminal Law and Procedure are, in my opinion, especially valuable. They deal with these difficult subjects in a manner exactly fitted to the examinations; and in this the work differs from any other book I know."

"I have been reading through Dr. Odgers' Common Law, and find it a most excellent work for the Bar-Final, also for the Bar Criminal Law."

2. The Universities.—"I consider it to be a useful and comprehensive work on a very wide subject, more especially from the point of view of a law student. I shall be glad to recommend it to the favourable attention of law students of the University."

Common Law—continued.

3. Solicitors.—THE BOOK FOR THE SOLICITORS' FINAL.—"Once the Intermediate is over, the articulated clerk has some latitude allowed as to his course of study. And, without the slightest hesitation, we say that the first book he should tackle after negotiating the Intermediate is 'Odgers on the Common Law.' The volumes may seem a somewhat 'hefty task,' but these two volumes give one less trouble to read than any single volume of any legal text-book of our acquaintance. They cover, moreover, all that is most interesting in the wide field of legal studies in a manner more interesting than it has ever been treated before."

INDERMAUR'S Principles of the Common Law.

The Law of Contracts and Torts, with a Short Outline of the Law of Evidence. Fourteenth Edition. Re-written and enlarged by A. M. WILSHERE, Barrister-at-Law. 732 pages. Price £1 10s. net.

1927

"It is clear in statement and makes as easy reading as the nature of the subject permits. The selection of matter to be treated is good—exactly the right emphasis is laid on fundamental principles, and they are presented with an accuracy of statement not always to be found in law books. . . . Painstaking labour is evident in every page, and the result is the student may read and the practitioner consult this book with confidence that his efforts will be repaid."—Law Notes.

"It is an old friend, and in my opinion the best book for students over the ground covered by it."

"I am very much pleased with the new edition, and shall place it on my list of approved text-books."

INDERMAUR'S Leading Common Law Cases ; with some short notes thereon. Chiefly intended as a Guide to "SMITH'S LEADING CASES." Tenth Edition. by E. A. JELF, Master of the Supreme Court. With six illustrations by E. T. REED. III pages. Price 8s. 6d. net.

1922

The editor has introduced several new features with a view to assisting the student in remembering the principles of law dealt with, but the unique feature of the edition is the addition of six illustrations by Mr. E. T. Reed. After seeing these illustrations of the bull in the ironmonger's shop, the chimney-sweep and the jeweller, the six carpenters in the tavern, etc., you will find it easy to remember the cases and what points they decided. Every wise student reads this book.

Common Law—continued.

COCKLE & HIBBERT'S Leading Cases in Common Law. With Notes, Explanatory and Connective, presenting a Systematic View of the whole Subject. By E. COCKLE and W. NEMBARD HIBBERT, LL.D., Barristers-at-Law. Second Edition. 962 pages. Price £2 2s. net. 1928

This book is on the same lines as Cockle's Cases on Evidence.

Following is a short summary of its contents:—

Nature of the Common Law.	Void, etc., Contracts.	Negotiable Instruments.
Common Law Rights and Duties.	Quasi-Contracts.	Partnership.
Contract, including Contracts of Record.	Agency.	Sale of Goods.
Specialty Contracts.	Bailments.	Torts.
Simple Contracts.	Carriers.	Damages.
	Landlord and Tenant.	Law of Persons.
	Master and Servant.	Conflict of Laws.

“Dr. Hibbert is to be congratulated on the masterly manner in which he has re-edited Cockle's Leading Cases on Common Law. The arrangement and printing are particularly clear, the choice of cases is marked by great discretion, and a short analysis of the law of various departments dealt with in the book is set forth with a view to refreshing the reader's knowledge on the subject before he turns to read the cases which are set out.”—Law Coach.

“The present work has the merits of thoroughness, accuracy, systematic arrangement and a modern point of view.”—Solicitors' Journal.

SMITH'S Leading Cases. A Selection of Leading Cases in various Branches of the Law, with Notes. Thirteenth Edition. By Sir T. WILLES CHITTY, K.C., A. T. DENNING and C. P. HARVEY, Barristers-at-Law. 2 vols. Price £4 10s. net. 1929

This work presents a number of cases illustrating and explaining the leading principles of the common law, accompanied by exhaustive notes showing how those principles have been applied in subsequent cases.

JELF'S Fifteen Decisive Battles of the Law. By E. A. JELF, Master of the Supreme Court. Second Edition. 124 pages. Price 6s. 6d. net. 1921

Mr. Jelf narrates with light and skilful touch the incidents and results of fifteen of the most important decisions ever given by the judges, and he shows the effect which each decision has had upon the general body of English Law.

COMPANIES.

SMITH'S Summary of the Law of Companies. By T. EUSTACE SMITH, Barrister-at-Law. Thirteenth Edition, by W. HIGGINS, Barrister-at-Law. With Appendix of Questions. 312 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1923

"We know of no better means of acquiring a general knowledge of the principles of company law than by a careful perusal of this little volume. The summary is a complete one, and references are given in every proposition enunciated to the sections of the Act, or to leading cases by which the principle has been illustrated."
—Australian Law Times.

"It is comprehensive, complete, and compact. It is not only a good reference work, but a readable book."—Associated Accountants' Journal.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

WESTLAKE'S Treatise on Private International Law, with Principal Reference to its Practice in England. Seventh Edition. By NORMAN BENTWICH, Barrister-at-Law. 436 pages. Price £1 7s. 6d. net. 1925

FOOTE'S Private International Law. Based on the Decisions in the English Courts. Fifth Edition. By H. H. L. BELLOT, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law. 661 pages. Price £1 15s. net. 1925

BELLOT'S Analysis of Foote's Private International Law. With leading cases. 64 pages. Price 3s. 6d. net. 1925

DICEY'S Digest of the Law of England with reference to the Conflict of Laws. Fourth Edition. 878 pages. Price £2 12s. 6d. net. 1927
"Dicey" is the prescribed book for the Solicitors' Final Examination.

BURGIN & FLETCHER'S Students' Conflict of Laws. An Introduction to the Study of Private International Law, based on Dicey. Price £1 net. 1928

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HISTORY.

CHALMERS & ASQUITH'S Outlines of Constitutional Law. By D. CHALMERS and CYRIL ASQUITH, Barristers-at-Law. Third Edition. 382 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net. 1925

"A very sound treatise, distinctly above the average. This book supplies a long-felt want. The whole field is covered in an interesting manner, unusual in a work which does not claim to be anything more than an outline."—New Cambridge.

"The learned authors have very clearly tabulated and defined the technicalities of our constitutional law. The book is well arranged and well indexed."—Saturday Review.

THOMAS & BELLOT'S Leading Cases in Constitutional Law. With Introduction and Notes. Sixth Edition. By H. H. L. BELLOT, LL.D. Formerly Acting Professor of Constitutional Law in the University of London. 352 pages. Price 10s. 6d. net. 1927

Some knowledge of the chief cases in constitutional law is now required in many examinations, and is obviously necessary to the thorough student of constitutional history. This book extracts the essence of the cases with which the student is expected to be familiar, preserving always something of the concrete circumstance that is so helpful to the memory. It adds, where necessary, a short note to the individual case, and subjoins to each important group of cases some general remarks in the shape of a note. The cases are so arranged as to be convenient for ready reference.

MINTY'S Constitutional Laws of the British Empire, By L. Le M. MINTY, Barrister-at-Law. 253 pages. Price 15s. net. 1928

So far as possible the author has included sufficient material to enable a student to give a possible answer to every question that has been set for the LL.B. in the past few years, or is likely to be set in the near future.

TASWELL-LANGMEAD'S English Constitutional History. From the Teutonic Invasion to the Present Time. Designed as a Text-book for Students and others. By T. P. TASWELL-LANGMEAD, B.C.L., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, formerly Vinerian Scholar in the University and late Professor of Constitutional Law and History, University

Constitutional Law and History—continued.

College, London. Eighth Edition. By COLEMAN PHILLIPSON, LL.D. 854 pages. Price 21s. net. 1919

"'Taswell-Langmead' has long been popular with candidates for examination in Constitutional History, and the present edition should render it even more so. It is now, in our opinion, the ideal students' book upon the subject."—Law Notes.

"The work will continue to hold the field as the best classbook on the subject."—Contemporary Review.

"The work before us it would be hardly possible to praise too highly. In style, arrangement, clearness, and size it would be difficult to find anything better on the real history of England, the history of its constitutional growth as a complete story, than this volume."—Boston (U.S.) Literary World.

WILSHERE'S Analysis of Taswell-Langmead's Constitutional History. By A. M. WILSHERE, LL.B., Barrister-at-Law. 115 pages. Price 6s. 6d. net. 1919

HAMMOND'S Short English Constitutional History for Law Students. By EDGAR HAMMOND, B.A. 163 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1920

An excellent book for the purpose of refreshing one's knowledge preparatory to taking an examination.

"An excellent cram-book and a little more. The tabulation of the matter is excellent."—Law Times.

GARSIA'S Constitutional Law and Legal History in a Nutshell. Including an Alphabetical Table of Writs and their Uses, a Comparative Table of the Constitutions of Canada, Australia and South Africa. Second Edition. By M. GARSIA, Barrister-at-Law. 104 pages. Price 4s. net. 1925

"I have looked over this book and find that it is admirably adapted for its purpose. For almost any type of student it should be invaluable if judiciously used with the standard Text Book."—A Law Lecturer.

CONTRACTS.

All You Want for the Bar Final. See page 19.

ODGERS on the Common Law. See page 7.

WILSHERE'S Outline of Contracts and Torts. By A. M. WILSHERE and DOUGLAS ROBB, Barristers-at-Law. Third Edition. 155 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1928

It is designed as an assistance to the memory of the Student who has read Odgers or Indermaur on the Common Law.

Contracts—continued.

CARTER on Contracts. Elements of the Law of Contracts. By A. T. CARTER, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Reader to the Council of Legal Education. Sixth Edition. 272 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net.

1925
"We have here an excellent book for those who are beginning to read law."—Law Magazine.

SALMOND & WINFIELD on Contracts. Principles of the Law of Contract. By the late Sir JOHN W. SALMOND and P. H. WINFIELD, Barrister-at-Law. 544 pages. Price 30s. net.

1927
"Exceedingly clear and accurate in its statement of the principles of the law of contract."—Law Notes.

CONVEYANCING.

(See also Real Property.)

ELPHINSTONE'S Introduction to Conveyancing. By Sir HOWARD WARBURTON ELPHINSTONE, Bart. Eighth Edition, by F. TRENTAM MAW, Barrister-at-Law, Editor of Key and Elphinstone's Precedents in Conveyancing. [In the press.]

"Incomparably the best introduction to the art of conveyancing that has appeared in this generation. It contains much that is useful to the experienced practitioner."—Law Times.

"In our opinion no better work on the subject with which it deals was ever written for students and young practitioners."—Law Notes.

"... from a somewhat critical examination of it we have come to the conclusion that it would be difficult to place in a student's hand a better work of its kind."—Law Students' Journal.

DEANE & SPURLING'S Elements of Conveyancing, with an Appendix of Students' Precedents. Fourth Edition, by W. LYON BLEASE, Barrister-at-Law. Price 17s. 6d. net.

1925
This book is complementary to and extends the information in Williams, and Deane and Blease's Real Property. It deals with the Acts of 1925. The reader is taken through the component parts of Purchase Deeds, Leases, Mortgage Deeds, Settlements and Wills, and the way in which these instruments are prepared is explained. Previous to this is a short history of Conveyancing, and a chapter on Contracts for Sale of Land dealing with the statutory requisites, the form, particulars and conditions of sale, the abstract of title, requisitions, etc., and finally there is a chapter on conveyance by registration. The second part of the book, covering about 100 pages, contains CLARK'S STUDENTS' PRECEDENTS IN CONVEYANCING, illustrating the various documents referred to in the first part. It is the only book containing a representative collection of precedents for students.

Conveyancing—continued.

"It is readable and clear and will be of interest even to those students who are not specialising in questions of real property."—Cambridge Law Journal.

"The style is singularly lucid and the writer has deliberately formed the opinion that this book should form part of the course of every student who desires a real practical acquaintance with modern conveyancing. . . . Properly used, the writer's opinion is that Deane and Spurling should be one of the first books studied after the Intermediate has been negotiated."—Sittings Review.

INDERMAUR'S Leading Conveyancing and Equity Cases. With some short notes thereon, for the use of Students. By JOHN INDERMAUR, Solicitor. Tenth Edition by C. THWAITES. 206 pages. Price 6s. net.

1913

"The Epitome well deserves the continued patronage of the class—Students—for whom it is especially intended. Mr. Indermaur will soon be known as the 'Student's Friend.'"—Canada Law Journal.

CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE.

ODGERS on the Common Law. See page 7.

GARSIA'S Criminal Law and Procedure in a Nutshell.

Third Edition. Including the principal changes made by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925. By M. GARSIA, Barrister-at-Law. 84 pages. Price 3s. 6d. net.

1926

Enumerates and classifies the more important crimes, gives a short history of the Criminal Courts and a brief outline of criminal procedure.

HARRIS'S Principles and Practice of the Criminal Law. Intended as a Lucid Exposition of the subject for the use of Students and the Profession. Fourteenth Edition. By A. M. WILSHERE, Barrister-at-Law. 576 pages. Price 15s. net.

1926

Criminal Law and Procedure—continued.

"This Standard Text-book of the Criminal Law is as good a book on the subject as the ordinary student will find on the library shelves The book is very clearly and simply written. No previous legal knowledge is taken for granted, and everything is explained in such a manner that no student ought to have much difficulty in obtaining a grasp of the subject. . . ."
—Solicitors' Journal.

" As a Student's Text-book we have always felt that this work would be hard to beat, and at the present time we have no reason for altering our opinion. . . ."—Law Times.

WILSHERE'S Elements of Criminal and Magisterial Law and Procedure. By A. M. WILSHERE, Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. 301 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net. 1923

This book sets out concisely the essential principles of the criminal law and explains in detail the most important crimes, giving precedents of indictments; it also gives an outline of criminal procedure and evidence.

"An excellent little book for examination purposes. Any student who fairly masters the book ought to pass any ordinary examination in criminal law with ease."—Solicitors' Journal.

WILSHERE'S Leading Cases illustrating the Criminal Law, for Students. Second Edition. 398 pages. Price 15s. net. 1924

"This book is a collection of cases pure and simple, without a commentary. In each case a short rubric is given, and then follow the material parts of the judge's opinions. The selection of cases has been judiciously made, and it embraces the whole field of criminal law. The student who has mastered this and its companion volume will be able to face his examiners in criminal law without trepidation."—Scots Law Times.

DICTIONARY.

The Concise Law Dictionary. By P. G. OSBORN, Barrister-at-Law. 333 pages. Price 15s. net. 1927

A book every student should have for general reference. It deals with existing law and with legal history. Legal maxims are translated, and there are glossaries of Latin, French and Early English words relating to the law. There is also a list of abbreviations used in citing law reports. A very useful feature is a digest of some four hundred leading cases.

EQUITY.

SNELL'S Principles of Equity. Intended for the use of Students and Practitioners. Nineteenth Edition. Incorporating the effect of the Law of Property Acts, 1925. By H. G. RIVINGTON, M.A. Oxon., and A. C. FOUNTAINE. 591 pages. Price £1 10s. net. 1925

"In a most modest preface the editors disclaim any intention to interfere with Snell as generations of students have known it. Actually what they have succeeded in doing is to make the book at least three times as valuable as it ever was before. Illustrations from cases have been deftly introduced, and the whole rendered simple and intelligible until it is hardly recognisable."—The Students' Companion.

"It has been stated that this book is intended primarily for law students, but it is much too useful a book to be so limited. It is in our opinion the best and most lucid summary of the principles of the law of equity in a small compass, and should be in every lawyer's library."—Australian Law Times.

BLYTH'S Analysis of Snell's Principles of Equity, with Notes thereon. By E. E. BLYTH, LL.D., Solicitor. Thirteenth Edition. 262 pages. Price 10s. 6d. net. 1926

"This is an admirable analysis of a good treatise; read with Snell, this little book will be found very profitable to the student."—Law Journal.

GARSIA'S Equity in a Nutshell. By M. GARSIA, Barrister-at-Law. Price 4s. net. 1928

STORY'S Commentaries on Equity Jurisprudence. Third English Edition. By A. E. RANDALL. 641 pages. Price 37s. 6d. net. 1920

WILSHERE'S Principles of Equity. Second Edition. [Preparing.]

In this book the author has endeavoured to explain and enable the student to understand Equity. He has incorporated a large number of explanations from the authorities and has tried to make the subject intelligible while at the same time he has as much useful and relevant detail as the larger students' works. It is not a mere "cram" book. A useful feature is an analysis of the subject which follows the text.

"Mr. Wilshere has succeeded in giving us a very clear exposition of these principles. The book is far better balanced than the majority of text books, and the law is stated in its modern garb and is not, as in so many elementary works, almost lost to sight beneath a mass of historical explanatory matter."—Sittings Review.

Equity—continued.

INDERMAUR'S Epitome of Leading Equity Cases.

See page 14.

WHITE & TUDOR'S Leading Cases in Equity. A Selection of Leading Cases in Equity; with Notes. Ninth Edition. By E. P. HEWITT, K.C. 2 vols. Price £4 10s. net. 1928

"'White and Tudor' towers high above all other works on Equity. It is the fountain of Equity, from which all authors draw and drink. It is the book we all turn to when we want to know what the Judges of the old Court of Chancery, or its modern representative, the Chancery Division, have said and decided on this or that principle of law. It is the book in which counsel in his chambers puts such faith, and from which in Court counsel reads with so much confidence. It is the book from the law of which Judges hesitate to depart."—Law Notes.

COCKLE & POTTER'S Leading Cases in Equity.

[In preparation.]

EVIDENCE.

All You Want for the Bar Final. See page 19.

COCKLE'S Leading Cases and Statutes on the Law of Evidence, with Notes, explanatory and connective, presenting a systematic view of the whole subject. By ERNEST COCKLE, Barrister-at-Law. Fourth Edition. By S. L. PHIPSON. 533 pages. Price 18s. 6d. net. 1925

This book and Phipson's Manual are together sufficient for all ordinary examination purposes, and will save students the necessity of reading larger works on this subject.

By an ingenious use of black type the author brings out the essential words of the judgments and Statutes, and enables the student to see at a glance the effect of each section.

"Of all the collections of leading cases compiled for the use of students with which we are acquainted, this book of Mr. Cockle's is, in our opinion, far and away the best. The student who picks up the principles of the English law of evidence from these readable and logical pages has an enormous advantage over a generation of predecessors who toiled through the compressed sentences of Stephen's little digest in a painful effort to grasp its meaning. Mr. Cockle teaches his subject in the only way in which a branch of law so highly abstract can ever be grasped; he arranges the principal rules of evidence in logical order, but he puts forward each in the shape of a leading case which illustrates it. Just enough of the headnote, the facts, and the judgments are selected and set out to explain the point fully without boring the reader; and the notes appended to the cases contain all the additional information that anyone can require in ordinary practice."—Solicitors' Journal.

Evidence—continued.

PHIPSON'S Law of Evidence. By S. L. PHIPSON, Barrister-at-Law. Seventh Edition. 699 pages. Price £2 2s. net. [Preparing.]

"The best book now current on the law of evidence in England."—Harvard Law Review.

PHIPSON'S Manual of the Law of Evidence. Fourth Edition. 282 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net. 1928

This is an abridgment for students of Mr. Phipson's larger treatise. With Cockle's Cases it will be sufficient for examination purposes.

"The way of the student, unlike that of the transgressor, is no longer hard. The volume under review is designed by the author for the use of students. To say that it is the best text-book for students upon the subject is really to understate its usefulness; as far as we know there is in existence no other treatise upon evidence which gives a scientific and accurate presentment of the subject in a form and compass suitable to students."—Australian Law Times.

"We know no book on the subject which gives in so short a space so much valuable information. We readily commend the work both to students and to practitioners, especially those who, not being in possession of the author's larger work, wish to have an up-to-date and explanatory companion to 'Cockle.'"—South African Law Journal.

BEST'S Principles of Evidence. With Elementary Rules for conducting the Examination and Cross-Examination of Witnesses. Twelfth Edition. By S. L. PHIPSON, Barrister-at-Law. 673 pages. Price £1 12s. 6d. net. 1923

"The most valuable work on the law of evidence which exists in any country."—Law Times.

"There is no more scholarly work among all the treatises on Evidence than that of Best. There is a philosophical breadth of treatment throughout which at once separates the work from those mere collections of authorities which take no account of the 'reason why,' and which arrange two apparently contradictory propositions side by side without comment or explanation."—Law Magazine.

Evidence—continued.

WILSHERE'S Outlines of Procedure and Evidence.

Third Edition. 183 pages. Price 11s. 6d. net. 1923

The student will find sufficient information to enable him to pass any examination in the subjects dealt with.

"The author has made the book clear, interesting, and instructive, and it should be acceptable to students."—Solicitors' Journal.

"This work will prove of great use, not only to students, but, in the hands of a practitioner, will serve as a very practical key to the Rules of Court."—Law Magazine.

WROTTESELEY on the Examination of Witnesses in Court. Including Examination in Chief, Cross-Examination, and Re-Examination. With chapters on Preliminary Steps and some Elementary Rules of Evidence. Second Edition. By F. J. WROTTESELEY, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 173 pages. Price 6s. net. 1926

This is a practical book for the law student. It is interesting, and is packed full of valuable hints and information. The author lays down clearly and succinctly the rules which should guide the advocate in the examination of witnesses and in the argument of questions of fact and law, and has illustrated the precepts which he has given by showing how they have been put into actual practice by the greatest advocates of modern times.

EXAMINATION GUIDES AND QUESTIONS.

The Concise Law Dictionary (ante, p. 15) is an indispensable book of reference.

GARSIA'S Digest of Questions set at Bar Examinations, 1914-27. 134 pages. Price 6s. net

The questions are grouped logically under subjects, and references are given to text books where the answers will be found.

BROOKS'S All You Want for the Bar Final. A Condensed Cram Book, dealing with Torts, Contracts, Equity, Civil Procedure, Evidence, Pleading. By GRAHAM BROOKS. 129 pages. Price 5s. 6d. net. 1925

The author claims that a full knowledge of the contents of this book is by itself sufficient for the purpose of answering all questions normally asked.

Examination Guides and Questions—continued.

STEELE'S Articled Clerk's Guide to and Self-Preparation for the Final and Honours Examinations. Containing a Complete Course of Study, with Books to Read, Test Questions, Regulations, &c., and intended for the use of those Articled Clerks who read by themselves. Incorporating Indermaur's Articled Clerk's Guide. Second Edition. By E. A. STEELE and G. R. J. DUCKWORTH, Solicitors, Principals of the Halifax Law Classes. Price 5s. net. 1926
This book tells you what are the best books to read, how and when to read them, gives test questions to be answered at the various stages of reading and a set of questions and answers. Even if you are being coached, you will find many useful hints and much sound advice in it.

A New Guide to the Bar. Containing the Regulations and Examination Papers. Sixth Edition. By M. GARSIA, Barrister-at-Law. 130 pages. Price 5s. net. 1928

A Guide to the Legal Profession and London LL.B. Containing the latest Regulations for the Bar and articled clerks. With a detailed description of all current Students' Law Books, and suggested courses of reading. 99 pages. Price 3s. 6d. net. 1928

EXECUTORS.

WALKER'S Compendium of the Law relating to Executors and Administrators. Sixth Edition, embodying the effect of the Acts of 1925. By S. E. WILLIAMS, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 386 pages. Price £1 5s. net. 1926

"We highly approve of Mr. Walker's arrangement. . . . We can commend it as bearing on its face evidence of skilful and careful labour."—Law Times.

GARSIA'S Administration of Assets in a Nutshell. 3s. 6d. net. 1927
Excellent for final revision.

INCOME TAX.

NEWPORT on Income Tax Law and Practice. By C. A. NEWPORT, F.C.R.A., Corporate Accountant. Second Edition, 278 pages. Price 10s. 6d. net. 1928

Income Tax—continued.

Written specially for examination students. It is illustrated throughout by examples.

"This book in a way breaks new ground . . . The volume before us purposely assumes no prior knowledge, endeavours to make the position clear by simple practical illustrations, and in the words of its author, 'so far as possible, anything approaching the jargon almost inseparable from the subject has been either avoided or accompanied by intelligible explanations.'"—Law Notes.

INSURANCE LAW.

PORTER'S Laws of Insurance: Fire, Life, Accident, and Guarantee. Embodying Cases in the English, Scotch, Irish, American, Australian, New Zealand, and Canadian Courts. Seventh Edition. 505 pages. Price £1 12s. 6d. net. 1925

INTERNATIONAL LAW.

(See also Conflict of Laws.)

BENTWICH'S Students' Leading Cases and Statutes on International Law, arranged and edited with notes. By NORMAN BENTWICH, Barrister-at-Law. With an Introductory Note by Professor L. OPPENHEIM. 247 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net. 1913

"This Case Book is admirable from every point of view, and may be specially recommended to be used by young students in conjunction with their lectures and their reading of text-books."
—Professor Oppenheim.

COBBETT'S Leading Cases and Opinions on International Law, and various points of English Law connected therewith, Collected and Digested from English and Foreign Reports, Official Documents, and other sources. With Notes containing the views of the Text-writers on the Topics referred to, Supplementary Cases, Treaties, and Statutes. By PITT COBBETT, M.A., D.C.L. Oxon. Fourth Edition. By H. H. L. BELLOT, D.C.L. Vol. I. "Peace." 365 pages. Price 16s. net. 1922

International Law—continued.

Vol. II. "War and Neutrality." 671 pages. Price
£1 5s. net. 1924

"The book is well arranged, the materials well selected, and the comments to the point. Much will be found in small space in this book."—Law Journal.

"The notes are concisely written and trustworthy. . . . The reader will learn from them a great deal on the subject, and the book as a whole seems a convenient introduction to fuller and more systematic works."—Oxford Magazine.

JURISPRUDENCE.

SALMOND'S Jurisprudence; or, Theory of the Law.
By JOHN W. SALMOND, Barrister-at-Law. Seventh Edition. 559 pages. Price £1 net. 1924

"Almost universally read among students of jurisprudence."—Law Coach.

LEADING CASES.

(See Common Law, Constitutional Law, Criminal Law, Dictionary, Equity, Evidence, International Law.)

LEGAL HISTORY.

(See also Constitutional Law; Dictionary.)

POTTER'S Introduction to the History of English Law. By HAROLD POTTER, LL.B. Second Edition.
260 pages. Price 10s. 6d. net. 1926

This scholarly work, while not professing completeness, lays before students fundamental principles with such detail as will not prevent them losing sight of the main thread of legal development. An excellent work for all examinations.

"Can be perused with interest and profit by the earnest student."—Justice of the Peace.

"Very thoughtful and well balanced."—The Times.

LEGAL MAXIMS.

(See also Dictionary.)

BROOM'S Selection of Legal Maxims, Classified and Illustrated. Ninth Edition. By W. J. BYRNE. 633 pages. Price £1 12s. 6d. net. 1924

The main idea of this work is to present, under the head of "Maxims," certain leading principles of English law, and to illustrate some of the ways in which those principles have been applied or limited, by reference to reported cases. The maxims are classified under the following divisions:—

Rules founded on Public Policy.	Fundamental Legal Principles.
Rules of Legislative Policy.	Acquisition, Enjoyment, and Transfer of Property.
Maxims relating to the Crown.	Rules Relating to Marriage and Descent.
The Judicial Office.	The Interpretation of Deeds and Written Instruments.
The Mode of Administering Justice.	The Law of Contracts.
Rules of Logic.	The Law of Evidence.

"It has been to us a pleasure to read the book, and we cannot help thinking that if works of this kind were more frequently studied by the Profession there would be fewer false points taken in argument in our Courts."—Justice of the Peace.

Latin for Lawyers. Contains (1) A course in Latin, in 32 lessons, based on legal maxims; (2) 1000 Latin Maxims, with translations, explanatory notes, cross-references, and subject-index; (3) A Latin Vocabulary. 300 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net.

This book is intended to enable the practitioner or student to acquire a working knowledge of Latin in the shortest possible time, and at the same time to become acquainted with the legal maxims which embody the fundamental rules of the common law.

COTTERELL'S Latin Maxims and Phrases. Literally translated, with explanatory notes. Intended for the use of students for all legal examinations. By J. N. COTTERELL, Solicitor. Third Edition. 82 pages. Price 5s. net.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

WRIGHT & HOBHOUSE'S Outline of Local Government and Local Taxation in England and Wales (excluding London). Sixth Edition. With Local Government—continued.

Introduction and Tables of Local Taxation. 246 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net. 1928

"The work gives within a very moderate compass a singularly clear and comprehensive account of our present system of local self-government, both in urban and rural districts. We are, indeed, not aware of any other work in which a similar view is given with equal completeness, accuracy, and lucidity."—County Council Times.

"Lucid, concise, and accurate to a degree which has never been surpassed."—Justice of the Peace.

JACOBS' Epitome of the Law relating to Public Health. By BERTRAM JACOBS, Barrister-at-Law. 191 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1912
Specially written for students.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

GARSIA & FEATHERSTONE'S Law relating to Master and Servant in a Nutshell. 34 pages. Price 2s. 6d. net. 1925

"It covers the whole range of the law of Master and Servant, which is classified, digested and presented in a form well calculated for assimilation."—Justice of the Peace.

SMITH'S Law of Master and Servant. Seventh Edition. By C. M. KNOWLES, Barrister-at-Law. 350 pages. Price 25s. net. 1922

MERCANTILE LAW.

SMITH'S Mercantile Law. A Compendium of Mercantile Law, by the late JOHN WILLIAM SMITH. Twelfth Edition. By J. H. WATTS, Barrister-at-Law. 881 pages. Price £2 2s. net. 1924

CONTENTS—

Partners.	Negotiable Instruments.	Lien.
Companies.	Carriers.	Bankruptcy.
Principal and Agent.	Afreightment.	Bills of Exchange.
Shipping.	Insurance.	Master and Servant.
Patents.	Contracts.	Sale of Goods.
Goodwill.	Guarantees.	Debtor and Creditor.
Trade Marks.	Stoppage in Transitu.

"We have no hesitation in recommending the work before us to the profession and the public as a reliable guide to the subjects included in it, and as constituting one of the most scientific treatises extant on mercantile law."—Solicitors' Journal.

MORTGAGES.

STRAHAN'S Principles of the General Law of Mortgages, adapted to the Acts of 1925. By J. ANDREW STRAHAN, Barrister-at-Law, Reader of Equity, Inns of Court. Third Edition. 247 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net. 1925

"He has contrived to make the whole law not merely consistent, but simple and reasonable. . . . Mr. Strahan's book is ample for the purposes of students' examinations, and may be thoroughly recommended."—Law Journal.

"It is a subject in which there is great need for a book which in moderate compass should set forth in clear and simple language the great leading principles. This Mr. Strahan's book does in a way that could hardly be bettered."—Law Notes.

PARTNERSHIP.

STRAHAN & OLDHAM'S Law of Partnership. By J. A. STRAHAN, Reader of Equity, Inns of Court, and N. H. OLDHAM, Barristers-at-Law. Fifth Edition. 264 pages. Price 10s. net. 1927

"It might almost be described as a collection of judicial statements as to the law of partnership arranged with skill, so as to show their exact bearing on the language used in the Partnership Act of 1890, and we venture to prophesy that the book will attain a considerable amount of fame."—Student's Companion.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

WILLIAMS' Principles of the Law of Personal Property, intended for the use of Students in Conveyancing. Eighteenth Edition. Adapted to the Acts of 1925. By T. CYPRIAN WILLIAMS, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 739 pages. Price £1 10s. net. 1926

"Whatever competitors there may be in the field of real property, and they are numerous, none exist as serious rivals to Williams' Personal. For every law student it is invaluable, and to the practitioner it is often useful."—Law Times.

Personal Property—continued.

WILSHERE'S Analysis of Williams on Personal Property. Fourth Edition. 114 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1923

Excellent for final revision.

GOODEVE'S Modern Law of Personal Property. With an Appendix of Statutes and Forms. Sixth Edition. Incorporating the effect of the Law of Property Acts, 1925. By D. T. OLIVER, Barrister-at-Law. 503 pages. Price £1 2s. 6d. net. 1926

"We have no hesitation in heartily commending the work to students. They can hardly take up a better treatise on the subject of Personal Property."—Law Student's Journal.

PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

(See Conflict of Laws.)

PROCEDURE.

All You Want for the Bar Final. See page 19.

ODGERS on the Common Law. See page 7.

INDERMAUR'S Manual of the Practice of the Supreme Court of Judicature, in the King's Bench and Chancery Divisions. Tenth Edition. Intended for the use of Students and the Profession. By CHARLES THWAITES, Solicitor. 495 pages. Price £1 net. 1919

"The arrangement of the book is good, and references are given to the leading decisions. Copious references are also given to the rules, so that the work forms a convenient guide to the larger volumes on practice. It is a very successful attempt to deal clearly and concisely with an important and complicated subject."—Solicitors' Journal.

WILSHERE'S Outlines of Procedure and Evidence. With some facsimile forms. For the Use of Students. By A. M. WILSHERE, Barrister-at-Law.

Procedure—continued.

Third Edition. 183 pages. Price 11s. 6d. net. 1923

This forms a companion volume to Wilshere's Criminal Law, and the student will find sufficient information to enable him to pass any examination in the subjects dealt with by the two books.

"The author has made the book clear, interesting, and instructive, and it should be acceptable to students."—Solicitors' Journal.

GARSIA'S Civil Procedure in a Nutshell. With numerous specimens and examples of Writs, Pleadings, Summonses and Orders in use in the King's Bench Division. 70 pages. Price 3s. 6d. net. 1927

REAL PROPERTY.

WILLIAMS' Principles of the Law of Real Property. Intended as a first book for the use of Students in Conveyancing. 24th Edition. By R. A. EASTWOOD, Barrister-at-Law, Professor of Law at the University of Manchester. 832 pages. Price £1 10s. net. 1926

"Its value to the student cannot well be over-estimated."—Law Students' Journal.

"The modern law of real property is, as he remarks in his concluding summary, a system of great complexity, but under his careful supervision 'Williams on Real Property' remains one of the most useful text-books for acquiring a knowledge of it."—Solicitors' Journal.

WILSHERE'S Analysis of Williams on Real Property. Fifth Edition. 161 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1926

"Without hesitation we say that this little volume will be invaluable. The task of a student about to study real property law is almost stupendous; he has to know the old law and the new law, and we know of no book containing but 160 pages which will give him better help than this."—Law Notes.

GOODEVE'S Modern Law of Real Property. Sixth Edition. By HAROLD POTTER, LL.B., Reader in Law at Birmingham University. 665 pages. Price £1 7s. 6d. net. 1929

Real Property—continued.

DEANE & BLEASE'S Introduction to Real Property.

Third Edition, adapted to the Acts of 1925, by Professor W. LYON BLEASE, LL.M. 268 pages.
Price 12s. 6d. net. 1926

"The work can be confidently recommended to students as a worthy complement to the companion work on conveyancing."—Law Notes.

"The reader will obtain a bird's-eye view of the position of modern real property law as it now stands, while a sufficient historical summary is retained."—Law Quarterly Review.

GARSIA'S Law relating to Real Property and Conveyancing in a Nutshell. As consolidated and amended by the Property Acts. Third Edition.

127 pages. Price 5s. 6d. net. 1927

"Judiciously used, from the nutshell may emerge the tree of knowledge."—Justice of the Peace.

Cases and Statutes on Real Property Law. Selected by The Society of Public Teachers of Law. Price 35s. net, or 6d. per case.

Full List of Cases on application.

RECEIVERS.

KERR on the Law and Practice as to Receivers appointed by the High Court of Justice or Out of Court. Eighth Edition. 407 pages. Price 18s. net.

1924

"What strikes one most on reading the book is the excellent combination of clearness of expression and conciseness."—Law Journal.

ROMAN LAW.

 A Glossary of Latin words occurring in Roman Law books is printed in The Student's Law Dictionary. (See p. 15, ante.) KELKE'S Primer of Roman Law. 152 pages. Price 5s. net.

Roman Law—continued.

"In this book the author confines himself mainly to the system of Justinian's Institutes, and as a student's guide to that text-book it should be very useful. The summary is very well done, the arrangement is excellent, and there is a very useful Appendix of Latin words and phrases."—Law Journal.

CAMPBELL'S Compendium of Roman Law. Founded on the Institutes of Justinian; together with Examination Questions Set in the University and Bar Examinations (with Solutions), and Definitions of Leading Terms in the Words of the Principal Authorities. Second Edition. By GORDON CAMPBELL, of the Inner Temple, M.A., LL.D. 300 pages. Price 12s. net.

HARRIS'S Institutes of Gaius and Justinian. With copious References arranged in Parallel Columns, also Chronological and Analytical Tables, Lists of Laws, &c., &c. Primarily designed for the use of Students preparing for Examination at Oxford, Cambridge, and the Inns of Court. By F. HARRIS, B.C.L., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. Third Edition. 223 pages. Price 6s. net.

"This book contains a summary in English of the elements of Roman Law as contained in the works of Gaius and Justinian, and is so arranged that the reader can at once see what are the opinions of either of these two writers on each point. From the very exact and accurate references to titles and sections given he can at once refer to the original writers. The concise manner in which Mr. Harris has arranged his digest will render it most useful, not only to the students for whom it was originally written, but also to those persons who, though they have not the time to wade through the larger treatises of Poste, Sanders, Ortolan, and others, yet desire to obtain some knowledge of Roman Law."—Oxford and Cambridge Undergraduates' Journal.

JACKSON'S Justinian's Digest, Book 20, with an English Translation and an Essay on the Law of Mortgage in the Roman Law. By T. C. JACKSON, B.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law. 98 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net.

Roman Law—continued.

SALKOWSKI'S Institutes and History of Roman Private Law. With Catena of Texts. By Dr. CAR SALKOWSKI, Professor of Laws, Königsberg. Translated and Edited by E. E. WHITFIELD, M.A. Oxon. 1076 pages. Price £1 12s. net.

HUNTER'S Systematic and Historical Exposition of Roman Law in the Order of a Code. By W. A. HUNTER, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. Embodying the Institutes of Gaius and the Institutes of Justinian, translated into English by J. ASHTON CROSS, Barrister-at-Law. Fourth Edition. 1075 pages. Price £1 12s. net.

HUNTER'S Introduction to the Study of Roman Law and the Institutes of Justinian. New Edition. By Professor A. F. MURISON, Barrister-at-Law. 222 pages. Price 10s. net.

"Hunter's Introduction has become a student's classic."—Law Notes.

GARSIA'S Roman Law in a Nutshell. With a selection of questions set at Bar Examinations. By M. GARSIA, Barrister-at-Law. 48 pages. Price 4s. net.

With this cram book and the small Hunter or Kelke the examinations can be passed.

SALE OF GOODS.

WILLIS'S Law of Contract of Sale. Contained in a Course of Six Lectures delivered by WILLIAM WILLIS, one of His Majesty's Counsel, at the request of the Council of Legal Education. Second Edition, with the text of the Sale of Goods Act. By W. N. HIBBERT, LL.D. 176 pages. Price 10s. net. 1921

"Those who are familiar with the same author's lectures on Negotiable Securities will find here the same clear grasp of principles and the same luminous explanation of the law."—Irish Law Times.

"A careful study of these lectures will greatly facilitate the study of the Act."—Law Notes.

STATUTES.

MAXWELL on the Interpretation of Statutes. By Sir PETER BENSON MAXWELL, late Chief Justice of the Straits Settlements. Sixth Edition. By WYATT PAINE, Barrister-at-Law. 750 pages. Price £1 15s. net. 1920

"This is an admirable book, excellent in its method and arrangement, and clear and thorough in its treatment of the different questions involved."—Law Magazine.

"The whole book is very readable as well as instructive."—Solicitors' Journal.

CRAIES on Statute Law. With Appendices containing the Popular and Short Titles of certain Statutes, and the Interpretation Act, 1899. Third Edition. 497 pages. Price £1 17s. 6d. net. 1923

"Both the profession and students will find this work of great assistance as a guide in that difficult branch of our law, namely the construction of Statutes."—Law Times.

TORTS.

All You Want for the Bar Final. See page 19.

ODGERS on the Common Law. See page 7.

WILSHERE'S Analysis of Contracts and Torts. By A. M. WILSHERE and DOUGLAS ROBB, Barristers-at-Law. Second Edition. 172 pages. Price 7s. 6d. net. 1922

It is designed as an assistance to the memory of the Student who has read Odgers or Indermaur on the Common Law.

FRASER'S Compendium of the Law of Torts. Specially adapted for the use of Students. By Sir HUGH FRASER, one of His Majesty's Judges.

Eleventh Edition. By ROLAND BURROWS. 271 pages. Price 12s. 6d. net. 1924

"It is a model book for students—clear, succinct, and trustworthy, and showing a practical knowledge of their needs."—Law Journal.

RINGWOOD'S Outlines of the Law of Torts. Prescribed as a Text-book by the Incorporated Law

Torts—continued.

Society of Ireland. Fifth Edition. By C. H. ZIEGLER, Barrister-at-Law. 330 pages. Price 16s. net.

1924

"We consider that for the ordinary student who wants to take up a separate work on Torts, this is the best book he can read, for it is clear and explanatory, and has good illustrative cases, and it is all contained in a very modest compass."—Law Students' Journal.

"The work is one we well recommend to law students, and the able way in which it is written reflects much credit upon the author."—Law Times.

SALMOND'S Law of Torts. A Treatise on the English Law of Liability for Civil Injuries. Seventh Edition. By W. T. S. STALLYBRASS, Barrister-at-Law. 641 pages. Price £1 10s. net. 1928

"It would be difficult to find any book on the subject of Torts in which the principles are more clearly and accurately expressed or the case law more usefully referred to."—Solicitors' Journal.

TRUSTEES.

The Trustee's Handbook. Containing his Powers, Duties and Liabilities, the Investment of Trust Funds, and the Powers of a Tenant for Life. Reprinted from Snell's Equity, Williams' Real Property, etc. Second Edition. 92 pages. Price 3s. 6d. net. 1926

BZULIB Institute of Law

166388

